Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 140Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation)

Act (I of 1960), Sch., Art. 2—Criminal Procedure

Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 87, 88-Absconder's property sold—Suit by reversioner for possession—

Limitation.

Where the property of an absconder is sold by an order of a Magistrate under the provisions of sections 87 and 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the sale is not by the owner and, therefore, a suit by his reversioners, after his death, to recover possession of the property is governed by Article 140 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and not by the provisions of Punjab Act I of 1900. [p. 2, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritear, dated the 23rd January 1917, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Amritear, dated the 31st July 1916.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ralli, for Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Plaintiff-respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession of 108 kanals and 16 marles of land originally belonging to one Thakur Singh, who absconded in a deceity case and whose land was sold by the order of a Magistrate, on the 4th April 1902, in proceedings under sections 87 and 88, Criminal Procedure Code. The land was previously mortgaged to Hira

Singh and others, defendants Nos. 2 to 9. and to Budha Shab, defendant No. 10. At the sale it was purchased by defend. ants Nos. 2 to 9 with a reservation of the rights of the mortgagees. On the 19th January 1916, Lal Singh, brother of Thakur Singh, brought this suit, alleging that the property was ancestral and had been sold without legal necessity and that there were no legal mortgages rights against it. The defendants disputed these allegations and pleaded that the suit was barred by time. The Trial Court held that the land was appestral and the suit was not time-barred. but it found that the mortgages were valid and should be redeemed by the plaintiff before he got possession of the land. Defendants Nos, 2 to 9 appealed against the decree of the Court of first instance and eross objections were filed on behalf of the plaintiff. The learned District Judge upheld the decision of the Court below and dismissed both the appeal and cross objections with costs. The defendants have now come up in second appeal to this Court and have pressed again the question of limitation, which is now the only point for decision in the case.

We have heard Dr. Nand Lal for the appellants and Mr. Ralli on behalf of the respondents. Dr. Nand Lal's contention is that the Courts below have erred in holding that the Punjab Limitation Act, I of 1900, was applicable to this case, so far as the starting point of limitation is concerned, which under the said Act is from the date of mutation. As the mutation in this case was effected very late (in March 1914) the sait has been held to be within time. Dr. Nand Lal urges that the provision alluded to above is for suits to contest alienations made by a proprietor during his lifetime, as is clear from the Schedule to the Punjab Act I of 1900, and was meant for voluntary alienations and cannot apply to a sale by order of a Magistrate in the absence of the proprietor under certain sections of the Criminal Law. is argued that the limitation applicable to this case is that provided by Article 140 of the Indian Limitation Ast, under which the starting point is from the time when the estate falls into possession, which means from the date of Thakur Singh's death in the present ease. We think there is force in this contention. Mr. Ralli in reply argues that as the sale in dispute was caused by an act of Thakur Singh, absconding wher by his 18. that he was wanted in a Criminal offence, be must be regarded as the vendor and the same should, therefore, be held to be governed by the Punjab Act I of 1900. We think this argument cannot be accepted as correct and the sale of Thakur Singh's land in his absence under sections 87 and 88 of the Code of Oriminal Procedure cannot be considered to be a sale by him. We take it, therefore, that this case is governed by Article 140 of the Indian Limitation Act. The fact that Thakar Singh is dead is not disputed in this ease. No evidence was produced as to the date of his death in the Trial Court. It was for the plaintiff to prove the time of his death in order to show that his suit was within 12 years from the time when the estate fell into possession. He has failed to do so. The appellants produced before the lower Appellate Court a letter dated the 23rd September 19:6 from the Chief Commissisner, Port Blair, in which it is stated that Thakar Singh died on the 18th April 1901. This letter is not legal evidence but, in the absence of any allegation to the contrary on behalf of the plaintiff, it may, perhaps, be assumed that this official communication in response to the inquiries made by the appellants, states the date of Thakur Singh's death correctly. any case, on the record as it stands, the plaintiff has not been able to show that his suit was brought within 12 years of his brother's death and his suit must, therefore, fail. We accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 108, cl. 15— Profits, suit for—Co-sharer need not be full proprietor—Transferee from Hindu widow having life-estate, whether entitled to sue.

A co-sharer need not be a full proprietor to entitle him to file a suit against the Lambardar for his share of the profits. [p. 3, col. 2.]

Therefore, a person to whom a Hindu widow has conveyed her rights for her life has a power to sue for the share of the profits to which but for such transfer the widow would have been entitled.

JUDJMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for the recovery of their share of the profits of a certian village for 1324 to 1325 Fasli. The Curts below have dismissed the claim on the ground that the plaintiffs were not relly so sharers of the village within the meaning of section 103, clause (15), of the Oadh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) and that they had no right to sue in the Revenue Court.

the widow of a collateral relation of the plaintiffs, holds an 8-annas share in the village Ashrafpur. The defendants own the remaining 8 annas share. The Zemindar of the village is Adya Prasad Singh, one of the defendants. Musammat Dhramraj Kuar adopted a person named Harbans Narain Singh. Bishunath Singh, the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and grandfather of the plaintiff No. 3, questioned that adoption and filed a suit against Musammat Dhramraj Kuar and Harbans Narain Singh, which resulted in a compromise by virtue of which Musammat Dhramraj Knar gave the share now in dispute to Bishunsth Singh for her life time subject to his liability to pay the Government revenue assessed on the same to her and sertain other property was proposed to he divided between Bishunath Singh and Harbans Narain Singh after her death. In accordance with that compromies a decree was passed and Bishunath Singh was awarded prasession over the share, the profits of which are now elaimed. In the mutation proceeding which followed this decree the Revenue Court instead of recording the name of Bishunath Singh in sabstitution of Musummat Dhramraj Knar showed him as gabis in the solumn of remarks in the khewat appertaining to the disputed share. The Courts below treated that entry and the sompromise as insufficient to establish that the plaintiffe, who bave succeeded Bishunath Singh on his death, are cocharers so as to entitle them to file a suit for their share of the profits in the Revenue Court. They regarded Bishunath Singh as merely entitled to Rs. 450 per year as a sort of maintenance.

The compromise stated that Musa amat Dhramraj Kuar gave to Bishunath Singh or his heir the property specified therein, yielding an income of B. 450 per year, and that Bishunath Singh and his heirs shall remain in enjoyment thereof by making collections, attachments, filing suits for the recovery of rent and ejectment of tenants and cultivating the land them elves getting it sultivated by others, and possess every other kind of right, short of aliena. tion by mortgage, sale, charge, or otherwise, including a right of realization of the sayer income. It further stated that they were to pay Rs. 537 4 per year on accoint of the Government fixed revenue in instalments to Musammat Dharamraj Kuar and, that, if they made any default in the payment of the same, she should have the power to take the said property into her possession and to pay Rs 450 per year in each in lieu of the same. Bishunath Singh had, therefore, every right, which the lady possessed during her lifetime, short of alienation by mortgage or sale or otherwise and he must be treated for all intents and purposes as a co-sharer standing in the shoes of Musammat Dharmraj Kuar so long as no default is made in the payment of the ravenue above mentioned and the right of resumption is not exercised.

A en sharer need not be a full proprietor to entitle him to file a suit against the Lambardar for his share of the profits. In Azis-un-nier v. Mohammad Saied Khan (1) and Saliva Bibi v. Albar Sing's (2) a mortgages in possession has been treated as a co-sharer within the meaning of section 108, clares (15), of the Oath 1686). (XXII of Ast Rant Masihullah Khan Said V. Ahnad (3) even a lessee of a so sharer or a mortgagee has been similarly treated as a co-sharer entitled to sue for his share of the profits, though the lease may have expired or the mortgage may have been redeemed, if his name has continued to be recorded in the papers. A Hinda widow also holds a limited interest; but she can file a suit for her share of the profits; and so can a mortgages in possession though his right is restricted and terminable. There is no reason why a person to whom a Hindu widow has conveyed her rights for her life should not have a similar power to sue for the share of the profits to which but for such transfer she would have been entitled. The plaintare duly shown in the revenue papers as in possession of the share in question. There would have been admittedly no difficulty, had their names been entered below that of Musammat Dharmraj Kuar as holding her rights for her life, following the analogy of mortgagess whose names are entered below those of mortgagors, but the mere fact that their names are entered in the remarks column as qubic ought to make no material difference. The Lambardar shall not have to pay the crofits twice over, particularly as Musanmat Dharm-' raj Kaar does not set no any elaim to them.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court of first instance with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it in the manner required by law. The plaintiffs shall get their costs here and of

JUDGMENT,—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by a quondam minor for possession of a bouse sold in execution of a decree in 1906 under the following ciremmetances:—

Nadir Mal brought a suit for recovery of monies due on book assount against the present plaintiff as representing his deceased brother Jethu. The plaintiff, then a minor, was represented by his father's eister's son who compromised the slaim on the condition that the money was to be recovered by instalments from the estate of Jethu, whatever it might be, in the possession of the minor. The decree was drawn up against the minor but the reservation that it was to be executed only against the property of Jethu in the minor's hands was erroneously omitted. The house now in dispute was attached and ultimately sold in spite of an objection from the minor's guardian that the house had never belonged to Jethu. The bouse was sold for Rs. 245, out of which the decree of Nadir Mal, the decree of one Ramji Das and the decree of one Ranjit Singh, the last two of whom had already obtained decrees against Indar Sain as representative of his deceased brother. were satisfied. The purchaser at the auction was one Ram Kishen, who, some years later in 19:0, transferred the house by sale to Prabhu Lal, the only respondent who defends this appeal.

The first Court, holding that the minor's interests had not been properly safeguarded, decreed his claim and the relief granted was to restore the case, i.e., Nadir Mal's suit, to its original number and to direct that proeeedings should continue as from the date when the compromise was accepted by the guardian with the consent of the Court. It did not find that the house in dispute was the property of the plaintiff and had never belonged to Jethn, but it ordered that the bouse should be sestered by Prathu Lal to the plaintiff until such time as the house was proved to have been the property of Jethu Mal. The lower Appellate Court accepted Prabbu Lal's appeal and modified the relief granted to plaintiff by the first Court by maintaining the house in Prabbu Lal's possession and giving the plaintiff a decree for the aggregate of the amounts paid to Nadir Mal, Ramji Das and Ramjit Singh out of the sale proceeds of the Lones.

In this Court, on second appeal, it is admitted that the possession of a bona fine auction, purchaser is different from that of partiesto the original suit, but it is contended that, inasmuch as the compromise was to affect merely the property of Jethu in the hands of his minor brother, and whereas the decree did not restrict execution to that property, the decree is a mere nullity and was void ab initio. We see no reason to dissent from the proposition that when a minor is entirely

unrepresented before the Court which issues the decree against him that decree is a nullity so far as the minor is concerned. But when a minor is a party to the case and the desree is issued against him we see no reason to hold that that deeree, so long as it stands, is invalid, it is only voidable at the instance of the minor, and we must note that in this case although the wording of the decree was defeative the property proceeded against was regarded by both the decree. holder and the Executing Court as the property of Jethu and not as the property of the minor so that the defective wording of the deeree is not responsible for the prossed. ings of which the plaintiff now complains. But the main point for us now to deside is whether, in spite of the fact that it has not been established that the property in dispute was the property of Jethu, the auction purchaser has to suffer dispossession, and on this point we have no hesitation in following the well known principles laid down, inter alia, in Shivlat Bhagvan v. Shambhuprasad (1), and Zain ul-Abdin Bhan v Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2), that a bona file austion purchaser need look, only to the decree and order of sale of the Executing Court and is not bound to inquire further into title. So long as the decree remains valid, the proceedings taken under that decree, so far as they affect third parties in the same position as bonz file ane ion purchasers, sannot be impugned.

must fail. As to the equities, although strictly we are not concerned with them, we note that Jethu was an adult; that at the time of his death the plaintiff was still a minor; that their father left no immoveable property; that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the house was his own exclusive property, and that even if the house was not the explusive property of Jethu but he obtained it by suspession, in that ease the plaintiff would not be entitled to the whole of the sale-proceeds of the house but only to one moiety of the same. We dismiss the appeal with easts.

JUDGMENT.

RATHOND, A. J C .- Defendant, Gagan. mal, was a servant of the plaintiff's father in Sourabaya. He borrowel a sum of Rt. 257 from him and signed a bill of exchange which was duly stamped. Defendant shortly after left Sourabaya and came to Shikarpur. Plaintiff's father was dead and plaintiff, who was a minor, through his goardian, his mother, filed a suit agains; the defendant for resovery of the amount mentioned in the billof exchange. Before the suit was filed, an ed to ter ma saw sams eno to cmets evicedta bill of exphange as required by law, the ebistao betroexe caed goived tacmacob British India, The stamp was cancelled by having two parallel lines drawa across it extending on either eids of the stamp on to the paper to which it was affixed. The lower Court held that the stamp was not properly emeelled within the meaning of section 14 of the Stamp As, and the bill of exchange was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence, and as the suit was based on it, dismissed it.

it is argued in appeal that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the stamp was not properly eancelled, and this is substantially the only point raised in this appeal.

Section 12 of Act II of 1899, sub section (1) requires a person affixing an adhesive stamp to any instrument to cancel the same so that it cannot be need again, and sub section (3) of the same section describes some of the methods in which an adhesive stamp may be cancelled and concludes with the words "or in any other effectual manner." The question, therefore, whether a particular stamp has or has not been effectually cancelled so that it carnot be used again is a question that depends on the facts of each ese. In the present case there cannot be the slightest doubt that the plaintiff or his guardian did intend to cancel the stamp on the dosument in suit. As I have remarked, two parellel lines were drawn across the stampextending beyond its edges. And it eannot be alleged for a moment, nor has it been, that this was not done with the intention of cancelling the stamp.

Now, sub section (3) of section 12 does not profess to exhaustively prescribe the various methods by which a stamp may be cancelled. And drawing lines across a stamp may be as effectual a mode of cancelling it as by writing one's signature across it. In my opinion section 12 does not make it obligatory that a stamp should be so cancelled as to make its use again a physical impossibility. An ingenious secondrel may devise various means of re-using a stamp of the effective cancellation of which there could be no reasonable doubt. I think the eriterion for determining whether a stamp has been effectually cancelled within the meaning of section 12 is, whether the ordinary conscientious man would, on seeing the stamp, some to the conclusion that it has already been brought in use. In the present case I feel no reasonable doubt that a person observing the lines across the stamp, would feel convinced that the stamp was used. possible that the two lines on the stamp could be obliterated and the stamp brought into requisition again, but I hold, despite this eircumstance, that the stamp was effectually cancelled within the meaning of section 12.

The lower Court in holding that the stamp was not cancelled has followed the ruling in Virabhadrapa v. Bhine (1). It was held in this case that the more drawing of two parellel lines without more over a reseipt stamp affixed to an instrument does not have the effect of cancelling it 'so that it cannot be used within the meaning of the Stamp Act." With due deference to the learned Judges who decided this case, I must corfess I am unable to follow the reasoning of the desision. In the judgment it is stated that, "as the law is that a need stamp cannot be need again the object of the Legislature in making cancellation obligatory is that the used stamp should bear on it some effective mark to show that it has been used, Two parellel lines drawn over a stamp are not sufficient to earry out that object because mere lines would not be effective for the purpose in view." But why may not lines be as effective as any other mode of carcellation? They are sufficiently indicative of the user of the stamp and any honest man on seeing the stamp would understand that it has been used, and should not be used again. This decision purported to follow an earlier Varamalli decision Ralli in ٧. (2). But the latter case was different. There the stamp on the dosument was cancelled "by a small portion of the first letter of the defendant's signature consisting of a slightly curved line," and it was held that this was not a sufficient cancellation. This is, however, widely different to two lines being drawn across the whole width of the stamp. It is very probable that in the care of a elightly curved line appearing at one end of the stamp it may lead one to imagine that it was there by assident, but the two lines across the stamp would indicate a deliberate act.

I think that section 12 has been correctly interpreted in Mahadeo Kori v. Sheoraj Ram Teli (3). In this case at the top of a document was affixed a one anna stamp on which there was one horizontal line drawn across it. It was held that a stamp may be effectually cancelled by merely drawing a line across it. And section 12 of the Act does not mean that it is necessary to cancel a stamp in such a manner as to make it physically impossible for any dishonest person to make hereafter a fraudulent use of the stamp. It was further said in this care by Piggott, J., that it is impossible to treat the words of section 12 of the Indian Stamp. Act as requiring such a degree of eancellation as would make it physically impossible for any dishonest person to make hereafter a fraudulent use of the stamp label. And Walsh, J., said that a line drawn through a stamp with the object of cancelling it is as effectual a cancollation as writing part of a signature or of a date upon it. The Allahabad judgment followed one reported in 15 Oadh Cases Mohammad Amir Mirsa Beg v. Babu Kadar Noth (4)), where a stamp has been cancelled by having three lines drawn acress it in different directions each of the said lines extending more or less beyond the edges of the stamp on to the paper on which the document was written, (in the present ease the lines unmistakeably extend beyond the edges of the stamp) it was held that the stamp was effectually cancelled within the meaning of section 12. The sorrestness of the ruling in Virabhadrapa v. Bhimani () was doubted in the case of Piran Ditta v. Mongal Singh (5). In McMullen v. Sir Alfred Hickman teamship Co., Ltd. (6) where some adhesive stamps were cancelled either by lines or a cross, with neither the eignature or the date, it was held that they were properly and effectually caseelled so as to prevent their being used again.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the lower Court was in error in holding that the stamp was not esneelled within the meaning of section 12 of the Stamp Act and, therefore, in refusing to admit the bill of exchange in evidence. I would reverse the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit and direct it to admit the document in evidence and try

It is admitted that Seth Jagannath v. noted therein and to pay for the goods at the current rate of exchange for demand Bank Bills on London on delivery of the shipping documents. The goods arrived but the defendants refused to take delivery or to pay for the goods. In the plaint the plaintiffs referred to the invoices received from England for the goods which the plaintiffs had ordered to fulfil their sontracts with the defendants. It appears that the defendants were willing to take delivery goods provided the plaintiffs the were willing to fix the rate of exchange at 2s. On the 9th of February 1941 the defendants wrote: -

"Received your letter and in reply I beg to write that if you agree to give me the rate of exchange at 2s. for said five cases according to the resolution passed by our Native Piece Goods Merchants Association, I will be prepared to take up there eases."

The defendants before filing their written statement have taken out this summons asking for an order that the plaintiffs should give inspection to the defendants of the invoices referred to in paragraphs 10 to 15 of the plaint.

Now, undoubtedly, the defendants are entitled, under Order XI, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, to give notice to the plaintiffs to produce there invoices for their inspection and if inspection is refused, they are further entitled to get the opinion of the Judge whether such a demand for inspection is justifiable. That is provided for by rule 18, under which "the Court may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection ... Provided that the order shall not be made when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not becessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving coste."

It appears now that the defendants claim that, under their contracts with the plaintiffe, they are not obliged to pay for the goods at the contract price but at some other price at which the plaintiffs may have secured the goods in England; and it is for that purpose that they are now seeking inspection of these invoices, which would show the prices at which the plaintiffs secured the goods. On the facts alleged in the plaint and on the written contracts signed by the defendants, it is perfeetly obvious that the contention raised now by the defendants is untenable, as the defendants under their contract had nothing to do with the prices which the plaintiffs paid in England. Accordingly, the defendants have not made out a case for an order directing the plaintiffs to give inspection.

The law is laid down under the correeponding Supreme Court Rule in Quilter v. Heatly (1), where Bowen, L. J. said:

"Order XXX', rule 14 provides for immediate production of any documents which a party has referred to in his pleadings or affidavits. The party against whom the application is made must produce them unless he can show good cause why he should not. If he refuses, the party applying can go to the Judge who may refuse the application if he sees good reason for so doing......In my opinion the onus is on the refusing party."

So that the plaintiffs here have to give sufficient reason why they should not be ordered to give inspection of these invoices. Now it is slear that these invoices are merely referred to in the plaint as part of the narrative showing how the plaintiffs reseived advice of the goods they had purchased in England so that they could make out their own invoices to send to the defend. The plaintiffs were not obliged to mention the invoices they recieved from England since the invoices were not necessary either for proving the plaintiffs' case or for assisting the defendants in their The present application is obdefence. viously made for the purpose of delaying the plaintiffe' enit.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Respondents,

JUDGMENT.—In the plaintiff's suit for damages against the Jharia Coal Company, defendant, the Court below has granted the plaintiff's prayer for a temporary injunetion restraining the defendant Company from alienating their colliery. It has also refused to make an order for attachment of the said colliery. From the order granting a temporary injunction the defendant has appeared to this Court, and from the order refusing to attach the colliery the plaintiff has appealed.

Defendant objects to the temporary injunction on the following grounds. He urges that the injunction is contrary to Order XXXIX, rule 1 (a) as the colliery in question is not the property in dispute in the sait. It is quite clear that clause (a) does not apply. He says that clause (b) does not apply because the plaintiff cannot be said to be a creditor of the defendant. There was no such contention, however, in the defendant's written pleas as will appear from a perusal thereof. Plaintiff claims to be a creditor of the defendant and Mr. Moti Sagar, who appears for the defendant, says that if such a plea had been raised, proof would have been adduced to the effect that there were other creditors of the defendant whom he intended to defrand by alienating this property. After the service of the injunction upon the defendant Company, it actually transferred the colliery by a registered deed was good ground for asking the Court to issue an injunction. Further, I am of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to ask the Court to attach the property as the defendant had disobeyed the temporary injunction. In the case reported as Ottapurakkal Thatath Suppi v. Alabi Mashur Koyanna (1) it was held that an order refusing to attach property for disobeying an injunction is an order passed under Order XXXIX, rule 2 (3) and is appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the defendant's appeal should be dismissed, and I order assordingly. The plaintiff's appeal is assepted, and I direct the lower Court to pass an order of attachment as prayed for. Costs of the plaintiff in this Court in both appeals will be paid by the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

0. J - The defendant's appeal from the decree in this suit has already been dismissed. This is an appeal by the plaintiff, the next reversioner, from the decree of the Temporary subordinate Judge in so far as it refused to make the widow accountable for wasting the moveable property of the husband which came to her hands and to make her brother, the second defend. ant, and the third defendant, his undivided brother, accountable for so much of the corpus of the estate of the husband of the first defendant, the last male owner, as has some to their hands. In the case of immoveable property the Hindu reversioner has 12 years to sue from the date of the widow's death under Article 141 of the Limitation Ast and it is, therefore, unnecessary to elaim such reliefs as are sought in the present suit, but, as regards moveables, his right to sue is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Ast and the question when his right to sue accines under that Article is in much the same position as it was with regard to immeveable property urder the earlier Limitation Act of 1859, under which it was held by Sir Barnes Peacock and the Fall Bench of the Calentta High Court in Nobin Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chunder Ohuc erbutty (1) that possession adverse to the widow was also adverse to the In that case the question reversioner. of the reversioner's remedies during the widow's lifetime with regard to the moveable corpus of the estate which she was wasting was considered, and Sir Barnes Peacock observed: "Reversionary heirs presumptive have a right, although they may never succeed to the estate, to prevent the widow from committing waste, and I have no doubt that, if a proper case were made out, reversionary beirs would have a sufficient interest, as well as creditors of the ancestor. by suit against the widow and the adverse holder, to have the estate reduced into possession, so as to prevent their rights from becoming barred by limitation," and he goes on to say that edverse po-session of Government paper or the like would give a cause of action to the beirs; sc, too, Jackson, J, observed that a reversioner aggrieved by the fraudnlent action of the widow would be entitled to bring his action. On the authority of this esse it was beld in Kudha Mohun Dhur v. Ram Dass Dey (2), before the ensetment of the present Article 141, that the next reversioners were entitled to have immoveable pro perty of the estate abandoned by the widow reduced into possession and to put a manager in charge of them. This case is authority for the proposition that, as regards the moveable corpus of the estate also, it is open to the reversioners to file a suit praying that such moveable corpus mey be so reduced into possession and handed over to a Receiver appointed in the suit subject to any question of limitation. Transferees from the widow without consideration may be made to re place any part of the moveable corpus of the estate of the last male owner which can be traced to their hands on the equitable prirciple recently applied in sinclair v. Brougham (3), which imposes upon reople into whose hands the property of other persons has come without consideration the duty of assounting for it and restoring it.

Then, as to the widow's own accountability for wasting the moveable corpus of the estate, the authorities are mesgre because the remedy against her would rarely be effective, but on principle I see no sufficient mason for refusing to hold her accountable for waste in the sense of making her re-place the moveable corpus which she has made away with if she is in a position to do so, allowing her, of course, to enjoy the insome of the fund re-placed. She is not a trustee of her deceased husband's estate, or a tenant intail or for life, or the manager of a joint family, but the owner of a widow's estate with all the peculiar insidents of such ownership. As the owner of such a widow's estate she is under a clear duty to ab-tain from wasting the moveable corpus of the estate just as a tenant in tail or for life is bound to abstain from sommitting waste, and if she commits a breach of that duty I san see no reason why she should be allowed to go free and not to be held assount-The Subordina's Judge has referred to the case of the manager of a joint Hindu family who is only held accountable for the property of the joint family as it exists at the da'e of partition, but this now wellestablished rule is based on practice on the ground that it is always open to the other meu bers to put an end to the management by partition, which can even be enforced in a proper case on behalf of the minor members of the family. Confirming the reliefs already granted to the plaintiff, we must allow the appeal and eet aside so much of the deeree as dismisses the plaintiff's claim for an account against the widow and the second and third defendants in the light of the above observation. Costs to abide.

Where user is proved, the presumption is that it is of right till the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is not in India a presumption de juris et de jure. It is competent to a person to acquire a right of way for a scavenger to gain access to his house by passing through his neighbour's house by user for over the statutory period. Such user need not have been exercised as of right. [p. 15, col 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 344 of 1920, (Appeal Suit No. 172 of 1920 on the file of the District Court, Trichinopoly), preferred against that of the Court of the District Moneif, Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 171 of 1918.

FAOTS appear from the judgment.

Messre, K. Rajah Aiyar and R. Ganarathi Aiyar, for the Appellants.-Defendants are the appellants. The suit is brought by the plaintiff for a permanent injungrestraining the defendants from obstructing the scavenger from passing through the defendant's house and elearing the plaintifi's privy. It has been decreed in both the lower Courts. My contention before your Lordships is that the plaintiff has not acquired the easement under section 15 of the Easements Act under which easements are acquired. The right claimed must have been exercised as 'of right' and to the knowledge of the defendant. Further, there is no right of way through a dwelling house. Such an carement is unknown to law. Now about section 15 all that the lower Court has found is that the privy was eleaned by the seavenger entering through the defend. ant's doorway from 20 to 40 years. But it has not been found that that was done as of right. No presumption in such cases could be made that it is exercised 'as of right.' The presumption in favour of the exercise being as of right does not apply to India. [Shaikh Khoda Bukeh v. Shaikh Tojuddin (1). Meier Mullick v. Hafizuddi Mullick (2), Saminatha Mudaly v. Velu Mudaly (3) Phillips v Halliday (4).] So in this country, user must

Mr. 8. Krishnamurthi Aiyır, for the Respondent.—It must be presumed from long user that the user had a lawful origin. Section 15 does not exclude other modes of acquiring easements. Rairup Korr v. Abul Hossein (5). See also Thillips v. Hallilay (4), Goodman v. Saltash Corporation (6), Mercer v. Denne (7), Gale on Easements, page 222, Saminatia Mudaly v. Velu Mudaly (3). These cases sufficiently establish that where there is an exercise of a right, if it could be suggested that it had a lawful origin, it must be presumed in favour of the right. If that is presumed then plaintiff has got a right to get an injunction and the lower Court is right.

Mr. K. Rajah Anyar in reply.—Right of way through another man's house is an easement unknown to law. Moreover, my client will be put to a lot of inconvenience by having to keep the doors open.

JUDGMENT,-This appeal arises out of a sait by the plaintiff for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing the seavenger from passing through the defendants' house and eleaning the plaintiff's privy. The case for the plaintiff is that the seavengers have been cleaning his privy for over 60 years by going through the defendants' doorway marked in the plan, erossing the defendants' privy and then passing by a doorway in the wall to the plaintiff's privy which is adjacent and cleaning it. The first defend. ant's care was that the right was never exercised. The District Munsif found that the plaintiff's privy was elegned over a0 to 40 years by the seavenger passing through the defendants' house as alleged in the plaint and that it was not obstructed before October 917. The suit was filed on the 19th of March 19:8. On appeal the Sutordinate Judge consurred with the findings of the District Mansif and dismissed the appeal.

KUNJAMMAL C. BATHNAM PILLAI.

It is contended in second appeal that section 15 of the Easements Act cannot apply to easements like the present one, that there was no allegation that the right claimed was exercised as a matter of right and to the knowledge of the defendant, and that there can be no right in law to a right of way through a dwelling house.

Section 15 of the Easements Act deals with the requisites necessary to acquire a right under the Act, but as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rayrup Koer v. Abul Hossein (5) other titles and modes of acquiring easements are not excluded or interfered with.

It is argued that in the present case all that both the lower Courts have found is that the privy was cleaned by the scavenger entering through defendants' doorway from between 30 to 40 years, but that it has not been shown that this was done as a matter of right and that there is no presumption in such cases that the exercise was of right.

The plaintiff in paragraph 4 of the plaint states "that seavengers have had access to the privy in his house through the doorway of the defendants for the past 60 years" and in paragraph 5 it is alleged "that owing to misunderstandings between the parties the defendants with a view to prevent the seavenger from eleaning the privy have looked up the door D on their side and are obstructing and appropring the plaintiff in various ways contrary to his right, and that the defendants have no right whatever to prevent the reavengers." Paragraph 6 states that the wrongful acts of the delendants have a great deal of trouble and besused loss to the plaintiff and are also likely to give rice to various Civil and Criminal proceedings and that defendants should be restrained by an injunction. So far, therefore, as the plaint is conserned, not only is it not alleged that the user was permissive but the allegations show that plaintiff claims it as of right,

The defendants deny that the scavengers passed through their house in order to clean the plaintiff's privy and state that even if the user were true it could not have been as of right.

Four witnesses were examined for the defendants but their evidence is to the effect that the right claimed was never exercised.

There is no suggestion of any license given by the defendants or their predecessors in title to the scavenger cleaning plaintiff's privy by entering through their house.

In the case of long enjoyment of the right slaimed, a legal origin should, observed by Lord Herschell in Phillips v. Halliday (4), be presumed when there has been a long continued assertion of a right if such a legal origin were possible, and the Court will presume that those acts were done and those eircumstances existed which were necessary to the creation of a valid title. The presumption of a lost grant in each cases has been recognised in the leading ease of Goodman v. Saltash Corporation (6), Circumstances, however, should exist which would render the drawing of the presumption reasonable in law and probable in fast, but, as pointed out by Farwell, J., in Mercer v. Denne (7) not only would Courts be slow to draw an inference of fact which would defeat a legal right which has been exercised for a very long period unless such inference is irresistible but will presume everything that is reasonably possible to presume in favour of such a right.

Where user is proved, the presumption is that it is of right till the contrary is proved. Gale in his valuable treatise on Easements observes: "The effect of the user would be destroyed if it were shown that it took place by the express permission of the owner of the servient tenement for in such a case the user would not have been had with the intention of asquiring or exercising a right. The presumption, however, is that a party enjoying an easement asted under a claim of right until the contrary is shown." (Page 222, ath Edition). In Campbell v. Witson (8) it was held that where there was no evidence to show that the way over another's land been used by permission such user over 20 years exercised adversely and under a elsim of right was sufficient to enable the Jury to raise the presumption of a grant. In Saminatha Mudaly v. Felu Mudaly (3) Wallis, C. J., observed: 'On the other hand, the user of the plaintiffs may be presumed to be as of right and to have a lawful origin, and if a lawful origin of the plaintiff's right can he suggested such an (8) (1803) 8 East 204 7 R. B. 46 ; 102 E. R. 610. KUNJAMMAL U. RATHNAM PILLAI.

origin can be presumed." It has been argued for the appellant that the presumption in favour of the exercise being as of right rather than license does not apply to India and reference has been made to the cases referred to below.

In Shaikh Khola Buksh v. Shaikh Tanul. din (1), Bannerjee, J, was of opinion that it would not be safe to follow the rule of English Law without qualification. was of opinion that, as section 25 of the Limitation Act requires the user to be as of right, the onus will be on the plaintiff to prove it, and that h ving regard to the habits of the people of the country it would not be right to draw the same inference from mere user as would and proper legitimate in a case arising in England. The learned Judge approval with quotes the following passage in Mitra on Limitation: "The nature and character of the servient land, the friendship or relationship between servient and the dominant owners and the circumstances under which the user taken place may induce the Court to hold that the user was not 'as of right' although there is no direct proof that the enjoyment was had with the permissoin of the servient owner." In Meser Mullick v. Hafisuddi Muilic. (2) Pigot and Rampini. JJ., were of opinion that in questions regarding a right of way the Court should consider the character of the ground, the space for which the right is claimed, the relations between the parties and the eircumstances under which the user took place.

In Saminatha Mudaly v. Velu Mudaly (3) Phillips, J., while referring with approval to the distum of Lord Herschell on thillips v. Halliday (4) and to the rule laid down by Gale, was disposed to draw a difference between a right of way and a right to water. Referring to the observations of Banerjee, J., in Shaikh Bhoda Buksh v. Shaith Tauddin (.) the learned Judge ob erves: "No doubt, as was remarked by Banerjee. J., in Shaikh Khoda Buksh v. Shaikh Taundin (1), that in this country it would not be right to draw the same inference from user as in England, but his remarks had reference to a right of way, in respect of which I agree that the observation has considerable force; but rights to water stand on a different footing, for in this country they are very highly valued and a license for the use of water gratis is by no means common."

We do not think it can be easid that rights of way into and through a private dwelling house in this country are not as highly valued as rights to water.

In Muthu Goundan v. Anantha Goundan (9). which related to a right of way, it was found that the plaintiff and his predece sors-intile were u ing the path for over 20 years that though there were objections more than 2 years before suitastual user did not sease till a fence was put no a few days prior to suit. It was held by Salasiva Aigar and Bakewell, JJ., that the plaintiff was entitled to sassed both under the Eisaments Ast and under the General waw, Sidasiva Iger, J., held that when open enjoyment has taken place for a long term of years title by preseriation was asguired independently of the Stature and a sait to establish that right can be brought within 12 years after the obstraction."

We do not think that the cases eited by the appellant's Vakil establish that no presumption should be raised by user and that in this country enjoyment of a right of way should be presumed to be by lisense till the contrary is proved. All that they decide is that there are conditions and circumstances to be taken note of in this country before the Court can come to the conclusion that the exercise of a right of way can be held to have been as of right. What the eircomstances are which militate against the user being exercised as of right must, like any other fact, be pleaded and it is for the Court to consider whether, having regard to the existence of all or some conditions and considerations referred to by Bannerjee, J., a reasonable presumption can be drawn as to the exercise being of right. The presump. tion of right from long user is not in this country a presumption de uris et de ure. It only starts a party with a presumption in his favour which can be rebutted by proof of fasts which are inconsistent with, or which militare agains, the inference # 11sh, in the absence of evidence by the defendant, would entitle plaintiff to a decree.

LUCHIRAM MOTILAL U. BADHA CHARAN PODDAR.

It has been argued that there can be no right of way through another person's bouse. No authority had been eited in support of this proposition. Having regard to the fact that in towns houses without compounds or backyards are contiguous to each other and that very often access through another house may be the only way which seavengers ean gain ascere, it is difficult to see why no right of way can be acquired. The right to a kitchen of neighbouring house 8 bas been reongt ised for washing 10 England (Gale on Easements, page 28). is, no doubt, true that the use should not go beyond what is reasonably required for the enjoyment of the dominant tenement, but this does not mean that the right itself cannot be acquired where its user may be irksome. All that Mr. Bajah Iyer was able to urge was the trouble his elients will be put to in having to keep the door of his house open.

We are of opinion that the decrees of the lower Court are right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MCOKERJEE, J .- The appeal arises out of a suit commenced by the appellants for deelaration that two mortgages for Rs. 5,000 each taken by the first two defendants, Radba Charan Poddar and Radbaballay Poddar, one from Lalbihari Saha (now deseased) on the 30th January 1914, and the other from Sukh Lal Sabs, Matial Saba and Nrityalal Saha on the 7th February 1914, had been made gratuitously with intent to defeat their ereditors and were consequent. ly voidable under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiffe are creditors of the Sabas and instituted this suit on the 5th March 1918 on behalf of themselves and the other ereditors whose names were set out in a schedule appended to the plaint, The mortgagore as also the mortgagess were made defendants; and as the Sanas had been adjudicated insolvents on the 23rd

LUCHIBAM MCTILAL C. BADHA CHABAN PODDAR.

July 1914 by this Court in the exercise of its Incolvency Jurisdiction, the Official Assignee also was joined as a defendant. The suit was thus constituted as a representative suit of the type contemplated in the case of Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (1), which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal The case for the plaintiffs is that after (2). Sahas had been adjudicated insolthe vents, they proved their claim before the Official Assignee in due course. On the 4th April 1916 three of the insolvents, Krishnalal Saba. Matilal Saha and Narityalal Saba were publicly examined before Registrar in Insolveney, in the course of such publie examination it was elicited that they had executed the mortgages now in suit in favour of their relations. The plaint ffs intended to apply for an order under section 55 of the Presidensy Towns Insolvency Act for avoidance cf the mortgages as against the Official Assignee. But before the termination of the proceedings, they discovered insolveney that the mortgagees had obtained decrees on the mortgages on the 15th March 1917, against the mortgagors and the Official Assignce. They have consequently been constrained to institute the present suit, as otherwise complications might result if the deerses should be executed and the hypothecated properties should on sale pass into the bands of strangers. The claim was resisted by the mcrtgagors and mortgagees defendante, in other words, by the Sabas and the Pocdars. The Official Assignee supported the plaintiffs and stated that he was not aware of the fraudulent character of the mortgages at the time when the mortgage decrees were made and he could not accordingly take steps to defend these suits. On these pleadings, the substantial question in controversy was formulated in the eighth issue in the following terms:

by the insolvents without consideration and were they executed mala fide and fraudulently as shields against their creditors

(1) 34 C. 569; 11 C. W. N. 889; 6 C. L. J. 410. (2) 32 Ind. Cas. 348; 80 M. L. J. 116; 3 L. W. 207; 20 C. W. N. 338; 14 A. L. J. 188; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 198; 19 M. L. T. 203; 28 C. L. J. 406; 18 Bom. L. R. 878; 43 C. 521; 43 L. A. 104 (P. C.). as stated in the eixth and eighth paragraphs of the plaint?"

The Subordinate Judge held on the evidence that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the burden which lay upon them to prove that the mortgages were fraudulent; he further found that the defendants had established that the mortgages were for consideration. On the present appeal, the arguments have centred round the question whether the mortgages were gratuitous or for consideration.

for consideration. At an early stage of the arguments, it transpired that certified copies of the record of the public examinations of Matilal Saha. Nrityalal Saha and Krishnalal Saha were received in evidence by the Subordinate Judge. None of these persons had, however, been examined as witnesses in the lower and consequently their previous statements could not be taken to have been utilised to contradist them. The question thus arose, whether the statements in the insolvency proceedings could have been reseived in evidence under either section 32 or section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 32 was of no avail, because, even if it were assumed that the requirements of the introductory clause were satisfied, the ease could not be deemed sovered by any of the eight clauses. The elause which looked most helpful was the third, but this, it was conceded, was useless, as the statements were not against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the persons making them. Section 33 was equally of no assistance, because, even if it were assumed that the requirements of the introductory elanse were fulfilled, none of the three conditions mentioned in the provice could be teld to have been realised. The insolveney proceeding could not be treated as a proseeding between the same parties as the parties to the present suit. Nor could it be said that the adverse party in the first proceed. ing bad the right and opportunity to eross. examine or that the questions in issue were substantially the same in the first as in the second proceeding. The scope of the public examination of the insolvert, as indicated in section 27 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, is to examine him as to his conduct, dealings and property. At that stage, the ereditors who may have been notified are arrayed together: no question arises whether there is a conflict between sesured and unsecured creditors, or whether the alleged claim of one or other of them is or is not fraudulent. They cannot at the time be treated as adverse parties, nor ean the question in issue in this suit be deemed, by any stretch of language, to be substantially the same as the question then in issue. There is the additional difficulty that the statement of one of the insolvents sould not by any device be used as against another or the others. The admissions of an insolvent, if made after the act of insolvency, may be admissible against bim. self, but they cannot furnish evidence against another insolvent or as against the Official Assignee. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Board of Trade, Ex parte, Brunner, In re (3), where it was ruled that the answers of a bankrupt on his public examination are not admissible in evidence even in proceedings in the came bankruptey by the trustee against parties other than the bankrupt. There was thus no escape from the position that the statements made by Krishnalal Saha, Matilal Saha and Nrityalal Saha, in the course of their public examination under section 27 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Ast, were not admissible in evidence in this suit. When we indicated our view this point, Mr. Mukerjee on behalf of the plaintiffs requested that steps might be taken to examine these three persons in this Court. We desided to assede to this request, although we were not unmindful of the observations made by the Judicial Committee as to the reception of additional evidence in appeal, in the came of Kessow, i Issur v. G. I. P. Ry., Co. (4). We were, however, largely influenced in our decision by the circumstance that some endeavour had been made to examine the insolvents in the Court below, but the attempt proved infructuous as the witnesses sould not be found and the warrants could not, consequently, be executed. No doubt, all the steps which might possibly have been taken to enforce attendance were not exhausted, but this might have been due to the fast that the previous statements were allowed to be reseived in evidence without objection. The erroneous omission to object to the reception of the evidence did not, as pointed out by the Judisial Committee in Miller v. Madho Das (5), make it legally admissible in evidence; but as such omission might possibly have induced the plaintiff not to take resourse to the extreme measures provided for the enforcement of attendance of witnesses, we thought it right to summon them for examination in this Court. Two of them, Matilal Saha and Nirtyalal Saha, did attend in obedience to the sub poena issued by this Court; Krishnalal Saha did not attend and it was stated that his absence was due to illness. But when the witnesses appeared in Court, Mr. Makerjee deslined to examine them in chief, on the ground that as his clients were plaintiffs and the witnesses were mortgagors defendants, they were bound to be hostile. He accordingly asked that they might be treated as witnesses called by the Court and that he might premitted to cross examine them. In support of this position, he placed reliance upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Radha Jeebun Moostuffy v. Taramonee Dossee (6). That desision is of no assistance to the appellant. There the witnesses summoned for the plaintiff (except one) did not appear. The plaintiff thereupon filed a petition praying that the case might be decided by his summoning the defendent in person and taking his deposition. The defendant was accordingly summoned and was asked by the Court whether the money slaimed by the plaintiff was justly due from him or not. The defendant anthat he was not liable for the awered The plaintiff then olaim. submitted that he had not intended to abide by the answer of the defendant and asked leave to eress examine him. The Trial Judge refused to put any further question to the defendant or to allow any to be put on behalf of the plaintiff and dismissed the sait. of the course adopted by the Trial Judge, and, when the case went up to the Judicial Committee, their Lordships fully consurred in the propriety of that course. This is elearly no authority for the proposition that if the plaintiff calls the defendant as a witness, he is entitled to cross-examine him as a matter of right; in the case before the Committee the defendant was Judioial treated as a witness called by the Court. the contention of the appellants were to prevail, it would involve in substance an approval of the procedure condemned in emphatic terms by the Judicial Committee in two recent cases. In Kishori Lat v. Chunni Lal (7), Lord Atkinson observed as follows :-

"It would appear from the judgment of the High Court that in India it is one of the artifices of a weak and somewhat paltry kind of advocacy for each litigant to cause his opponent to be summoned as a witness, with the design that each party shall be forced to produce the opponent so summoned as witness, and thus give the Counsel for each litigant the opportunity of crossexamining his own elient. It is a practice which, their Lordships cannot help thinking, all judicial Tribunals ought to set themselves to render as abortive as it is objectionable. It ought never to be permitted in the result to embarrass judicial investigation as it has done in this instance."

Reference may also be made, in this connection, to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lal Kunwar v. Chiranges Lul (3); see also Venkata Samba Sadasiva Devara v. Papayya Devara (9); Rangaswamy Iyengar, In re (10). The matter must plainly be decided under section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act which gives the Court a discretion to permit the person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-exmination by the adverse party. The rule recognised in

Olarke v. Soffery (11) and Bastin v. Carew (12), namely, that when the witness stands in a situation which naturally makes him adverse to the party who desires his testimoney, as, for example, when a defendant is called as the plaintiff's witness, the party calling the witness is entitled to cross examine him, cannot be held applicable in this country in view of the provisions of section 154 of the Indian Evidence Act. Indeed, even in England, it has been ruled in later cases that the situation in which a witness stands towards either party does not give the party calling the witness a right to crossexamine him, unless the witness' evidense be of such a nature as to make it appear that the witness is unwilling to tell the truth; Parkin v. Moon (13), Reg. v. Ball (14), and it now appears to be settled law in England that a party when called by his opponent cannot as of right be treated as hostile, the matter being solely in the discretion of the Corri; Price v. Manning (15). We must further remember that a witness who is unfavourable is not necessarily hostile, for a hostile witness has been defined as one who, from the manner in which he gives his evidence, shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court : Coles v. Coles (16); Greenhough v. Eccles (17), Surendra Krishna Mondal v. Rance Dassi (18). The position, consequently, is that, although Matilal Saha and Nrityalal Saha were present in this Court, the plaintiffs did not examine them. We are thus left with the evidence adduced in the Court below, after the depositions of the insolvents before the Registrar in Insolvency have been exeluded therefrom. Upon that evidence, there is no room for serious argument that the decision of the Subordinate Judge must be upheld. He has referred in detail to the oral evidence to show that the mortgages were for consideration and that oral testimony is largely supported by the secount-books. As regards the mortgage of the 3 th January 1914, he has found that Lalbibari Saha had borrowed Rs. 4,000 from the first two defendants on the oceasion of the marriage of his son in 1913, and executed a promissory note for the amount. The mortgage was granted to seeare the sum due on the note and a subsequent advance of Rs. 440. As regards the mortgage of the 7th February 1914 the Subordinate Judge has found that it was granted to seemre a prior loan of Rs. 3,000 taken in 1908. The oral evidence and the extrasts from the account books have been placed before us and carefully commented up in. We see no reason to doubt the correct. ness of the conclusion of the Subardinate Judge that both the mortgages were for consideration and he, in our opinion, properly declined to decide in favour of the plaintiff on mere grounds of suspicion, for, as Sir Lawrence Jenkins said in Mina humarı v. Bi oy Singh (19, the Court's desision must rest not upon suspicion but ucon legal grounds established by legal testimony.

The result is, that the decree of the Sabardinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dis

Hindu Law-Joint family-Ailenation by father-Declaration in facour of son-Consideration, return of. Where a Hindu son obtains a decree that a sale of family property by his father shall not affect his rights as a co-parcener the veadee is not entitled to have a condition attached to the decree that the plaintiff should refund the sale-price paid by the vendee in respect of the portion of the property affected by the decree. [p. 20, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 2nd April 1918, affirming that of the Junior Sabordinate Judge, Second Olass, Ambala, dated 28th

August 1917.

Mr. Manchar Lal, for the Appellants. Dr. G. O. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This and the two connested appeals arise out of actions brought by the son of a Hindu for a declaration that three sales of joint family property effected by his father shall not affect his (plain iff's) rights as a co-parcener.

Once finding of fast arrived at by the Chart below is, that the sales were not effected for an immoral purpose, but that they were without necessity and were not for the benefit of the family and the plaintiff's prayer has been granted.

In second appeal the only point urged is, that though the sales must be set aside they should be set aside only on equitable terms, and the only matter debated before us has been whether to the plaintiff's decree should be attached a condition that he must refund to the vendees the amounts paid by them for the properties sold.

As a preliminary point it was arged that the prayer should not have been confined to a declaration, but should have been for possession inasmuch as the plaintiff could have been given at least joint possession with the vendees, the transferees of his father.

This objection, involving as it does the right of a son to separate possession from his father during his father's life-time, need not detain us, for it is raised for the first time in this Court and does not affect the merits of the case.

On the main dispute, the argument for the defendants accellants is, that the success of the plaintiff's suit will force them to sue plaintiff's father on the ground of failure of consideration, and that the shares of both father and son in the co parcenary property will be liable to satisfy their decrees. It is retorted that at the present BADAM U. MADRO BAM.

In Keer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (1) it was held that sons could not recover properly alienated by their father without refunding the whole of the sale price, inasmuch as if the sale were set aside, the vendee would be entitled to recover from the alienor the purchase money which would become a debt due by the father and so recoverable from the whole of the joint property. Himmot Bahadur v. Bhawani Kunwar (2) was referred to by appellant but the ratio decidendi in that case was that the sale price was brought into the common purse of the whole family.

v. Bhup Singh (3) has been cited but that judgment throws no light on the problem concerning us.

Bohadur Singh v. Desraj (4) deals with a mortgage and does not help us.

Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (5) was a suit to enforce a mortgage against joint family property.

In Ram Dayal v. Ajudhia Prased (6) a son was decreed one-half of the property and there appears to have been no prayer that he should first pay a portion of the sale price.

In Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (5) it was held by a majority that though a son might be liable to pay a mortgage dobt due by his father, he could resist a mortgage based on that very same debt.

In Matho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (7) the vendor had died at the time of the suit and their Lordships held that an equity which might have been enforced against the vendor's interest while it existed could not be made to affect that interest when it had passed to a surviving co-parcener.

Madan Gopal v. Sati Prasad (8), Kilaru Kotayya v. Polavarapu Durgayya (9), Muthukrishna Naidu v. Kano i (10) also have been sited and it has been pointed out that in Ran Dayal v. Sura Mal (11) the Allahabad Court refused to follow Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunder Das (i).

The point is one on which there has been much conflict, and in appellants' favour there stands only Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sunier Dis (1) and the obiter dictum in Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (7), but in all the other rulings the Courts have marked the distinction between the liability of the sons to pay their father's debts and their right to avoid an alignation of the family properly.

It is difficult to see how the distingtion is of much benefit to the sons, except in this respect that it forese aliences to look more carefully into the necessity for the alienation and so sets as a check on the alienation of family property.

In these eases if we issued decrees conditional on the payment of the son's share of the purchase price, we should be in effect granting the vendee a lien on the son's share in the property sold and that course would be opposed to principles observed in the majority of the rulings cited.

For these reasons, we must decline to interfere and we dismiss the appeals with costs.

The appellants have their remedy; only the rights of the son are affected, therefore, the sales will be affected only in respect of one-half of the property sold; and, for the consideration which has failed, the appellants may either secure payment from the vendor or sue him and execute their decrees against the whole family property. This course, it appears, may involve much unnecessary litigation and as each is to be depresated, but on the authorities no other course is open.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 16th August 1918.

Mr. Hoider Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Makund Behari Lal, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.-The parties are co-sharers in two villages named Ludbausi and Bilgara, situated in Tabsil Melihabad, district Lucknow. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 5 are the brothers of the defendant No. 1. The plaint iff No. 6, Musammat Kapiz Fatime, is the sister and the plaintiff No. 7, Musammat Siddigan Bibi is the mother of these persons. The defendant No. 1 is the lambardar of these villages. On the let January 1916 he granted a lease of these villages to Abdul Malik, defendant No. 2, for a period of seven years in his capacity as lambardar with the object of paying the decretal money, for the satisfaction of which one of there villages was threatened with sale. The plaintiffs seek to avoid that lease on the ground that it was granted by the defendant No. 1 with a view to set up an adverse title to the property comprised in the lease. It is further stated that the lessee was a man of no means, that no security was taken from him, and that the lanbardar had no power to grant a lease for a long term. It was not alleged that the lease was granted on a low or inadequate rept.

Additional Subordinate learned The Judge found that the lease in question was executed by the lambardar for the benefit of his co-sharers and that, but for the premium reseived from the lessee, one of the villages comprised in the lease would have been lost to the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1. He farther found that the interests of the plaintiffs, including two of them who are minors, were in no way prejudiced by the transaction, and that the lambardar had authority to grant the lease on the terms spesified therain.

The only contention urged on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants in appeal is, that the defendant No. I was not competent in his capacity as lamburdar to grant a lease for a period of seven years; and reliance is placed in support of that contention on the decision in Bansidhar v. Dip Singh (1) and Chattray v. Nawala (2). It was laid down in those eases that, in the absence of a custom to the contrary, a limbardar had no power, without the consent of his co sharers, to grant a lease of co-parcenary land beyond such term as tho siraumstances of the particular year or season might require. That is unquestionably one of the limitations on the powers of the lambardar under ordinary oircumstances; but there might be cases where the lumbardar, in the exercise of his powers as a manager, might have to grant leases for a longer term than what the terms of the particular year or season might require. There might, for instance, be ban ar or waste land which no person might be willing to take up for sultivation upless a lease was given for a sufficiently long term to re-pay him for his labours. There might be land not sufficiently productive on account of the nature of its soil or the absence of facility for irrigation, the lease of which no person might be willing to take except for a sufficiently long term to compensate him for the expenses that he might have to incur in improving the land or devising facilities for its irrigation. These are sireumstances of an exceptional nature, which might possibly justify a lambardar in the exercise of his powers as a manager, charged with the collection of rents, to deal with the property in a manner suited to raise the largest income. He has no power to alienate the corpus of the joint estate even for necessary purposes (Bhajan Lal v. Moti (3)). But, within the limits of hisauthority and the scope of his employment, he can manage so as to scoore the greatest benefit to the so sharers on whose behalf he purports to set.

A lambardar is described in section 4, subsection (3), of the U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) as a co-sharer of a mahal appointed under the Act to represent all or any of the co-sharers therein. represents them for purposes of management, including the collection of rent and the payment of land revenue. Section 12 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 128) provides that no co-sharer of a joint estate has a right, in the absence of a local custom or special contract to the contrary, to realize rents or to take steps for the ejectment of tenants or for the enhancement of rents otherwise than through a manager authorized to collect the rents on behalf of all the co sharers. If a manager can eject tenante, he can also grant fresh leases on behalf of his co sharers. If he has a duty to pay arrears of revenue or other does charged on the estate, which cannot otherwise be discharged, be can grant a lease to secure the requisite premium so long as he does not prejudice the interests of his co-sharers thereby. He has, in some respects, larger powers than an ordinary manager or agent appointed by an instrument. He can act as a prudent manager for the benefit of his so sharers so far as such act falls within the purview of the objects for which he is so appointed.

The property in dispute in the present instance was liable for the payment of Rs. 834 : 3.0 on account of gueara or maintenance dues to Subhan Ali Khan. Subhan Ali Khan had obtained a decree for arrears of maintenance and in execution of that dacree he had applied for the sale of the village Bilgara, A date was fixed for the austion sale. One of the plaintiffs and the defendant No. I moved the Court holding the sale to adjourn it, but without success. They got permission to transfer the property to pay off the decretal amount. The defendant No. 1 thereupon arranged with the present leaves, the defendant No. 2, to pay the entire descetal money within four months and, in considera. tion of his agreeing to do so, granted him a lease of the two villages in question on a rent of Ro. 3, 00 per year, cut of which Ro. 2,8+1 were to go in payment of the land revenue, eesses, nankar and maintenance charges due on account of the property and the balance was payable to the lamburdar. It is admitted that the lessee paid the money due on account of the decree and that the village Ludhauri was thus saved from sale. The grant of the lease in question was, in the circumstances, nothing more than an act of prodent manage. ment, intended to seemre the largest amount of benefit to the so starer both by saving the property from sale and by securing an economic method of collection without in any way prejudicing the interests of the cosharers or reducing the profits derivable from the estate. In Mu ta Prasid v. (4) Singh lease 8 by the lambardar for a period of ten years to a person who had agreed to build a parca well on the laid at a considerable cost in order to provide facilities for irrigation, which did not exist, was upheld. In Muhimmal Kazim v. Mian Ahan (5) & lease granted for a period of seven years was similarly upheld. Such cases fall within the exception to the general rule. As Knox, J, rightly pointed out, every case of this kind must depend upon the faets and eircumstances in which the lease has sprung. Where there is any suspicion established that the lambardar has granted a long lease to the detriment of so sharers, a heavy burden would be placed on the lessee to show that, by sustom or for some other cause, the lambardar is authorized in granting the lease". On the other land, where the granting of the lease is shown to be for the benefit of the co-sharers and the co sharers presumably have been shown to have derived benefit under the lease, it is highly inequitable that they should be permitted to repudiate a transaction entered into on their behalf, the benefit of which they had enjoyed. Two of the plaintiffs in the present instance were minors; but inasmuch as it is not suggested that the lease was granted on a low or inadequate rent or that the amount needed to pay the arrears of mainten. ance charges due by the estate, could otherwise have been secured on more favourable by a lease granted for a shorter period. the transaction must be upheld as an act of management justified by the posuliar eireametances of the ease. One of the plaintiffs, admittedly, attested the lease and made an application to the Court holding the sale saying, that the money requisite to pay the decretal money had been raised by a lease of the two villages and that the sale might be postponed till a certain date in order to enable him to deposit the amount due on the decree. The entire term of the lease has now almost run out. There is no reason, therefore, for granting the declaration asked for.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 28 of 1920, preferred against the decree of the District Mansif of Uda. malpet in Original Suit No. 328 of 1917.

F & CTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T M. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Appellants: -The lower Appellate Court did not adopt the correct method of computing time for presenting the appeal If the time taken in obtaining copy of judgment be excluded, as appellants are entitled to do, appallants' appeal to the lower Court was in time. The party is entitled deduction of time ossupied in obtaining copies of both the deeree and the judg. ment under elauses (2) and (3) sestion 12 of the Limitation Ast. The 14th November, the date by which appellants were late in furnishing stamp-papers called for for copy of the decree, was one of the days requisite for obtaining copy of the judgment. Raman Obstit v. Kadirvalu (1) and Selambin Chetty v. Rimanathan Ohetty (2).

Mr. N. Rama Aiyar, for the Respondents:-Appellants cannot claim to deduct 14th November as stamp papers for copy of the decree were called for OD November and they were furnished only on 15th November. If 14th November be not excluded the appellants were out of time for their appeal. Raman Chatti v. Kadirvalu (1) and Selamban Chettu Rumanadian Chetty (2) were wrongly desided. The matter should be referred to a Fall Banch.

JUDGMENT .- The judgment appealed against was delivered on November 3rd and an application for copies of judgment and deeres was made on the same date. Copies were ready on December 12th and the appeal was presented on January 12th.

But the appellants were entitled to deduct 27 days in November and 12 days in Desember which were occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree. Deducting these 39 days, the appeal was presented on the 31st day, but January 11th was a Sanday and, therefore, under section 4, Limitation Ast, the appeal might be presented on the next working day, and was in time, if so presented.

HAFIZUNNISA C. JAWABIR SINGH,

It is argued for the third respondent that the appellants were not entitled to deduct the 14th November, seeing that copy stamps for the copy of the decree was called for on November 13th and were not furnished till the 15th.

But that day (November 14th) has to be excluded under section 12 (3) of the Limitation Act as one of the days requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment; and it has been held in Raman Ohetti Kadirvalu (1) and Selamban ٧. Ramanadhan Chetty (2) that a 18 entitled to exclude both these periods long as they are not counted twice over. It is suggested that those desisions are wrong and that the question should be referred to a Full Bench, but we see reason to decline to follow them, and we think that they correctly interpret the intention of the Legislature in enacting section 12 of the Limitation Act, which was that parties should have the benefit of excluding both of these periods under clauses (2) and (3) in somputing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal.

This appeal is allowed with costs. The District Judge will be directed to admit the appeal and dispose of it on its merits.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by three plaintiffs, Musimmat Hafiz-un-nisa, Sultan Ahmad and Musammat Kaniz Fatima, in a suit in which they claimed 15/16ths of the property left by Nizam Ahmad as his heirs under Muhammadan Law leaving 1/16th as the share of the first respondent, Musimmat Batul un nisa. Musammat Hafiz-un-nisa and Musammat Batul un nisa are both widows of Nizam Ahmad. The other two plaintiffs-appellants are the son and daughter of Nizam Abmad by Musammat Hafiz un-nise. Nizam Ahmad had one sor, Hisam Ahmad, by Musammat Batulan. Hisam Ahmad predeceased his father leaving two sone, Fazal Ahmad and Entisham Ahmad, minore, who are also contesting respondents in this case. The following pedigree will serve to make the position of the parties clear:—

In the first Court the status of the first plaintiff, as the legally married wife of Nizam Ahmad, and the legitimacy of her shildren was denied. This point has been found in favour of the plaintiffs and is not now contested.

There are three different sets of properties in dispute and the defence to the suit is different as regards each set of property. A number of properties resorded in List C. in the written statement of the first defendant. are in the possession of Musammat Batul. un nies and she claims to hold them in lieu of dower. Three villages, Mirpur, Nirbhan. pur sud Thawai, two houses, and certain miscellaneous properties, shown in List D in the same written statement and also in the written statement of the second third defendants, were granted to and the third pacond and defendants registered under deed of gift 8 excented by Nizam Ahmad on 26th Ostober 1906, three days after the death of Hisam Ahmad, and the second and third defendants elaim them under this title. There remains one property, called Chak Niyazganj, included in the village of Dharaicha. In the written statement eight-annas of this was shown in List C. The remaining eight annae elaimed by the fourth respondent Azz Ahmad as heir of Niyez Ahmad. Out of this eight-annes Aziz Ahmad has transferred 32-annas to the minor respondents under a deed of gift. After the filing of the present suit four annas out of the eight annas not claimed by Aziz Ahmad was sold by auction in execution of a money-decree for a debt due from Niyaz Abmad at his death and was purchased by Az'z Ahmad. Out of this Obak, therefore, Aziz Abmad now claims 82. annas and the minor respondents 3-1 annas making up a twelve-annas ghare. remaining four-annas is held by Musammat Batul-un-nisa under her elaim to dower.

We deal first with the question of dower. It is admitted on all bands that Musammat Batul-un-nisa is in possession of the property in dispute under this issue, and has been in possession of it ever since her husband's death on 15th January 1915. The learned Subordinate Judge on issues 8 to 10, which deal with this portion of the case, has found that she entered into possession peaceably and lawfully in her double sapasity of one of the heirs of the deceased and of a widow entitled to dower, that her dower amounting to Rs. 12,500 is unpaid, and that she has a lien on the property in lieu of this sum and is entitled to retain possession until it is paid to her. The main argument of the appellants before us war, that a widow was not entitled to claim a lien for dower unless she entered into possession either in the lifetime of her husband or by an express or tacit agreement with the remaining beirs. In support of this position he relies on certain observations of the Privy Council ceeurring in the course of the judgment in Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (1). As has been pointed out by the Madras High Court, the point now in dispute was not at all in issue in that case. The question was as to the right of the widow to interest on the unpaid dower. The proposition that a widow in possession of her husband's property has a lien for her unpaid dower provided that she entered into possession peacefully and lawfally in virtue of nerolaim to dower, and that it was unnecessary that there should have been any agreement between her and her husban's heirs, has been laid down by the Allahabad High Court in two eases in the year 1910, tide Ali Bikhsh v. Allahdad Khan (2) and Ramean Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (3). Those cases have never been by the Privy Council. The overruled whole question was re-examined in great detail, with reference to the Privy Council desision in Hamira Bibi v Zubaida Bibi (1), and all the Indian decisions, by a Fall Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Besju Bee v. Syed Moorthiya Sahib (4) as recently as 1919, and they again affirm the proposition, previously laid down by the Allahabad High Court, that if the widow has obtained possession of the property lawfully and peaceably, without forse or fraud, it is not necessary that her possession should be the result of any agreement or consent of her husband or his beirs. The leading judgment was delivered by Mr. Justice Abdur Rabim, himself a Muhammadan and a high authority on questions of Muhammedan Law. It is sufficient for us to say that we agree with the reasoning of the Fall Bench and with the conclusion at which they arrived and that we cannot neefully add anything to what is to be found in the judgments in that osee.

The appellants have, however, a second line of argument. They rely on the fast that Musammat Batul un nisa filed her application for mutation of names only three days after her husband's death and that, in regard to some at any rate of the properties, the plaintiff Sultan Ahmad filed a cross-applica tion at the same time. They urge that her possession cannot possibly be treated as peaceable when her application for mutation was of posed, and that her application was made so soon after her husband's death that there was not even time for her to have taken possession of the property at all. As against this, we have the fast that the Revenue Court unanimously found her possession established and decreed mutation in he farmar. The Assistant Collector who first tried the ease found to this effect and his desision was apheld in first and second appeals. No evidence whatever has been put forward that her possession was ever disputed on the spot and the present sait was not filed till three years later. Sultan Ahmad's application for mutation is not on the resord and the only evidence of it is derived from references to it in the Assistant Collector's order, Exhibit A.9. These references show that in his original application Sultan Ahmad never claimed to be in posasssion. This is expressly stated by the Assistant Collector, who savs: Ahmad claimed mucation so'ely on the ground that he is the son of M. Nizam Ahmad", In contrast to this he notes the fast that Batul un nisa had based her elaim on two grounds,-

(1) the fact that she was the lawfully wedded wife of the deceased, and

(2) that she was in presession of the entire estate of the dessated in lieu of her dower debt.

It is true that some evidence was, afterwards, rut forward with a view to show the plaintiffs' possession, but the fast that no such allegation was made at the outset of the case is a strong argument for the fact that Musammat Batul-un-nisa did, in the first place, eater into possession peacefully and without opposition. As against the argument which appears to be raised here for the first time that the could not have got possession so quickly, it may be pointed out that two items of the property are houses of which possession could be taken at ones. As regards the Zamindari property, it is probable that as she was living in the house with her deceased husband at the time of his death the karinds and other servants who were actually managing the estate commenced to render their accounts to her as they had formerly done to Nizam Ahmad. We are not prepared, on the bare fact that some dispu'e as to possession was raised in the course of the mutation proceedings, to set aside the finding of the Court below that Mus.mmat Batal un nisa did enter into possession peaceably and lawfully in lieu of her elaim for dower,

In connection with this part of the case there is one point more to be considered. The appellants argue that, even if the main question is found against them, they should be given a decree subject to payment of any amount which may be found due to the defendant. This contention was put forward in argument in the Court below, but the learned Subordinate Judge refused to entertain it and referred the plaintiffs to a separate suit. He pointed out that, not only was no such claim made in the plaint where the elaim for dower was altogether ignored, but even after Musammut Batul un nisa's written statement was put in no applieation to have a conditional decree passed if the question of dower was found in her favour was ever made. To go into this question would involve re opening the case and taking fre-h evidence inasmuch as a question of assounts would have to be gone into. Musommat Batol-un-pisa would, on the one hand, be liable to account for the profits of the property and, on the other, would have a claim to interest on her dower. In a very eimilar case, Z. ibunnissa v. Hasaratunnisa (5), one of us took the same source which the learned Subordina's Judge has taken. That decision followed a similar ease of the Allahabad High Court in Amani Begam v. Muhammad Karimullah (6) and it has been pointed out in the source of the rgument that this course has the support of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bebee Bachun v. Hamid Hossein (7). The matter is one of discretion, and we are certainly not prepared to say that the learned Subordinate Judge exercised his discretion wrongly in the circumstances of this care.

We now turn to the property covered by the gift. Here the case of the respondents is an exceptionally strong one. The deed of gift is Exhibit BI on the record. As has been already stated, it was executed on 26th October 190%, only three days after the death of Risam Ahmad, who was the only sen of the deceased by his biradari wife Musammat Batul-un-nisa. Under Musammat Batul-un-nisa. Under Musammadan Law Hisam Ahmad's orphan children would be excluded from inheritance by their uncle Sultan Ahmad and, in order to prevent this result, a deed of gift of the three villages and certain minor properties was exesuted in their favour. The donor states in the gift that, from the date of its execution. he is to be desmed to be in possession of the property as guardian of the minors and not in his own right. It has been suggested that the reason why the deed was executed so soon after Hisam Ahmad's eath war, that plague was raging at the time, and there is some evidence on the record that after his death Nizam Ahmad feared that his life was uncertain and wished to ensure provision for his grandsons without delay It has been expressly admitted by the appellants' learned Advocate, in argument, that, so far as outward appearances go, everything that Nizam Ahmad annid possibly do to perfect the gift was done. The gift being one in favour of minor shildren under the guardianship of the donor. delivery of possession was not absolutely escential . Wilson's Mabammadan Law, fourth edition, page 323) An unequivosal declaration that the donor has ceased to hold the property as owner has been held sufficient. In any case, whatever sould be done possession and ownership was transfer done. The document was duly registered. The names of the donees were, on the application of the donor, recorded in the revenue papers in respect of all the properties covered by the gift. In some cases the elder miner was appointed Lambardar. Nizam Ahmad, himself, repeatedly declared that not he but the minors were the owners of the property. In 1513, seven years after the gift, he applied to be appointed their guardian under the Guardians and Wards Ast and gave in his application a full list of the gifted property which he described as the property of the minors. The District Judge did not appoint him guardian, but the refusal to do so was based solely on the ground that this would be superfluous as he was already the guardian of person and property of the minors under Muham. madan Law. In 1910 he was called on to give evidence as a proscoution witness in a criminal case. In cross examination was asked about his property and he then stated the fact that the villages in suit had been given by him to his grandsons three or four years earlier. A great deal has been made for the appellants of the fact that, in some instances, the Patwari's papers other than the khewat of proprietary register were not corrected by substituting his name as guardian for his name as propriator, and that in one or two instances rent suits (filed by his agents) were brought in his name instead of in those of the minors. Mistakes of this sort are very easy to make where the management rested, as it necessarily must do, with Nizam Ahmad. As regards the Patwari's papers, nearly all the entries relied on are of the years 1:06 or 1907 very shortly after the gift. The delay which occurred in correcting the entries has been explained by the Patwaris eonsernad. Absolutely no importance can be attached to these papers. Nothing is more common than for incorrect entries in a khetauni or Jamabandi to continue for three or four years, the entry of the previous year being copied on each occasion before it occurs to the Patwari that the entry is wrong or his attention is drawn to it by some inspecting officer. In two cases suits were brought against Nizam Ahmad in personal capacity and it is significant that on both these coessions in his written statements he took exception to the form of the plaint and pointed out that the property belonged to his grandsons under his guardianship—tide Exhibits B97 and 140. In the former case an express plea was taken in paragraph 11 of the written statement; in the latter the heading of the suit was changed to Chhedi against Nizam Abmad, guardian of Fazal Ahmad and Ebtisham Ahmad, whereas in the plaint, Exhibit 137, Nizam Ahmad alone was shown as defendant. In one single instance, shortly after the gift, a mortgage for Rs. 222 was taken from a saltivator in the name of Nizam Ahmad. mortgage was in respect of arrears of rent some of which at least may have asorned prior to the gift. Apart from this, and the fact already referred to that Nizam Ahmad's name was shown mistake in the plaints in one or two rent suits (there are a large number of others in which he sued as guardian), no single act of Nizam Ahmad can be shown which is inconsistent with the gift. In fact, when challenged to say what more Nizam Ahmad could possibly have done to give effect to the gift than he did lo, the only suggestion which the appellants could put forward was that separate assounts should have been kept in the name of the minors, whereas no such accounts have been produeed. In the case of an Zamindar it does not at all follow that such accounts would be kept, or that, if kept, they would be available some years after Nizam Ahmad's death. The ordinary accounts showing income derived from the villages would probably not affast the question either way and these are the only accounts of whose existence there appears to be evidence. Certainly, this single fact cannot be allowed to outweigh the vast mass of evidence on the resord that Nizam Ahmad did, from the date of the gift, absolutely divest himself of the ownership of the property and do every. thing that it was possible to do to sesure the title and possession of the doness. The appellants' argument is that the gift was intended as a Will in order to evade the provisions of Muhammadan Law which limit the right of disposal to one-third of the testator's property; but where a transaction is carried out openly and publicly and everything is done which ordinarily would be done to give effect to it, it certainly lies on the plaintiffs to show that the transaction was other than appeared on the face of it and was really intended to cover a fraudulent motive. Tais barden they have wholly failed to discharge. The contention that the does. ment was intended as a Will is rendered possible by the assidental circumstance that Nizam Ahmad died while the doness were still minors. If they had come of age in his lifetime, it is difficult to see how, in face of his own acts and declarations, Nizam Ahmad could possibly have resisted a claim by them to have his guardianship discharged and the management of the property made over to them. Reference has been made in the course of argument to the fact that N'zim Ahmad was at one time in monetary difficalties, but it is highly significant that though in 1913 Nizam Ahmad was in such straits for money that he was driven to execute a mortgage for Re. 30,000, he carefully refrained from ensumbering any of the gifted property but confined the mortgage to property of which he remained the owner-vile Exhibit The same is true of another mortgage, Exhibit 46, which he executed in the following year. It may be noted, in conclusion, that the plaintiffs have not been consistent as to the ground on which they should oppose the gift. At one time in their plaint they denied the gift altogether. At another time they asserted that the denor was so overcome by grief at his son's death that he was not a free agent when he made it. At another time it was suggested that he made it to defraud creditors or to anticipate a possible suit for dower either by Musammat Batul un nisa or by his mother Musammat Kaisara Begam.

The gift has also been attacked as offending against the Muhammadan doctrine of mushaa inasmuch as the property was given to the two grandsons without specification of shares. The dostrine of mushaa is one arising out of an archaic state of society, and their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down that it should be confined within the parrowest limits-Muhammad Mumtas Ahmad v Zubaida Jan (8). Apart from this, the Fatawah Alamgiri, reproduced in Baillie's Digest, shows that where the only confusion or lack of definiteness is that a person who owns an entire property confers it on two donees without apportionment, the gift is valid according to both Abu Yusuf and Mohammad though not according to Abu Hanifa. general rule is that the concensus of the two disciples outweighs the opinion of Abu Hanifa alone and the opinion of the two disciples is accepted as being the law in Mr. Ameer Ali's learned work on Muhammadan Law (fourth Edition, page 79) and, likewise, in the case of Sharifa Bibi v. Gulam Mahommed Destagir Khan (9). There is also authority for the proposition that any defect due to mushaa is eured by taking possession in definite shares and there is no question here that the gift was treated throughout as a gift to the two grandsons in equal shares and mutation was applied for and obtained on this basic. The objection of mushaa cannot, therefore, be sustained.

It remains to consider the twelve-annas share in the Chak Niyszganj property. As regards the four-annas share purchased at auction by Aziz Ahmad, the documents referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge conclusively establish that it was purchased in lieu of the debts of the original owner, Niyez Ahmad, and no argument as to this part of the case has been addressed to us on behalf of the appellants. As regards the remaining eight-annas the question admittedly turns on the construction to be placed on Exhibit 22, which is a desd of gift of this property executed by Niyaz Abmad in favour of his wife Musammat Kaisara Begam on 12th September 1901. This deed is construed by the learned Subordinate Judge, as it was construed by all the parties affected by it, as a gift of a life interest to Musammat Kaisara Begam with a reversion to the donor. If this construction is correct, the appellants admit that their case must fail, Niyez Ahmad left two sone, Nizam Ahmad and Aziz Ahmad, and the former could not possibly inherit more than a half share in the property. The present plaintiffs claim through Nizam Abmad. The plaintiffe, on the other hand, contend that this document conferred an absolute estate on Musammat Kaisara Begam accompanied by attempting to limit her power of alienation. and that these latter words are repugnant to the absolute interest previously erested and must, therefore, be disregarded. Reading the deed as a whole, we are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly interpreted it, and that it is not open to the construction contended for by the plaintiffs. The deed was emphatically a deed for the purpose of maintenance and a deed for maintenance, prima facie, importe only a life-interest. The case is very strong here inasmuch as the property is given for the maintenance both of Musammat Kaisara Begam berself and for a maid servant, Musammat Idan, and the operative words are, for,.....the maintenance and daily expenses without power of transfer of any kind," If a document is open to a construction which makes all parts of it harmonise with one another that construction is always to be preferred over one which introduces a repugnancy between one part of the doonment and another The construction that the document gave a life-interest not only avoids repugnancy but no one reading the document can have any doubt that it correctly represents the intention of the executaut,

The appellants have also objected to the fact that separate scate have been allowed in favour of the two sets of defendants. As the two sets of defences were entirely distinct, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge appears to us an eminently proper one.

^{(9) 16} M. 43 at p. 49; 8 M. L. J. 14; 5 Ind. Dec.

GOPAL RAI C. FIRM HARCHAND RAM-ANANT RAM.

Certain cross-objections were put in by the respondents but these were withdrawn at the hearing and have not been argued.

We ought, perhaps, to mention that Musammat Batul un nisa died during the pendency of the appeal and that no application was made within the period allowed by law to bring on the resord her legal representatives. As, however, the minor respondents, Fazal Ahmad and Entisham Ahmad, who are already on the record in another capacity, are her sole legal representatives, it appears to us that Order XXI, rule 2 only requires that an entry to this effect should be made in the record, and that rule 4 of the same Order is not applicable.

The result is, that the appeal fails on all points and it is accordingly dismissed with costs. The cross objections having been withdrawn are dismissed without costs.

"Account, mutual, open and current," meaning of— Test of mutuality-Limitation Act (IX of 1:08), Sch. I, Art. 85.

An account current is an open or running account between two or more parties, or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is, or can be ascertained, from which it follows that such an account comes under the term of open account in so far as it is running, unsettled or unclosed. Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties, and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and credits [p 2, col 2]

The test of mutuality is that the dealings between the parties should be such that the balance is sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes in favour of the other. An account which consists of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of a debt to another and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former, is not a mutual account and, also, if the balance is sometimes in favour of the debtor but generally in favour of the banker the account is not a mutual one. [p. 33, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, an account does not indicate transactions creating independent obligations on both sides but there is sometimes a credit in favour of the defendant, and that only for a few days, the account is not a mutual account, and in a suit on such an account the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of Article 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation

Act, [p. 34, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Cours, J .- This is an appeal against a desree of the Sabordinate Judge of Busgalpur, decreeing a suit brought by the firm of Hareband Ram-Anant Ram against Gopal Rai and others. The plaintiff is a firm trading in Boagalpur and the defendants are members of a joint Hindu family, of which the defendant No. 1, Gopal Rai, is the k rta and they also have a business in Bhagalpur known as Gopal Rai-Sagar Mall. The plaintiff's case is that they had a mutual, open and surrent account with the defendants' firm, that there was an adjustment of this assount on the 18th of Savan Sambat 1973, when it was found that a sum of Ra. 4,49 - 15.6 was due by the defendants to the plaintiff. This sum with interest amounted to Rs. 5,721.8.6 and the plaintiff brought the suit for this amount.

The defendants admitted that they had dealings with the plaintiffs' firm, but they contended that the transactions between them and the plaintiff's firm were not a mutual, pen and correct account and that the claim was barred by limitation. They also denied their liability for interest at the rate clarked by the plaintiff. In addition, they pleaded a set-off of Rs. 14,580 on the following allegation :- There was a suit which involved a large property. known as the Lashmipur case, ore Radha Kishen Bhagaria, the plaintiff and one Sheedut Ram entered into a champertons transaction and advanced money for that litigation their scares in the litigation being 8-annas, 6 annas and 2 annas respectively. Bansidhar was the managing member of the plaintiff firm and the defend ants' case is that he made an arrangement with the defendant No. 1, Gopal, by which Gopal was to make pairvi in that case; for this he was to receive 2 per cent, of all money advanced by the plaintiff for the litigation whether it was successful or not and 6 per sent. more if it was successful. The plaintiff's share of the money advanced for the litigation was Bs. 7,27,500. The litigation was not successful and, consequently, Gopal claims only 2 per cent. which amounts to Re. 14 550. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that portion of the plaintiff's elaim for Rs. 5,724-8 6 is barred by limitation and he has found that there was no arrange. ment between the plaintiff and Gopal by which G pal was to be paid 2 per cent, of the sum advanced by the plaintiff for the litigation in the Lachmipur case whether it was successful or not. The plaintiffs' suit has, consequently, as I have already said, been decreed. The defendants appealed, and in the appeal the same points are raised as in the Trial Court, vis., (1) that the plaintiffs' claim on the account between the parties is barred by limitation and (2) that the defendants are entitled set-off which they claimed. I propose to deal with this question of setoff first.

It is an admitted fact that the Lachmipur sait was financed by certain Marwaris on behalf of the plaintiffs in that suit. Bansidhar, who is the Manager of the plaintiffs' firm, denies that he or his firm had anything to do with that litigation but it seems clear that the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that Bansidhar did in fact enter into the champertous transaction alleged is correct. There is no document to show this, but in his evidence Bansidhar admits that he consulted Pleaders about that case, met Counsel and made arrangements for their convenience.

The Commissioner of the Division spoke to him about the case, he came to Patna in connection with it when it was on appeal before the High Court, and there was a question of a compromise. He attended the trial, he was present at the bearing of the appeal, and he paid the costs of the suit, both in Bangalpur and in the Patna High Court. He says that this was done on behalf of Radha Kishen Bhagaria, who is a relative of his; but from the evidence of Radha Kishen it is elear that this is not so, for his evidence shows that he himself was paying money and was looking after the case and he had no oseasion to use Bansidbar to do any. thing for him. In these eircumstances, I have no doubt that Baneidhar was one of the shampertors, as has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge,

The question remains, however, whether in fact Baneidhar made the arrangement with Gopal, as the latter contends. We are not concerned with that portion of the alleged agreement relating to the payment of 6 per cent. in the case of the plaintiffs in the Lachmipur case being successful basause, so far, they have not been successful. We are concerned only with the matter of the 2 per cent. which Ransidhar is said to have agreed to pay whether the litiga. tion was successful or not. Now, the probabilities are against any such arrangement having been some to. If Bansidhar bad wished Gopal to be zealous in looking after the case he would bardly have promised him 2 per sent, which amounted to a large sum of over Rs. 14,000 in the ease of non success. Farther, it is difficult to understand why Bansidhar alone of all the champertors should have entered into such an agreement. The champertors were all working together, the pairei benefited all, and if any arrangement was being made it would certainly have been made with the knowledge of them all. Again, it is unlikely if the defendant No. 1 was to get 2 per cent, win or lose, that he would not have asked for and got something advanced during the litigation which was of a protracted nature. Another very important so sideration which tends to show that the defendants' story is untrue, is that there no document syidene. 18 ing the agreement. It bas been urged that the parties are on friendly terms and have been doing business together, and that between Marwaris who are friends dccaments are very often dispensed with. This is true but there is evidence of other transactions entered into by the defendant No. 1 with Marwaris in which he took documents and one is a transac. tion between him and his own brother in which he got a letter specifying his claim. I think, therefore, that it is unlikely that in the ease of a speculative suit such as is the Lashmipur case the defendant No. 1 would not get some document executed as There are evidence of the agreement. other circumstances referred to in judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge which also indicate that there could not have been any such agreement. Against these we have only the statements of defendant No. 1 Gopal and his gemasta. The defendant No. 1 is admittedly not on good terms with one Debi Prasad Marwari who was interested in the Lashmipur ease on behalf of the defendants and it is not at all improbable that he might have interested himself in the Lachmipur ease on behalf of the plaintiffs for that reason. The gomasta is a servant in the employ of Gopal Babu and to that extent he is an interested witness. The evidence of the agreement is thus of a very weak character and in the circumstances of the case I find it impossible to ascept it as sufficient evidence of the agreement. I accordingly agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the set-off must be disallowed.

I now some to the question of the sum of Rs. 5,724-86 which is claimed by the plaintiff on a mutual, open and current account adjusted on the 15th of Savan 1973 Sambat. The plaintiffs' elaim was based, in the first place, on the account being a mutual, open and current account and consequently coming within the provisions of section 85 of the Limitation Act; and, in the alternative, on an adjustment which would bring it within the provisions of Article 115 of the Limitation Act. The learned Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff on both there points and he has also found that the suit is not barred by limitation on the prinsiple laid down in the case of Kedar Nath

Mitter v. Denobandhu Shaha (1), which refers to a tradesman's account. In regard to the last point the plaintiff never claimed that limitation would be saved on the principle enunciated in the decision I have just referred to, and it is clear that the case is not one of a tradesman's assount. In regard to Article 115 of the Limitation Act it is also clear that the learned Subordinate Judge has taken an incorrect view of the law. He has relied on the case of Jalim Singh Choonee Lal Johurry (2) for the proposition that an adjustment of assounts between the parties in the defendants' presence operates as an implied contract to pay. Now, in the present case the adjustment is said to have been made in the presence of the parties but the case of Jalim Singh v. Choonee Lal Johurry (2), which related to a partnership, is no authority for the proposition that in any case of accounts an adjustment in the presence of parties operates as a fresh contract and it is conceded by Mr. Sen the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents that, unless the account is a mutual, open and current account, the adjustment will not save the suit from being barred by limitation.

The question then is, whether the ascount is a mutual, open and current account. The question of what a mutual, open and surrent assount is has been fully discussed by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Ram Pershad V. Harbans Singh (3) in a judgment in which he reviews all the previous decisions on this point. In that judgment he says: An account current is an open or running account between two or more parties or, an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is or can be ascertained, from which it follows that such an account comes under the term of open account, in so far as it is running, unsettled or unclosed. Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties, and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and eredits." It is not disputed that the ascount with which we are concerned in the present case

January 1913 there are shifting balances, sometimes in favour of the plaintiff and sometimes in favour of the defendants; and, so far as I can discover, there were in all

17 ossasions on which the balance was in the defendants' favour during this period.

From the 18th January 1913 onward until the last item of account, the balance has been sontinuously in favour of the plaintiff.

On the face of the assounts, therefore, it would appear that, in the years 1906 and 1907, there was a shifting balance once in favour of the plaintiff and again in favour of the defendants, and that, between the 23rd January 1912 and the 18th January

1913, there were shifting balances some.

times in favour of the plaintiff and sometimes in favour of the defendants, and, on the face of it, the account would appear to be a mutual account, It is contended, however, by the learned Counsel for the appeliants that if the accounts are properly examined, it will be found that in 1906 1907

there was in fact no balance in favour of the defendants and that all the payments which have been made for the other period are merely payments to reduce a debt owed

by them to the plaintiff or as to a banker for purpose of remittance. So far as the years 1906-190/ are someerned, there can be no doubt. The item with which we are concerned is the item of Rs. 2,075-8 9 which is shown as a credit in favour of

is an open and surrest ascount. The quastion is, whether it is a mutual account. The test of mutuality which has been laid down in a number of decisions is, that the dealings between the parties should be such that the balance is sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes in favour of the other. An assount which sonsists of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of a debt to another and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former, is not a mutual assount - Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mahamed (4). In Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Ashrufsonnissa (5) it was held that if the balance was sometimes in favour of the defendant but generally in favour of the plaintiff, the banker, the account would not be a mutual one : and in Phillips v. Phillips (6) it was held that a mutual assount is not merely one where one of two parties has reseived money and paid it on account of the other, but where each of two parties has paid on the other's account. An assount under which one party has received money and paid on account of the other is not a mutual account, and this view has been adopted in a series of English desisions,

In the present case the account between the parties began as early as the year 1906 and the last transaction is said to have been after the adjustment which was made on the 3rd August 1916. The only assounts on the resord are the plaintiff's account. The their defendants have not produced assounts, and, although no presumption san arise against them for not doing so, the fact that they have not produced them has considerably increased our difficulty. As I have already said, the accounts began in 1906 and the first balance was struck after only five transactions had taken place; this shows a balance in favour of the plaintiff of Rs. 1,253. The next balance was struck in 1907 and shows a balance, in favour of the defendants of Rs. 2,075.8 9. From this time on there is a balance of different amounts always in favour of the plaintiff, till the 23rd of January 1912 from which date until the 18th of keats which shows Rs. 6.0.0 as a credit is for the dates beginning with 6th Magh Sudi. This clearly indicates that the Rs. 6,000 should have been shown as a credit in the on the credit side of the account, when it was made up in 1907, is a sum of Rs. 6 000 item transferred from Was an which the natal bahi. It appears, however, from the nakul bahi, Exhibit 3 A, that in fact this sum of Rs. 6,000 had not been really paid in at the time that the assount was made up; the nokal bahi itself shows that these items were sredited as follows :-Rs. 2,000 6th Magh Sudi 2,500 7th Magh Sudi and the khata immediately following the next account. There was, therefore, in fact no credit of Rs. 2,075 8 9 in favour of the defendants when the assount of 1907 was made up.

The account from the 23rd January 1912 up to the 18th January 1913 is a more difficult matter and, at first sight, it would appear to be a mutual assount. On careful examination, however, I am satisfied that this is not so. Up till the 23rd January 1912 there was a continuous debit against Gopal, but on the 20th January he paid in Rs. 1,500 and again on the 23rd January he paid in Rs. 300 which raised his credit to Rs. 100. On the 25th January he paid in Rs. £00; on the 29th January he paid in Rs. 300 which raised his credit to Rs. 900. On the 2nd February he withdrew Rs. 3,15) which left him again with a debit of Rs. 2,250. Between this date and the 23rd February be paid in various sums and withdrew various sums there being always a debit balance until the 15th March 1912 when, by paying in Rs. 575, his account stood at this amount to his eredit. On the 29th of March he withdrew Rs. 300, reducing his balance to Rs. 275; on the 3 th March be paid in Rs. 400, increasing his balance to Rs. 675. On the 2nd April he withdrew Rs. 10 leaving his balance at Rs. 665; on the 4th April he withdrew Rs. 4-8-6 reducing his balance to Rs. 660.7 6, and on the 12th April he withdrew Rs. 3,000, which again left him owing a sum of Rs. 2,339.8.6 to the plaintiff. He again paid in various same of money up to the 25th April when, by paying Re. 1,075, he was left with a eredit of Re. 810.7.6. On the 29th April he paid in Rs. 700, making his balance Rs. 1,510 7.6, but on the 2nd May 1912, he withdrew Rs. 4,200, when the balance again became a debit one, and this debit continued until the 9th January 1913 when he again had a credit of Rs. 24 2.0. On the 10th January 1913 he had a credit of Rs. 624 2.0; on the 12th January a credit of Rs. 1,524 2 0; on the 13th January a credit of Rs. 1,474 2.C; on the 15th January a credit of Rs. 2,374.2.0; on the 17th January Rs. 3,374-20; and on the 18th January Rs. 4,124-2 0. From this date onwards there was a continuous debit balance against Gopal. This can hardly, I think, be called a mutual account. There was never a credit in favour of the defendant Gopal for more than a few days at a time and the account appears to be of the nature of those accounts referred to in Vellu Pillai

v. Ghose Mahamed (4), in Phillips v. Phillips (6), and the cases following that decision, It was not an account indicating transac. tions which created independent obligations on both sides as is required in the case of a mutual account. It is true that there was sometimes a credit in favour of Gopal, but the credit, as I have said, was only for a few days and such an account cannot be held to indicate a mutual account in which there has been reciprosal dealings between the parties. Some argument has been addressed to us in respect of two items, (1) Rs. 408-14-0 which was realized from the estate of Rani Keshowati of Handwa, and (2) costs in respect of the Lodipur estate; and it is contended that there items show that there were mutual dealings between the parties. I car, however, see no difference between realization from an estate and a payment of cash to the deferdants' oredit. The account ther, in my opinion, is not a mutual account. This being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of the limitation prescribed in Article 85 of the Limitation Act; and it is admitted that if this Article does not apply then the plaintiff can get a decree for Rs. 1,045-10 0 only.

In the result, then, I would uphold the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to set off, but would modify his decree in regard to the principal amount claimed by the plaintiff to the extent indicated above. Costs will be in proportion to the success of the parties.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delbi, dated the 27th January 1921.

Lala Kahan Chand, for the Appellant. Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, returning a plaint for presentation to the District Judge in order that it might be transferred to a subordinate Court.

The facts of the case are as follows:-

Plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of the house described in the plaint; that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claim to be the owners and that defendant No. 3 as their thekedar fraudulently obtained a decree against him for ejectment on the ground that he was a tenant. Plaintiff accordingly asked in his plaint for the following reliefs:—

I. Deelaration that he is the owner;

2. That the ejectment decree obtained against him should be cancelled on the ground of fraud and that he is not bound thereby:

3. For a perpetual injunction that the defendants should not interfere with his possession.

He valued the plaint for the purpose of declaration at Rs. 5,000 and for the purpose of injunction at Rs. 100, total Rs. 5,100. On the 10th January 1921 the Court recorded an order in which it held that the value of the portion of the house in dispute for which the suit was brought appeared to be between Rs. 1,500 and

Rs. 2,000. The Court went on to say that the suit was not merely for a declaration, but that a consequential relief in the form of an injunction was claimed. It, therefore, the plaintiff to make up the ordered deficiency in Court fee, but it did not record any finding as to how much Court. fee should be paid. By a subsequent order of the 27th January it reviewed this order and held that the plaintiff had valued the suit as far as the declaration was concerned at Re, 130 and as far as the injunction was conserned at Rs. 100, total Rs. 230, and that this was accordingly the proper jurisdictional value of the suit and not Rs. 5,100 as stated in the plaint. Holding, apparently, therefore, that the suit was triable by the Court of a Munsif it returned the plaint as already stated. From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

Counsel for the appellant urges that, so far as the prayer for a declaration is concerned, the value for purposes of jurisdiction should be the value of the property. He also arges that an injunction is not a consequential relief and that, therefore, the suit is not one to which section 7, clause 4 (c) of the Court Fees Actapplies. Section

7, clause 4 (c) is as follows:-

In suits to obtain a declaratory desree or order, where consequential relief is prayed, the Court fee has to be calculated ad valorem. according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. Now, in the present case, as already stated, three reliefs are sought, but if the plaintiff obtains a decree for a declaration that he is the owner of the property together with an order that the defendants should not interfere with his possession, he will get all that he requires, for that decree will be tantamount to a deelaration that the ejectment decree is not binding on him. In Deokali Roer v. Kedar Nath (1), it was held that an injune. tion is a consequential relief; and in Arunachalam Ohetty v. Rangasawmy Pillai (2) it was held that a suit for a declara. tion that a mortgage-deeree is not binding on the plaintiff and for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing the same is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of sestion 7, clause 4 (c) of the Act and an ad valorem fee is payable on the valuation fixed in the plaint. These authorities are distinctly in point in the present case, and it must be held, therefore, that the suit is one for a deslaration with consequential relief. In Barru v. Lachhman (3), it was held that in a suit under section 7, clause 4 (c) of the Court Fees Act the Courts are bound to ascept the valuation placed by the plaintiff upon the relief sought by him, even though such valuation is arbitrary and inadequately represents the value of the property. It was further held, in regard to the jurisdictional value of suits falling under section 7, clause 4 (c) of the Court Fees Ast, that as a general rule the value as determinable for the purposes of Court-fee and the value for purposes of jurisdiction were the same under section 8 of the zuits Valuation Act. In the present case all that was nesessary for the plaintiff to do was to value the relief sought by him. Instead of doing this, he valued the suit for the purposes of declaration separately and the suit as far as the injunction was concerned separately. He paid a Court fee of Rs. 10 so far as the declaration was and Rs. 78.0 so far as the conserned injunction was concerned, total Re. 17-8 0. It may be taken, however, that he valued the total relief sought at Rs. 23) and the plaint was, therefore, properly stamped, and the total value for the purposes of jurisdiction must be taken to be Rs. 230.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with

A recital in a deed of the purpose for which the money is borrowed may not by itself be sufficient to prove the purpose for which the money was borrowed and is not in itself sufficient against third parties, but it is clear evidence of the representation made to the creditor, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a responsible belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth then when proof of actual inquiry has become impossible the recital coupled with the circumstances will be sufficient evidence to support the deed. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 13th May 1921.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Appellant. Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT,-This is a first appeal in a suit for forcelceure brought by the plaintiff, Ram Saran, on the basis of a mortgage excepted in favour of his father, Ram Adhin, on 5th August 1910, by four parsons, namely, Dawan Singh, Mahabir Singh, Payag Singh Mahabir Singh and and Mabatal Singh. Dawan Singh were brothers and the other two executants were the scns of a deseased third brother, Udairaj Singh. Mahabir Singh died after the institution of the suit and is now represented by his son Mats Bakhsh Singh. Mahabal Singh is also dead and is represented by his widow, Musammat

BAN SABAN U. DAWAN SINGA.

Ram Kali. The other two executants are the first and third defendants to the suit. At the time of the execution of the mortgage the family was joint, and it is admitted that some of the mortgagors had sons who did not join in the execution of the mortgage. The suit was resisted, and has been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the mortgage being a mortgage of joint family property has not been proved to have been executed for legal necessity. The family was admittedly split up subsequently by a partition which took place in 1914. There was another branch of the family, that of Jagrup Singh, some members of which are in existence. They were not joined in the suit and it is stated that no slaim has been made against their share in the family property. No controversy as to them has been raised at the trial of the suit or in the appeal to this Court. The purpose for which the consideration of the deed in suit is said to have been borrowed is stated in the deed itself. It was for payment of a foreslosure decree held by one Pandit Uman Nath against the family prop-A preliminary deeree had been passed in August 190b against the executants of the mortgage deed in suit and against the three sons of one Mardan Singh whose name does not appear in the pedigree. One of these sons was named Pirthi Singh. The date originally fixed for the passing of a final decree was 17th February 1909 but time for payment was extended from time to time and, ultimately, 6th August 1910 was the date fixed for disposal of the case. One day before this date, namely, on 5th August, Uman Nath applied to the Court stating that he had received a sum of Rs. 1,585.8.0 in payment of his decree and asked that time might be given for the balance of Rs. 125 (Exhibit 3). Shortly afterwards, Pirthi Singh paid the balance of Rs. 125 and the case was settled. The learned Subordinate Judge has broshed aside the resital in the deed as being of no value whetever. This is not at all the correct position to take up. The resital may not by itself be sufficient to prove the purpose for which the money was borrowed -indeed, it is well settled that it is not in itself sufficient against third parties-but, as their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down in Nanda Lal Banga Chandra | Dhur Biswas v.

Jagat Kishore (1), the resilal is clear evidence of the representation made to the creditor, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a responsible belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then, when proof of astual enquiry has become impossible, the resital coupled with the sirsumstances will be sufficient evidence to support the deed. Their Lordships were dealing with the ease of a very old deed, and the same before them was, therefore, a much stronger ease than the present one, but it is an important element in the present case that the original ereditor, Ram Adhin, who could have given direct evidence of the representation made to him and of the enquiries he made, is no longer alive and his evidence is not available. We have here the encurrence of three eirenmstanses.

First, there was a decree outstanding against the mortgagors which, if not estisfied. would lead to the total loss of an important part of the family property.

Secondly, we have the execution of a mortgage which purports to be executed to pay off the money due under this desree.

Thridly, we have the fast that on the very day after the execution of the mortgage almost the entire amount outstanding under the decree is paid off and the creditor applies to the Court to give time for the payment of the small balance that remains.

These facts taken together are sufficient to raise a strong presumption that the representation contained in the deed was true and that the money was really borrowed to pay off the amount due under the decree. It is true that the amount paid to the was approximately double amount borrowed under the dead but this is what one would expest, as half the amount due to Uman Nath was presumably due from the executants and the other half from the sons of Mardan Singh. The plaintiff also produced a witness, Baijnath Singh, who was an attesting witness to the deed in suit and who swears that the money was borrowed for the purpose of paying off Uman Nath's deeres. He says that two of the executants, Dawan and Mahabal, came to him and that he himself at their request arranged the loan for the purpose. The learned Subordinate Judge has not in any way discredited this witness. His only comment is that any statement made by Mahabal and Dawan will not bind the minors. This comment entirely misses the significance of the evidence. There is no question of binding the minors. The question is, for what purpose a particular lcan was taken, and evidence which proves that just before the loan two of the borrowers came to an independent third party and asked him to arrange a loan for a particular purpose, and that he did arrange the loan in suit for that purpose is certainly valuable and important evidence to show that the money was borrowed for that purpose. only other evidence to which referense has been made is the evidence of Uman Nath, the ereditor. He was called by the plaintiff to prove the payment to him and he verified the application which he made to the Court. He stated that he did not know where the judgment debtors obtained the money but added that Pirthi Singh told bim that he had raised Rs. 8:0 by sale of some property and had borrowed Rs. 800 from the plaintiff. The second Rs. 800 must refer to the mortgage deed in suit for it has not been suggested any where that any other mortgage-deed was executed at this time in favour of Ram Adhin. After this, the witness proceeded to add that Pirthi Singh only told him this after the instituion of the present suit. In cross examination he stated that the whole of the Rs. 1,583 8 0 was actually raid to him by Pirthi Singh (the actual sum paid was Rs. 1,585.8.0 as is shown by the documents). It is true that this transaction took place eleven years ago but I am bound to say that the evidence of this witness produces on my mind the impression that he has not been entirely candid and that he is anxious to say as little in favour of the plaintiff as possible. quite possible, however, that the money was actually paid into his hands by Pirthi Sirgh. If it was so, no importance can be attached to this fact. Where two sets of parties jointly owed money it is probable that the actual payment to the creditor would be made in a lump sum by one of them. I do not think, therefore, that the evidence of Uman Nath really damages the plaintiff's oase. On the dense on the record I feel no doubt that the amount of the bond in suit was borrowed for the purpose of paying off Uman Nath's decree which was admittedly a purpose binding on the family property and I find this issue in favour of the plaintiff.

In view of this finding, the only other point which arises is the question of interest. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that, even if there was necessity for the deed, there was no necessity for the high rate of interest stated in it, which was two per cent. per mensem compound interest. The learned Counsel for the appellant has not pressed this point. He has stated that if the first issue is found in his favour he has no objection to the Court reducing the interest to one per cent, per mensem or any amount which the Court may consider reasonable.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and give the plaintiff a preliminary decree for foreclosure for the amount claimed, with this modification that, instead of compound interest at 24 percent per annum, simple interest at 12 percent. per annum, will be allowed. A foreclosure decree in the usual form will be prepared. The plaintiff appellant will get his costs in both Courts on the amount allowed.

Under the Hindu Law if in case of an adoption giving and taking is not established as a fact, no amount of acknowledgment would make one an adopted son. [p. 40, col. 1.]

No hard and fast rule can be laid down that a Hindu widow is entitled to a particular fraction of the income of her husband's estate as her maintenance. The circumstances of each case must be considered, such as, the value of the estate and its income, the position and status of the deceased husband and his widow, the expenses involved by the religious and other duties which she has to

JUDGMENT.

WOODBOFFE, J .- The plaintiff appellant is the widow of one Hari Cheran Base, a Mukhtar, who, starting life without means, amassed at length a considerable fortune which is the subject matter of this suit. He died on the 11th April 1910 leaving another widow, the first defendant, no natural children but grand-children by the plaintiff. The first defendant was childless. point at issue is, whether the second defen !ant is the adopted son of Hari Charan Bose. If not, then the plaintiff elaims possession of half the property of her late husband and, alternatively, in the event of its being held that the second defendant is the adopted son of the plaintiff's husband, then the plaintiff claims maintenance from the estate. There is no dispute that the dessased had no natural son and that the second defendant, an infant of about 12 years, was brought into the house in the beginning of Assar 12-9, that is, the end of Jane 189?, some 18 years before H. C. Boze's death and lived there all along as a foster son assording to the plaintiff or sines July, 1832 as an adopted ton according to the defendants. There can be no question that on the 3rd July 1892 an unregistered deed of authority for adoption was executed by H. C. Boss and that a registered deed of premission to a lopt was expented by H. C. Bose on the 6th August 1892. Some 12 days before the alleged adoption a registered deed of gift of his son was executed by one Abhoy Oharan Bose, the natural father of the second defendant, in favour of the first defendant Srimati Brojo Mohini Dassi. There is evidence which the Judge has accepted that the boy was given and taken in adoption on the 18th August 1892 and that homa was performed later on the lat Ostober 1892.

There is evidence also that H. C. Bose and others treated the boy as his son even before the date next mentioned. It is admitted that it is shown that from some six years after the date of the alleged adoption Hari Charan Bose spoke of and treated the second defendant as his adopted son: for, as regards this, we have dccumentary evidence. In 1:08 the second defendant, who was then about 17 years old, married as the adopted son of H. C. Bosc. The eard of invitation described him as sor. On the 11th April 1910 the second defendanl's adoptive father died. Not till six years later, that, is on the 10th April 1916, this suit was instituted. According to the plaintiff's evidence she had not been receiving anything from the estate from about two or three years before 1918. It must be admitted that the above mentioned facts constitute a strong case against the plaintiff.

The latter's case is that she and her so widow were on bad terms. The second widow, the first defendant, was shildless and jealous. To satisfy her maternal cravings she took the second defendant during his infancy from his father in exchange for money (which is denied) and brought him up and introduced him into the family as a foster son. There was it is said (not withstanding the execution of the dosuments above mentioned) no actual adoption though after some years H. C. Bass came to speak of the defendant No. 2 as his adopted son. he was a possibly thinking (though Makhtar) that such admissions were sufficient to make the defendant his adopted son or would be operative in fact for that purpose. They, after the death of the plaintiff's hasband, the first defendant took advantage of the fast of the presence of the second defendant in the family and set up the alleged adoption with the object of depriving the plaintiff of her right of inheritance and her children of their reversionary interest. .

The first defendant, on the other hand, alleges that the second defendant is the adopted son of H. C. Bose and not a mere foster son, as alleged; that the plaintiff has admitted that fact and was aware of the adoption all along. The heirship of the plaintiff is denied and as regards maintenance and residence it is eaid that sufficient provision has already been made. The defendant claims property No. 18 in the schedule to the plaint as her own property stating that it is no part of the estate of her husband. The written statement of the second defendant is on the same lines with greater details upon the issue of maintenance.

Eighteen issues were framed; but we are now concerned with four, viz., (1) Whether the defendant No. 2 was validly adopted, and if not (for otherwise the issue does not arise); (2) Is property No. 18 part of the estate of H. C. Bose. Then, if the appellant fails to show that the judgment in appeal is wrong as to the adoption then; (3) Is the plaintiff entitled to get maintenance, and (4) arrears of same.

No question of law arises on this issue of adoption the question being one purely of fact. It is common ground that if giving and taking is not established as a fact no amount of asknowledgment would make the second defendant an adopted son. The question is one of fast, namely, what occurred on the 18th August and 1st October 18.2, when the adoption and subsequent ceremonies were performed. There is no question here as to whether the adoption was by the first defendant and whether a wife can adopt even with permission during her husband's life time for the facts (if true) are that the taking was by H. C. Bose. The only question which arises is, whether the evidence to that effect is true. There is no question whether subsequent ceremonies were necessary. The ease made is that the parties who are Kayasthas are Shudras. It is not said that religious ceremonies such as the dattaka homa were necessary but it is denied as a fact that such ceremonies were performed. it being said that the allegations made in this respect are not true. The issue of fact is, whether there was a giving and taking on the 18th August 1892 and ceremonies on the 1st October 1892 or not.

The learned Judge has held that the defendant No. 2 was validly adopted, that the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 200 a month, and that the same should be a charge upon the immoveable properties of H. O. Bose and that there are in fact no arrears due. From this decision the plaintiff appeals both on the question of adoption and maintenance and there is a cross-appeal to the respondents on the question of maintenance. As regards the probabilities, it is said that it is improbable that the defendant No. 2 should have been adopted for H. C. Bose was then rich and it is said that he asked three persons to give their sons in adoption, viz., Ackhoy Kumar Bose and Gobordhan Bose and a relative Bhuban Mohini Dasi. Yet they all refused, It is the plaintiff's case that even the natural father of the boy, a very poor man, was at first unwilling and only gave way when the boy became ill and on the terms that if the boy would be sured by H. O. Bose he would be given in adoption. The refusal is not contested, but it is asked is this likely except on the assumption that they were not asked to give their son in adoption by H. C. Bose but to give one of their children as foster son for the defendant No. 1, a very different matter. It is to be observed that Gobordhan who is alive is not called. It is said that he is a Pleader of defendant No. 2. Is it likely, it is said, that this rish man had to get a son from a poor vendor of sweetmeate, What happened, it is suggested, is that the latter made a gift of his son to the defendant No. I and that was all. There alleged. The giving and taking as Anumatipatras were given with a view to adoption after death. Then it is suggested that the defendant No. 1 worked upon the mind of her husband and got him to recognise the foster son as adopted son some six years after the date of the alleged adoption, If it is asked, how a Mukhtar who had (in whatever way) consented to the defendant No. 2 being his adopted son could leave the matter in so uncertain and voidable a state as the plaintiff's story suggests, it is replied that at that time it was too late to go through a regular adoption, though it is admitted that strictly there was no impediment, it is argued that Bhadro is an unlucky month to make any gift and that it is not likely, therefore, that the giving and taking in adoption took place in that month that the persons, relations or Brahmins who might be expected to be invited on such an present. were not occasion Gobordhan, Probash, Prokash, Mrinalini Dasi, Hemangini Dasi, Surendra, Jogendra, Upendra and Akshoy K. Bose. It is said that there is no entry of any gift to Brah. mins in the assount nor is the deed of gift attested by any Brahmin. In the assount of 3rd Bhadra (18th August) there is no relevant entry, the only entry relevant to the saleged adoption being an entry of 23rd Sraban (6th August) touching deposit made by defendant No. 1 for the purpose of adopting a son. This, it is suggested, was owing to pressure of defendant No. 1 on H. C. Bose who may have been willing that his wife should prepare a deed of permission to adopt but it does not follow that the adoption took place. The giving and taking in adoption is spoken to by both the natural and adoptive mother of the second defendant, Srimati Padmamukhi, second wife of Bama Charan Bose, the brother of H. C. Bose, Chandra Bhusan Chaudhury, the sister's son of defendant No. 1, and an employee of the second defendant, Srish Chandra Biswas.

the second defendant, Srish Chandra Biswas. It is a point worthy of consideration, in support of the contention that such giving as there may have been was only by deed, that the deed of gift of the 18th August 1892 sasts doubt on the oral evidence in that, if the document was executed after the giving and taking that fact would have been recorded, but it was not, that if the taking had been as alleged by H. C. Bose, his name would have appeared as donee; that if H. C. Bose had really been present and took the shild the resital of permission having been given was unnecessars; that the deed recites that the adoption was said to be "by you," that is, the first defendant, and that the deed resites that the boy was taken in adoption after the performance of the rites and eeremonies prescribed by the Hindu Law when no such rites were performed on that day and homa is said to have been done about a month and a half after the deed. The learned Judge has dealt with these arguments. Farther, it is note. worthy as regards this last allegation it was first made when the written statement was amended under order of the 3rd April 1917. It is also a substantial point that it is unlikely that H. C. Bose was driven by the refusal of his relatives to give a son in adoption, had to seek through a barber an adoptive son from a man in such a position as that of the natural father of defendant No. 2 who was a sweetmeat vendor without position or means. This last seems established whether he was, as the plaintiff says, a street bawker or had a shop as the respondents say. This fact is really the chief basis of the attack on the defendants' case, We have, however, not thought it necessary to call upon the respondents because it seems to us that whatever ground may exist for the criticism passed by the learned Vakil for the appellant on the story of the adoption and the circumstances which led up to it, we have the fast of the adoption spoken to by the witnesses named in their evidence which the learned Judge has described of a con. vincing character; and it is an undoubted fast that H. C. Bose deslared that [the second defendant was his son and treated him as such. This appears not only from documents such as the conveyance. Exhibit I of the 19th February 1:99 where H. C. Bose describes the second defendant as his son, the school register, and so on, but from the evidence of reliable persons such as Sir David Yule, and Mr. MeNair, to whom H. C. Bose introduced the second defendant as bis son. Babu Sabodh Chandra Mitter, an Attorney of this Court, also says he knew the defendant No. 2 to be the adopted son of H. C. Bose. We have also the fact that the second defendant lived all along in the house and was treated as a son and the fact that there was a written registered permission to adopt and a registered deed of gift by the natural father. As the learned Judge says. it is natural that H. C. Bose, who was an orthodox Hindu of the old type, should adopt a son. It is not explained when the plaintiff first assertained that the defendant No. 2 alleged himself to be the adopted son and why she took no action at an earlier date than 1916 some eix years after her husband's death. I think also that there is some ground for the learned Judge's observation that the plaintiff did not call evidence Farther, for what it is available to her. worth, the plaintiff appears to have admitted the defendant No. 2's ticle as heir. It is said that this may have been because, though not admitting his title, she may have at first desired to respect her husband's wishes-for there is no doubt that he wished the defend. ant No. 2 to be recognised as his son. It may be she changed her mind on account of disputes as to payment of money. It is not possible, however, to say that the body of evidence is overcome by the enggestion that all that happened was that the defendant No. 2 was brought in as a foster son that no actual giving took place but that about 1898, 1599 H. O. Bose determined to regard him as his adopted sonl and thought KRISHNA BHAMINI DASI O. BRAJA MOHINI DASI.

that an asknowledgment was sufficient to make up for the want of a proceeding of giving and taking. This is the less possible when the learned Judge who has heard the evidence has accepted it. I am of opinion, therefore, that this part of the appellant's ease fails; that we should hold that there is no sufficient ground for reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge that the second respondent is the adopted son of H C. Bose. It is on this finding unnecessary to discuss the question whether property No. 18 is the property of the estate or of the first respondent.

The remaining question of maintenance divides itself into two points, viz, whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance, if so, what and whether any arrears are due. The respondent's cross appeal urges that plaintiff's husband had in as the life time provided for her residence and maintenance by the setting aside of specific properties and funds she is not entitled to elaim maintenance against his assets without first surrendering her interest under the said gift. It is not objected that the Judge was wrong in awarding the sum of Rs. 200 a month. At the hearing the eross-appeal was not pressed, the learned Vakil for the respondent stating that he was not opposed to the appellant receiving what the Jadge has given her but to her receiving more. The question then is one of fact, namely, the amount of the maintenance to be awarded.

As regards the amount of maintenance it has been held that no hard and fast rale can be laid down that a widow is entitled to a particular fraction of the income. The circumstances of each case must be considered, such as, the value of the estate and its income, the position and status of the deceased busband and his widow, the expenses involved by the religious and other duties which she has to discharge, and so forth, together with (as is here the case) that the appellant has been given a separate property for her maintenance. The Judge on a detailed examination of the facts has fixed a sum of Rs. 200 a month and held that there are in fact no arrears due.

It is taken as sommon ground (however saleulated) the de. 32,000 is the net yearly insome from improveable property. The respondent says that from this must be deducted interest on account of loans. This the appellant does not admit. The latter under the deeree gets Rs. 200 a month in addition to the sum of about Rs. 75 which she gets from immoveable property. She claims Rs. 750. The maintenance awarded is about 1/10th and it may be less of the respondent's (No. 2) income. From evidence it appears that at one time, even during the life of her husband, the appellant got Rs. 200 a month and after his death the respondent No. 1 used to pay Rs. 200 a month over and above the income of her immoveable property. This rate appears to have been paid until shortly before the suit and by consent after the suit at the same rate. The cross-appeal, as I have said, is not pressed. The learned Pleader for the respondent is only concerned to see that the plaintiff appellant does not get any more than the learned Judge has awarded her. With the Rs. 75 this makes Rs. 275 a month. Seeing that the appellant used to reseive the same sum of Rs. 200 years ago and the present lowering in the value of money I think that something should be added to the sum awarded. I think that this should be Rs. 75 so that the appellant will then have, including income from immoveable property, the sum of Rs. 350 a month. With this exception, the deeree is affirmed and the appeal is dismisted. As the appellant fails on the main point, the discussion of which has occupied all the days of hearing except some portion of the last, the appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

The defendant firm placed an indent for the purchase of certain goods with the plaintiff firm. One of the clauses of the indent was as follows:—

The plaintiff firm after shipment of goods drew two bills of exchange against the defendant firm which the latter accepted but refused to pay on maturity. The plaintiff firm accordingly sued them and their claim was based, in the first instance, upon the accepted but unpaid bills, and, in the alternative, they sued for the price of the goods and

(2) that, therefore, the defendant firm could not demand that the dispute must be referred to arbitration under the provisions of the indent, and were not entitled to get a stay of proceedings under paragraph 18 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code, [p. 44, col. 1]

Missellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th April 1921.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Mr. Frem Lal,
for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, refusing to stay proceedings in a suit under rule 18 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The facts of the case, which are given fully in the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, are briefly as follows:--

On the 22ad January 1920 the defendant firm appellant placed an indent for the purchase of 10 bales of white shirting of estain specified qualities, July to September 1920 shipments, with the plaintiff firm respondent. The terms governing the contract are those given in the indent form-vide Exhibit Pon the record. The sellers, Messrs. Jaffe and Sons (the firm of the plaintiffs), after shipment of goods, drew two bills of exchange against the buyers on the 19th May and let June 1920, respectively, at 60 days' sight. These were presented by the National Bank of Indie, Limited, Delhi, to the defendant firm; who accepted them on the 9th June and the 23rd June, respectively, but subsequently refused to pay them upon maturity. The plaintiff firm accordingly sued them and their slaim was based, in the first instance, upon the accepted but unpaid bills, and in the alternative they sued for the price of the goods and for certain expenses. Clause 15 of the indent form provides that if any claim or dispute arises in connection with this contract, unlere an amicable cettlement oun be arrived at, it must be referred to arbitra. tion in Delhi, in accordance with the Survey and Arbitration Rules of the Delhi Hindus. tani Mercantile Association. Relying upon this clause the defendant says that the dispute must be referred to arbitration, and, therefore, an application was made to the Court to stay proceedings under rule 18 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Oode. The Court refused to stay proceedings holding that the slaim was primarily on the basis of accepted, but unpaid, drafts as contemplated by section 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

In our opinion, the order of the lower Court is clearly right. It is not denied that the bills of exchange were accepted by the defendant firm. Section 32 of the Negoliable Instruments Act lays down that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the acceptor before maturity of a bill of exchange is bound to pay the amount thereof at maturity, according to the apparent tenor of the acceptance. The suit as brought upon the acceptance. The suit as brought upon the accepted, but unpaid, bills of exchange is, therefore, a suit governed by this section and is not a suit for damages or for the price of the goods at all. Ganesh Das.

BAYAPATI VENKATASUBBA RAO U. KALAPATAPU MABATANA BAO.

Ishar Das v. Durga Dat-Jagan Nath (1) which is relied upon by respondent's Counsel, is, in our opinion, distinguishable because that was a suit for damages and not one based upon an accepted bill of exchange which had not been paid. Moreover, clause (i) of the indent form is as follows:—

In our opinion this clearly shows that drafts must be assepted on presentation and paid at maturity in spite of any objection which the indentors may have regarding or on account of any variation whatever from the terms of the indent. If any such objection is taken, it must be settled by arbitration in the way subsequently provided, but the accepted drafts must be paid at matarity whether there be any objection or not. Counsel for the appellant has referred to section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and has urged that either the bills of exchange were assepted without consideration or for a consideration which subsequently failed, and that, therefore, his clients were not liable. It will be open to them, of course, to show that the bills of exchange were accepted without consideration or to raise any other defence which they may be advised to do, but prima facie the plaintiff firm has a good case under section 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and, in our opinion, the lower Court's order refusing to etay proceedings is correct, and we dismiss the appeal with cost.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1938 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, dated the 4th Saptember 1920, in Miscellaneous Appeal Sait No. 2 of 1920, (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 13 of 1919 on the file of the District Court, Kistna), perferred against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Masulipatam, dated the 6th November 1919, in Execution Appeal No. 3210 of 1919, in Execution Petition No. 115 of 1919 in Original Suit No. 832 of 1915.

FACIS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Kamanni, for the Petitioner.—The order of the lower Appellate Court is wrong as the judgment debtor made no application to Court under Order XXI, rule 89, to set aside. No doubt he paid the money and filed the lodgment schedule, but there was no prayer to set aside the sale.

Mr. K. Krishnamachariar, for the Raspondents.—Under the circumstances an oral application might be presumed vide Mariappa Annam v. Hari Hara Iyer (1), Vannisami Thevar v. Periayaswami Thevar (2).

SUNDAR SINGH &. SUNDAR SINGH,

JUDGMENT .- In this case the learned Subordinate Judge has set aside a sale under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Oode though no application for it had been made by the judgment debtor to the Court in time. The money, no doubt, had been paid into Court in time but no application was made as required by rule 89, Civil Procedure Code. There was only a lodgment schedule filed into Court along with the money as required by rule 131 of the Civil Rules of Practice whenever any money is paid into Court. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that this lodgment schedule can be treated as equivalent to the application required by rule 89. I regret I am unable to accept this view. There is no prayer in the lodgment schedule to set seide the sale under rule 89 and I do not see how, without such a prayer, it can be treated as an application under the rule.

It was suggested that an oral application should be presumed to have been made to the Court under the circumstances in this ease and reliance is placed on the judgment of Tyabji, J., in Mariappa Annam v. Hari Hara Iyer (1) and on the case Vannisami Thevar v. Periagaswami Thevar (2) where the former eass is eited and its effect confess that I do not understand what is meant by presuming an oral application. If it is a presumption of fast, it is rebutted in this case, as it is found by the (District) Munsif that no oral application had been made and the Subordinate Judge has not set aside that finding. If the presumption is one of law, I do not know of any justification for such a presumption. The finding here being that no application was made in time in the present case either oral or in writing, one necessary condition for action under rule t9 fails and the order of the Subordinate Judge setting aside the same must itself be set aside. The order of the District Mansif is restored with costs here and in the Court below.

The initial presumption in the case of Khatris is that they follow their personal law. [p. 46, col. 2.]

The Khatris of Mauza Salina in the Moga Tahsil of the Ferozepore District follow Hindu Law in matters of alienation and succession. [p. 45, col, 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, at Ferozepore, dated 23rd June 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Ferozepore, dated the 2nd April 1917.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The facts of this case are so fully given in the judgments of the two Courts below that it is not necessary to give them in any detail for the purposes of this second appeal. It is only necessary to state that the parties are by caste Khatris, and residents of Mauza Salina in the Moga Tabsil; that Natha Singh, defendant No. 1, made a gift of the land in dispute in favour of his daughter Musammat Rup Kaur, defendant No. 2, and that thereupon the plaintiff Sunder Singh instituted the present suit for a declaration to the effect that the gift dated the 19th December executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 was without necessity and consideration and that it should not affect the plaintiff's reversionary rights after the donor's death, The plaintiff alleged that the parties were agriculturiete and were governed by agricultural enstom under which a gift could not be validly made in favour of a daughter. The plaint also aversed that Musammat Rup Kaur was a pichhlag and was not the legitimate daughter of Natha Singh. The main plea raised in defence was that the parties being Khatris were governed by Hindu Law and not by agricultural costom. The main question to be decided in the case, therefore, was whether the parties were governed by agricultural custom or by their personal law. Both the Courts below have exhaustively dealt with the question in their decisions in the light of the evidence produced by the parties and of the decided cases relied upon by them, and have held that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the parties are governed by the ordinary custom of agriculturists and have dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, preferred this second appeal.

Dr. Narang in arguing the appeal has taken us through the entire evidence on the record and has drawn our attention to certain decided cases. After considering the evidence and examining the authorities on the subject we find curselves in entire accord with the view taken by the Courts below, and we are unable to accept the contention raised by the learned Counsel before us.

As held by the lower Appellate Court, the following facts may be taken to have been established by the plaintiff, namely:—

1. That the parties are Sikhe, that they have long hairs and also wear iron kares, that they follow the "Garanth Sahib," and that possibly they have discarded the Brahmanical thread.

 That their ancestor Bagh Singh held and owned 900 kanals of land as a proprietor in the village.

3. That karewa and anand marriages were in vogue in the community.

On the findings recorded by the Courts below the plaintiff has failed to prove the following, namely:—

(a) That the families to which the parties belong formed a compact section of the village community.

(b) That the parties ploughed and tilled with their own hands; that the parties depend entirely upon agriculture and have no other occupation.

As remarked by the Court of first instance, a custom without instance is inconcievable. Not a single instance has been cited to show that the ancestors of the parties followed agricultural custom in disregard of their personal law in matters of alienation and succession.

In the case of Harnam Singh v. Hardevi (i) the following fasts were brought out, namely:—

1. That the families were established in the village since 1823.

2. The means of subsistence agriculture,

Not shown that these Sodhis exercise priestly functions.

4. Janeo abandoned,

5. Marriage by karewa and anand practised.

In addition to these facts, there were certain instances also established and yet it was held that the initial presumption in the same of Khatris that they follow the Hindu Law was not displaced. The facts of this case were almost similar to those of the present case. The rule laid down in the reported case is fully applicable to the present case and we may take it as a gaide for our decision. There are several other cases which have been referred to and discussed in the judgments of the Courts below, but it is not necessary to cite and diseass each of them separately. It is enough to say that the Courts below have arrived at a right conclusion.

In this view the appeal is dismissed with Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, liability of, to sale in execution of decree obtained by sixteen-annas landlord for its own arrears—Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII of 1869).

An occupancy holding in Sylhet, where the Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, VIII of 1869, is in force, is liable to be sold in execution of a decree obtained by the 16-annas landlords for its own arrears. [p. 47, col. 1.] NAJAF SHAH C. BANGU BAH.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sylhet, dated the 31st of July 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, Habigunge, dated the 5th of April 1919.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appel-

JUDGMENT.—This appeal somes from the District of Sylhet in which Bengal Act VIII of 1869 is still in force and is directed against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District by which he has held that an occupancy holding may not be sold in execution of a decree obtained by the sixteen annas landlords for its own arrears.

In the case of Chandra Benode Kundu v. Sheikh Ala Buz (1) recently decided by a Special Bench of this Court and reported as Chandra Benode Kundu v. Sheikh Ala Buz (1), it has been shown that in 1834, 1:45 and again in 1855, it was held by the Sadar Dewani Adalat that in Bengal occupancy holdings might be sold in execution of decrees for money provided that the cale was at the instance of or with the consent of the landlord.

It does not appear that this general principle was affected or modified either by Act X of 185) or Act VIII of 1869.

In the same case it has further been pointed out that, when it is said that an occupancy holding is not transferable except by custom or local usage, the true meaning of these words is that to the transfer of an occupancy holding, in the absence of custom or local usage to the contrary, the consent of the landlord is necessary.

If an occupancy holding is transferable with the content of the landlord in execution of a decree for money, a fortiori, it is transferable at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for its own arrears.

The allegation of the landlord that satisfaction of the decree could not be obtained by execution against the person and moveable property of the judgment-debtor was apparently not traversed in either Court below.

We, therefore, deeree this appeal and set saids the orders of both Courts below.

JUDGMENT. - The plaintiff in this case sued for the recovery of Re. 1,500 due upon a bond. The execution of the bond was admitted, but the defence was that the bond. debt had been incorporated in a subsequent contract, and that the plaintiff's suit could lie merely upon this contract. This defence has not been assepted by the lower Courts which have held that the subsequent contract remained insemplete owing to the defendant's own action. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred and argued by Mr.

Gokal Chand Narang.

The bond in question is dated 1914. In 1916 the defendant, Najaf Shah, exceuted a lease of land for 14 years in favour of che Amir Chand. On the same day he sold to the plaintiff and other ereditors the right to recover the lease-money from Amir Chand in payment of their debts. Najaf Shab, however, refused to perform his contract with Amir Chand and to deliver possession of the land. The whole scheme, therefore, for payment of the debts fell through. These being the facts, Mr. Gokal Chand contends that there was a novation of the original bond contract by the agreement whereby the debts were made resoverable from Amir Chand's lease-money, and that under the operation of section 62 of the Contract Act the plaintiff could not fall back upon his original sause of action. He has cited as authorities Bhagat Ram Ganpat Charju Ram (1), Bhag Bhari v. Gurar Mal (2), Allah Ditta v. Nazar Din (3). He has also referred to authorities to show that the plaintiff could have sued Amir Chand, the lessee, and have recovered his debt from him. Authorities cited on this point Dwarka Nath v. Friya Nath (4) and Deb Sadhan Mandal Narain Dutt V. Ram Ohunilal Ghose] (5). None of these. arguments or authorities applies the present case as it is clear that the defendant, Najaf Shab, by refusing to hand over his land to Amir Chand, as he promised to do, disabled himself from performing his promise that the plaintiff should recover his money from Amir Chand, The judgment which, in our opinion, applies exactly to the present ease is Raja Ram v. Mehar Khan (6) which is an authority based on similar facts that the plaintiff is entitled to reseird his sale-contract and revert to his previous consideration. We consider that the defend. ants cannot oppose the plaintiff's claim either in law or in equity and we dismiss their appeal with costs.

FAOTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. S. Naray ina Aiyar, for the Appal. lant .- The notice determined the defendant's tenancy on the ground of forfeiture. No question of the adequacy of the notice arises under section 106 of the Transfer of Prop. erly Act. The lower Court should have decreed possession to plaintiff applying section III of the Ast. Sivarima Aiyar v. Alagappi Orelly (1).

The lease deed does not provide for com. pansation to be paid to the plaintiff. Besides, the period of the lease has expired. The defendant is not entitled to ask for time to remove the saperstructure.

The respondent was not represented.

JUDGMENT .- The Sabordinate Judge has dismissed plaintiff's suit to resover posses. sion of lands leased to first defendant on the ground that the notice given by plaintiff was not an adequate notice under section 103 of the Transfer of Property Act. learned Sabordinate Jadge has, however, omitted all considerations of section 111, Transfer of Property Ast, and it appears to us that the notice, Exhibit B, was, a suffisient compliance with that section, vide Sivarama Aiyar v. Alagappa Ohetiy (1). By that notice he unequivocally expressed his intention to determine the lease on the ground of forfeiture. On this ground he is entitled to a decree for possession. It is further argued that plaintiff need pay no compensation and that first defendant is not entitled to remove his buildings after the expiry of the tenancy. The terms of the tenancy comprised in Exhibits A and I expressly preslude all compensation, for first defendant agreed that none should be elaimed. The Subordinate Judge has found that first defendant would be entitled to remove his buildings within a reasonable time and we are inclined to agree with him in the special circumstances of this case. There has been some difference of opinion in this Court as to whether section 103 (h) of the Transfer of Property Ast is exhaustive or marely enabling. In Angammal v. Aslami Sah b (2) two Jadges were of one opinion and two of another, but in a more resent eass (Fall Bench) reported in Thavasi Ammil v. Salai Ammal (3) four Judges were of opinion that, in that case, the tenants should be allowed a reasonable time (six months) within which to remove the superstructure but the question was not fully discussed. The facts in that case were not entirely similar. but we are prepared to apply the decision here on equitable grounds, more especially as it is in assordance with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. We would other. wise have referred this to a Fall Bench for an authoritative interpretation of section 103 (h), were it not also that the respondent is not represented in this Court.

The result will be that the appeal will be allowed in part, and plaintiff will have a deeres for possession of the plaint property and meene profits and costs as decreed by the Munsif, but first defendant will be allowed three months within which to remove his buildings.

Respondent will pay plaintiff's sosts of this second ar peal.

cl. (c) (ii)-Evidence recorded by Commissioner appointed for local investigation, value of -Parties agreeing to accept evidence recorded by Commissioner -Action of Judge on such agreement, if without jurisdiction.

The plaintiff after having obtained a decree in a suit for recovery of a lease-hold Colliery, claimed mesne profits and damages for malicious or negligent injury to the Colliery from the judgment-debtor. After the passing of the decree in favour of the decree-holder the judgment-debtor's Solicitor had written to the decree-holder's Attorney offering to deliver possession of the mine and requesting the decree-holder to take steps to obtain possession as early as possible Notice was given by this letter that in case of neglect the Colliery with its machinery and accessories would remain at the judgment.debtor decree-holder's risk and the stopped working the mine. The decree-holder, however, had taken no steps to obtain possession till the following year:

Held, that the decree-holder was not entitled, in respect of the period after notice, to damages in the nature of mesne profits: that as the judgment. debtor had stopped working the mine the coal which the judgment-debtor might have got was still there and belonged to the decree-holder and that the question, therefore, whether, under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code the omission to give notice of relinquishment through the Court under Order XX, rule 12 (1) (c) (ii), Civil Procedure Code, left the judgment-debtor liable for mesce profits

The definition of mesne profits in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, includes profits which the defendant "might with ordinary diligence have received." But mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case [p. 52, col. 1.]

did not arise [p. 62, cols, 1 & 2.]

For the purpose of ascertaining mesne profits mining differs from agricultural operations on the surface. [p. 52, col. 1.]

A relinquishments or stoppage of work with notice to the decree-holder is not in itself an improper or negligent act for which the judgment. debtor is liable in damages or mesne profits, [p. 52,

A charge of improper working of a Colliery should not be decided on the evidence recorded by a Commissioner appointed to make a local investigation. But where the parties agree to a decision on a point by a Judge on the evidence recorded by a Commissioner to make a local investigation the evidence must be treated as evidence recorded by a Commissioner appointed for the purpose of examining witnesses. [p. 53, col. 2; p. 54, col. 1.]

It is open to the parties to a suit to agree as to the materials to be placed before the Judge for his decision and if the Judge acts on such agreement he does not thereby delegate his functions as a

Judge. [p. 54, col. 1]

Where the gogment-debtors are in possession under a bond and claim of title and not "without any colour of citle" or "in a manner wholly un. authorised or un'swin!," they are entitled to certain allowances in the 213255ment of mesne profits and damages. [p. 55, col. 1.]

In India there is no reason why the measure of damages should depend on the nature of the remedy sought, or why any distinction should be made in this respect between a suit for damages for trespass and a suit for accounts. [p. 55, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Burdwar, dated the 10th of December 1918.

Babus Samotul Chandra Dutt and Girija Frosunna Roy, for the Appellants.

Babus Lepin Behari Ghose II, Satindra Nath Mukherjee, and Harendra Kumar Sarbadhakari,

for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.- This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 16th December 1918. The proceedings were in continuation of a suit brought by the respondent or his predecessor in interest as plaintiffs against the appellants or their predecessors as defendants for the recovery of a lease-hold Colliery known as the Chatterpathat Colliery. In the result, on the 18th May 1914, the Privy Council reversed the deeree of the High Court, dated 4th June 1912, in favour of the appellants and restored the deeree of the Trial Court, dated September 8th 1969, in favour of the respondent [Roghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (1).] The question which now arises relates merely to the amount of the indemnity which the unsuccessful party in the contest should pay to the successful party.

The respondent, as decree holder, claims damages from the appellants, as judgmentdebtore, first, in the nature of mesne profits and secondly, in the nature of damages for malicious or negligent injury to the Colliery,

The application for assessment of these damages was made by the respondent on the 15th June 1915. It appears that the appellants asked for details; and in a petition filed on 19th January 1916, the respondent gave "details" of the amount of damages and wasilat damage to the Colliery by entting pillare, etc., etc." The damage as then estimated amounted to Rs. 57,577 including four items: (1) Damage to the machineries, plants, tools, etc., estimated at Re. 14,88%; (2) meene profits with interest, estimated at Rs. 29,000, (3) an item of Rs. 12,000 said to be detailed in Bankim Babu's report which we have not seen; and (4) a small item of Rs 1,089 for stacked soal removed by the defendants.

The decree of the Trial Court in the suit provided for the ascertainment of wasilat or meene profits. The application of 15th June refers to section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, no doubt on the footing that the injurious damages claimed were consequential on the working of the mine by the appellants during their period of possession under the decree of the High Court. No objection was raised on the appellants' behalf in this connection.

Sabordinate Judge has The learned awarded the respondent a sum of Rs. 14,000 on the ground of damage done by outting or robbing pillars, and a further sum of Rs. 31,400 on the ground that the appellants maliciously brought about what is called a junction between the river Noonia and the mine. He has further awarded the respondent a sum of Rs. 76,2 5 on the footing of mesne profits, the calculation being as follows:-Rs. 1,21,720 for the price of the coal extracted at the pit's mouth less a sum of Rs. 31,255 being the costs of getting the soal and raising it to the surface and less a further sum of Rs. 14,180 representing the royalties payable under the lease in respect of the period for which the appellants were in possession. amount awarded to the respondent comes to Rs. 1,21,685, made up of Rs. 76,285 for mesne profits and Rs. 45,400 as additional damagee,

A further claim by the respondent on the ground of damage to machinery and counter-claims by the appellant for compensation for the purchase of new machinery and for sinking a new pit have, in our opinion, been rightly disallowed and call for no further mention. As will appear, we shall allow the appellants some compensation for dewatering.

Mesne profits are claimed in respect of two periods, firstly, from the 2nd September 1903 inclusive, and, secondly, from the 28th July 1912 to the 22nd May 1915 inclusive. The appellants were not in possession when the respondent's suit was instituted in July 1908. Apparently, however, they had previously been in possession as purchasers of the lease-hold interest in execution of a decree which they had obtained for their royalties and they resovered possession on the September 1908 under a decree which they obtained in a possessory suit, and held it till they were ousted under the desree of the Trial Court. The appellants, therefore, admit possession during the first of the two periods. As regards the second period, there is no dispute as to the date on which they regained possession under the decree of the High Court but they assert that, after the Privy Council delivered judgment, they relinquished possession on the 31st May 1914. As a matter of fast, they closed their workings on that date but the respondent argues that their possession must be regard. ed as baving continued until the Court formally delivered passession to him on the 23.d May 1915. The question is of some litele importanse.

It appears that, on the 4th June 1914, the respondent filed a patition in the Court below praying that, until a certified copy of the decree in Privy Council appeal was brought and possession was taken on the basis thereof, a temporary injunation might be issued on the appellants and others restraining them from doing anything detrimental to the disputed pits and disposing of the machineries, pumps, pipes, fittings, etc. On 6th June 1914, the appellants. replied by a petition denying the allegations made in the respondent's patition and disputing his right to an injunction. The order-sheet shows that on the same day, the 6th June, the appellants undertook not to remove any moveables. Then, on the 11th June, an order was made stating that the undertaking had been assepted by the respondent and that the prayer for an injune. tion was, therefore, disallowed.

Meanwhile, the appellants had been in communication with the Inspector of Mines. On 6th June 1914, the inspector addressed a letter to the respondent's Attorney enclosing a report by the Junior Inspector, Mr. Turnbull, dated 5th June, which report stated that the mine in question had been closed on let June 1914, in consequence of a decree given against the appellants by the Privy Conneil. We were not told that any reply was sent to the Inspector's letter by the respondent. On 17th June 1914, Dwarks Nath Kretry, as agent of the appellants, each to the Chief Inspector of Mines a notice that the workings of the Chatterpathat Colliery had been closed from the 1st instant, asking him to send the necessary forms to be filled up, and further stating that the plan would be submitted in due time.

On the 7th July 1914, the appellant's Solicitor wrote to the respondent's Attorney offering to deliver possession and requesting the respondent to take steps to obtain possession as early as possible. Notice was given by this letter that in case of neglect the Colliery with its machinery and accessories would remain at the respondent's risk; the respondent, however, took no steps to obtain possession till the following year. He waited apparently till the decree of the Privy Council or the records or both reached the Court below.

Nearly a year, therefore, elapsed between the date on which the appellants ceased to work the mine and the date on which the respondent took possession. The respondent urges that he is not responsible for the delay because the appellants did not give notice of relinquishment through the Coart under O. XX, r. 12 (1) (c) (ii), Civil Prosedure Code. It is not, however, disputed that the notice given directly by the appellants to the respondent reached him. He did not say that he would not accept notice of relinquishment unless it was sent to him through the Court. He remained inactive and did nothing. It may be strange that the appellants said nothing about relinquishment in their reply to the application for an injunction, but the facts are too slear to make that of much eignificance.

As no ccal was extracted from the mine after the 31st May 1914, we are of opinion that the respondent is not entitled in respect of the subsequent period to damages in the nature of mesne profits. The definition of mesne profits in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code includes profits which the defendant "might with ordinary diligence have received." But "mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the ease:" Grick Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Koy (2). Mining differs from agricultural operations on the surface. The still there and now belongs to the respondent under the lease. The question, therefore, whether, under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, the omission to give notice through the Court left the appellant liable for mesne profits does not arise.

As regards the effect of the delay in taking possession on the other damages claimed, it cannot be contended with success that the delay has not prejudiced the respondent. The relinquishment or stoppage of work with notice to the respondent was not in itself an improper or negligent act and the delay has made it impossible or difficult for him to say that the condition of the mine when he took it over was due to any impropriety in the mode in which it had been worked by the appellants or to any act of intentional malice on their part.

The report of the Serishtadar who gave the respondent possession on behalf of the Court has appended to it a note signed by Sudhir Mohon Chatterjee, a First Class Colliery Manager, to the following effect:—

"There are two subsidences perhaps due to pillar robbing and the whole of the mines are now full of water".

This note seems to be attested by certain persons who were present on behalf of the appellant. But, however that may be, though Sudhir Mohon was not called as a witness, because, we are told, he was in England at the time, it may be accepted that when the Colliery was taken over on the 23rd May 1915, these two subsidences had already occurred and the working parts underground were full of water.

It is obvious, however, that a coal mine in this country which is left to look after itself for nearly a year may eadly deteriorate. The further comment must be made that as the pits were full of water no attempt seems to have been made to have them examined in detail by an expert. Such examination was probably impossible.

Now, let us turn back for a moment to January 1914. In that month the mine was visited by Mr. David—a Mining Inspector—and we have his report, dated the 17th January, to which both sides referred. He says: "This Colliery is at last working again, raising having started just about a year ago....... The coal", he goes on, "is being raised from Now. 2 and 5 pits and men enter by No. 1 incline. The old workings consist of pillars now not much more than 12, 15. feet square with roads of like sizs. No frash work has been done yet, as the water has not been got out entirely, and so work has been confined to dressing pillars." Then he says about the work: "It has been carried on with practically no regard to safe'y." He adds that he is addressing the owners vary strongly on this subject. Farther on, again, he says: "The old pillars are being drassed and practically no timber is being used to support the roof either in the working places or in the travelling roads. This work is probably just as dangarous as pillars extraction and is likely to bring about a much more dangerous state of affairs and if earried too far it will be bound to bring on sreep.' All things considered, the roof has stood ramarkably wall but the travelling roads and working places should be tempered." We do not know whether the word 'temperel' is a technical term, or whether it is a misprint for 'timbered.'

Passing to another subject, the Inspector continues:—"Another danger which must be sarefully watched in the workings under the Nooniajore which are close to the outerop. A plan and section showing levels should be made to see what cover there is and no work should be done in dressing these pillars. Water is making in small quantities from the coal at this point."

The Inspector concludes as follows:—The Manager, H. H. Banerjee, was absent, he lives at Debalia Colliery and was easid to have gone to his house as Kalikapur in the morning. He holds a first class certificate and where ever he has been Manager I have always had to complain of the very bad state of affairs." The gentleman so unfavourably mentioned is Haribar Banerjee who appears to have been the Manager up to January 1914. He was not called as a witness by the appellants, but they called his successor, Nidarsan Banerjee, who was Manager till the appellants ceased working at the end of May 1914.

There are two observations which it occurs to us to make on this report. The first is that there is no mention in it of any subsidences. The respondent's application of June 1914, for an injunction is equally silent on this subject. It is probable, therefore, that the two subsidences noticed in May 1915, ossarrad during or after the rainy season of 1914.

The second observation is that the appellants seem to have taken the Inspector's report to heart. They got rid of Harihar Banerjee of whom the Inspector had complained, and there is also the evidence of Harihar's successor that he did a certain amount of timbering as the Inspector had recommended.

The Sabordinate Judge who dealt with the present claims appointed a Commissioner to make a losal investigation. He prepared a useful plan of the surface land of the Colliery. It shows that, in addition to the larger subsidences noticed in May 1915, other subsidences of a slighter character had subsequently ossurrad. Tae Commissioner's raport, dated the 6th Novamber 1918, is of very little value except so far as it shows that the pits were not even then in a condition in which they could be examined to any purpose. The Sabordinate Judge himself made a local inspession of the Colliery on the 9th Dasamber 1918. His note of his inspeation, however, is prinsipally concerned with the insuraion of river water into the mine.

It is clear, therefore, that up to the date of the trial no proper examination of the pits had been made. The only underground plan we have is apparently the plan submitted by the appallants or their agent in parameters of the latter's letter of the 17th Jane 1914 to the Chief Inspector.

Somoattempt was male to raise a question of jariedistion in connection with the Commissioner's prosendings. The terms of his eam. mission were not plassi bafora us, but as his tacda enoitavreedo cmos et fandans si trecer the subsidences, the junction with the river, and the underground sonditions so far as they enald be observed, we can only constade that he was instructed to investigate the astual condition of the Colliery with referense to the allegations of malise and negligenes brought against the appellants. He seems, however, to have taken it upon himself to examine witnesses at langth on the whole ease. The whole of the oral evidence printed in the paper-book was resorded by him, very much as if he had been appointed an arbitrator. It is unsatisfastory that these charges of improper working should have been decided on evidence taken in this way. But what happened was this. The appellants made some initial objection to the witnesses being examined by the Commissioner at the Colliery and they may have subsequently repeated the objection. But when the case came before the learned Subordinate Judge he appears to have been willing to take the evidence over again himself. He states in his judgment that, at the request of the Pleaders of both parties, he "agreed to determine the amount to which the decree-holder might be entitled on the evidence recorded by the Commissioner as also on the report relating to the local inspection." The report referred to seems to be the learned Subordinate Judge's note of his own inspection. The parties having thus accepted the evidence recorded by the Commissioner as evidence duly taken in the sause, it is idle now for the appellants to take exception to that evidence. The evidence must be treated as evidence recorded by a Commissioner appointed for the purpose of examining witnesses. It is open to parties to agree as to the materials to be placed before the Judge for his decision, and if the Judge acts on such agreement, he does not thereby delegate his functions as a Judge. We accept in their entirety the principles laid down in the eases of Shadhoo Singh v. Ramancograha (3) and Ram Narain Singh v. Odindra Nath (4), but the present case is distinguishable on the facts from those cases. No question of jurisdiction or material inregularity arises here and we declined to allow the learned Vakil for the appellant to raise any objection to the proceedings of the Commissioner which were not urged in the Court below.

We come, then, to the specific awards made by the Subordinate Judge. As to the amount awarded for the ingress of river water into the mine, we are cf opinion that the evidence entirely fails to support the charge of malice or the charge of negligence on which the learned Vakil for the respondent preferred to rely before us. The existence of any channel between the river and the mine was apparently not suspected by the respondent himself till February 1918. We know nothing of the state of the mine at the spot where the water enters subsequent to January 1914 when the Inspector of Mines noticed some reverlation of water. It is surprising that it rever seems to have occurred to the learned Subordinate Judge, that the formation or erlargement of the channel may have been due to natural causes. The Subordinate Judge seems to attribute great importance to the Commissioner's report and his own inspection note. But the fact that a bamboo can be pushed through only proves the existence of the channel. It does not prove that the channel was artificially made or that up to the time when the appellants elosed their workings they had not taken such precautions as were necessary. The result is, that we disallow the damages awarded in this connection.

As to the damages awarded for improper working by robbing pillars which is said to have led to the subsidences of the surface. the evidence may be somewhat stronger. but is still, in our opinion, insufficient to justify the award. The question was not argued with reference to any terms of the The appellants were dealing with their own property and the only clause of the lease to which reference was made was clause 13, which provides that " if there be inconvenience to your business, or if you so wish, or if the coal be exhausted, you will be able to relirquish there properties at the proper time and according to law." That clause was referred to in reply to the argument that it was not to the interest of the appellants as grantors of the lease to do anything likely to injure the Colliery. It was suggested for the respondent that they might have intended to force the respondent to surrender the We can see no sufficient reason for attributing to them any such sinister motive and we are not satisfied that the responsibility of the appellants for the subsidences has been made out. The underground workings have not been examined; at any rate, they have not been properly examined. It is not clear that the prineipal subsidences are above the area worked appellante, They may be due to old workings-or, again, they may be due to the fast that the Oclliery was left unattended after the appellants relinquished possession. In January 1914, it was, at any rate, possible to explore the interior they ceased working, it is not, in our opinion, established that the appellants were guilty of any improprieties of working entitling the respondent to damages. From the respondents's evidence it would appear that no pumping was done after he re gained possession till May 1917. The award of damages under this head must also be disallowed.

As regards the mesne profits, we find in reference to the second period of possession that the appellants raised no soal before January 1913 or after the 31st May 1914. The evidence of Srikanta Banerjee as to the period before January 1913 is corroborated by Mr. David's report. In regard to the amount of coal raised, we agree with the Subordinate Judge that the average should be taken to be 600 tons a month. We are not impressed with the appellants' raising book OF accounts. The soal raised during the first period of possession may not have been much but the appellants have not given us material on which we can ray that definitely. We accept the Subordinate Judges' findings as to the price of coal at the pit's mouth and as to the cost of severing and bringing to the surface. The award on this head must be modified by the disallowance of mesne profits for the period from 28th July to the end of December 1912 and for the period after the 3!st May 1914. But, inasmuch as the time between 2cth July 1912 and the end of the year was spent in dewatering the mine and getting it into working order, the appellants are entitled to some compensation on that account. We assess that compensation at Rs. 4,000. The appellants are entitled to the deduction of the royalties due under the lease in respect of the whole of the two periods in respect of which the respondent elaims.

As the appellants were in presession under a bona fide elaim of title and not "without any colour of title" or 'in a manner wholly unauthorised and unlawfu." we are of opinion with the Subordinate Judge that they are entitled to the allowances which we have mentioned. The authorities are conveniently collected in MacSwinney on Mines (4th Edition, pages 537-540). In India there is no reason why the measure of damages bould depend, as it appears to do in England, to some extent on the nature of the remedy sought, or why any distinction should be made in this respect between a suit for damages for trespass and a suit, for instance, for assounts.

No claim to an allowance for trade profits was made in the Court below and we cannot allow any such claim.

The decree of the Court below will be modified in the manner indicated. The parties, we think, should pay their own costs of this appeal and of the Court below.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants first party. The plaintiffs are the owners of 4-annas share in Mouza Sarauni Kalan. The defendants second party are the owners of the remaining 12 annas and the defendants first party are said to be tenants. The suit relates to 143 bighas of land which was formerly under water but became fit for cultivation in 1314. The present plaintiffs were not then proprietors in the village. They purchased the share of two Marwaris, Kedar Mal and Nemraj, in 1321. Certain proceedings in partition were started in 1907 but were never completed. The defendants first party are said to have taken possession of the land in suit in 1317 without any legal right so far as the plaintiffs' share is concerned, and the suit has been possession or for brought for recovery of possession jointly with defendants first party or defendants second party with meene profits.

The defence of the defendants first party was that settlement of the land in suit was taken from all the proprietors at an annual rental of Re. 174-2-15 ganlas in 1316, and that since then these defendants have been in possession as tenants. It was farther alleged that the plaintiffs' predecesors had granted a receipt for rent to the defendants and that in the partition papers these defendants were recorded as tenants of the land. Of the defendants second party, the owners of 8 annas share, in their written statement, acknowledged the tenancy of the defendants first party and the owner of the remaining 4 annas did not enter appearance. It may, therefore, be taken that as regards 12-annas share the defendants first party are recognized as tenants. The learned Subordinate Judge found that there had been no settlement with the defendants first party by the plaintiffs' predecessors. He farther found that there was no proof that rent had been actually received by them and that in any case the receipt granted by their Tabsildar was not a recognition of any tenancy. He consequently held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for joint possession of a 4-annas share in the land in dispute with the defendants first party and to mesne profitr.

Two main grounds have been taken in appeal. It is contended, in the first place, that, on the facts found, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for joint possession, and that their only remedy is to receive rent or a partition. Reliance is placed on the decisions in Watson and Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (1), Madan Mohan Shaha v. Rajab Ali (2), Dakhyayani Debi v. Mana Raut (3) and Sat Narayan Singh v. Anant Prosad (4). The argument briefly is, that as to the rights which one tenant-in-sommon has against another tenant-in common who has taken possession, the rule is that unless there is actual ouster, no action of trespass will lie, but only an account. The principle is that the co-tenant is doing nothing but what is lawful in putting the land to the use for which it is intended, namely, the production of crops. It is further argued that it is immaterial whether the co-tenant does this by raising the crops himself or by letting the land to a fenant.

Now, the defendants first party in this case allege that they took settlement from all the proprietors. This has been found against them. It is found that they took settlement only from the 12 annas landlords. It is not alleged that the 12-annas landlords settled the lands with them as 16 annas landlords. Consequently, as to 4 annas of the holding, they have no settlement at all and there is no authority for saying that, in such eireumstances, the 4 annas landlord, who has not made any settlement, is not entitled to a decree for joint possession. The decision in Watton's case (1) does not support any such proposition. In that ease the essential facts were that one of the tenants-in-common was in actual occupation of part of the estate and cultivating it as if it were his separate property, and that the other tenant in-sommon attempted to some upon the property in order to earry on operations it consistent with the source of cultivation in which the former had been engaged. Neither of these elements is present here. Similarly, in the case of Madan Mohun Shaha v. Rajab Ali (2) the co-sharer landlord who had made the settlement had been in exclusive possession of the tank, the subject matter of the suit, and had estiled it as having been in exclusive posses. sion. The same principle is to be found in Dakhyayani Debi v. Mana Raut (3) where the landlord who made the settlement had taken possession of the land, apparently without any protest by his co sharers, and, in the ordinary course of management, had made the settlement with the plaintiff. Moreover, all that was decided in that case was that the plaintiff had the status of a raiyat, and that is not disputed in the present case. On the other hand, the decision in Sat Narayan Singh v. Anant Frosad (4) is against the appellants' contention. The cases on the subject were there discussed and it was held that one remedy open to the co-tenant was a decree for joint possession. And in the case of Radha Proshad Wasti v. Esuf(5) it has been held that no man has a right to intrude upon Iimali property against the will of the co.sharers or any of them. It is argued that the defendants first party have the right to the possession of an undivided 12 annas share in the land in suit. This is true, but it is in no way inconsistent with a decree for joint possession in favour of the plaintiffs. In my opinion, therefore, the first contention fails,

The second argument is on the merits of the case. It is contended that from the conduct of the parties it should be inferred that all the proprietors consented to the settlement, especially in view of the facts that the Tabeildar of the plaintiffs' predecessors granted a receipt and that the defendants first party were in undisturbed possession for 9 years. Now, with regard to this receipt, the learned Subordinate Judge has found, in the first place, that there is no eatisfactory proof that any payment of rent was actually made, and this finding has not been attacked on appeal. The evidence is reduced to the unforroborated statement of a single witness and, in the eircumstances of this case, in view of the relations of the parties, it is difficult to assept such evidence as auffisient. But even if this receipt is taken to be a receipt for money actually paid, it does not lead, in my opinion, to any inference that a tenancy exists between the plaintiffs and the defendants first party. It is argued that the defendants do not rely upon this receipt as a recognition of their tenancy in the sense holding is required to be resignised; but I can see no difference. The reseipt is relied upon as binding the landlord through the act of the Tahsildar and preventing him from denying the relationship of landlord and tenant. Now, the receipt granted by a Tahsildar cannot have that effect. In Debi Deyal Pandey v. Ram Sakal Pathak (6) the law on this subject was considered and the rule was deduced that, where the Tahsildar has not authority from the landlord, his act in granting a receipt cannot amount to recognition.

From the fact that the dafondants' occupa. tion of the land was acquiesced in without remonstrance for 9 years, it is argued, on the authority of Nityanund Chose v. Kissen Kishore (7), that the defendants must be treated as tenants. That was a suit by the landlord elaiming rent and the execution of a kabuliyat from a person who had occupied land within his Zemindari, and it was beld that a tenancy existed and that the tenant must comply with the requirements of the tenancy. The ground of the decision is that it is not open to a person occupying land to plead in answer to a claim for rent that he is a trespasser [See Hallett's Estate, In re. Knatchbull v. Hallett (8)]. But there is noth. ing to prevent the landlord from taking this ples. Consequently, no tenancy can be inferred here.

Much was made of the failure of the plaintiffs to produce their collection papers. Evidence was given that these papers had been stolen, and it was contended that the evidence was insufficient. That may be so, but it is for the plaintiffs to say what papers they will produce. The defendants never sought discovery of these papers and no inference can be drawn against the plaintiffs from their non-production.

The entries in the Batwara papers are referred to in the written statement and it was argued that these raise a presumption of a tenancy. But evidence has been given by plaintiffs' witness, Bechu Lal Das, Tabsildar, that the name of Balgobind Mandal is not in these papers and that the lands in suit are recorded as Guir Massua of the Maliks.

SABIB DIN D. RAJA.

The Butwara Khasra itself is not produced and there is no evidence to support the allegation in the written statement. Indeed, it seems doubtful on the whole evidence whether the defendant No. 1 is a bonn fide tenant at all. He is related to one of the defendants second party, Madan Mandal. There is evidence on both sides that for all settlements made since 1314 kabuliyats have been executed; but in the present case no kabuliyat is produced. The crops are left at Madan Mandal's Cutcherry and in all probability Balgobind is merely his nominee. Therefore, on the merits also, it seems to me that the appeal must fail.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs. Court., J.-I agree.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for a declaration to the effect that a certain land sold by the defendant No. . by a tale-deed dated the 29th March 1920 was alienated without necessity and without consideration. The plaintiffs elaimed to be his near collaterals. Toe emsideration resited in the sale deed consists of two items, namely, (1) Rs. 440.0 0. due on two mortgages - the dates of the two mortgages are not mentioned in the sale. deed, but the names of the mortgagess and the amount secured are mentioned. and (2) Rs. 860-0-0, said to have been paid in eash before the Sub-Registrar. The suit was resisted by the defendants. vandees on the ground that there was consideration and also nesessity for the alienation. The Court of first instance went into the evidence on the record and arrived at a decision adverse to the defend. ants-vendees. in the judgment of the First Court is to be found the following passage to which, rightly, a strong objection has been taken :-

"It is not merely existence of debt that protests a vendee but it is the discharge of the debts or payment of just antessdent debts that protests him."

This does not appear to be a correct proposition of law. It is not the duty of an alience to see to the application of the money, but an alience, who deals with a person with a limited power of alienation, must satisfy bimself that, if money was required for the liquidation of an alleged debt, there was in fact such a debt in existence. The judgment of the Court of first instance, though somewhat involved, certainly indicates that the learned Senior Sub Judge intended to find that the consideration for which the sale was effected tad not been established. The learned Sabordinate Judge went into the evidence in detail and arrived at the following finding:-

"The conclusion I arrive at is that the sale is not probably for consideration, it is certainly not for necessity."

In appeal the whole question was discussed again and the learned Judge of the Appellate Court laid down the following proposition in his judgment:—

'It is, however, necessary for them (vendees) to prove that genuine debts existed for the dispharge of which the eash item was paid to the vendor."

After laying down this proposition the Court goes into the evidence and holds: "In my opinion the whole transaction is most suspicious;" and, further on, the Court

"In my opinion the vendees observes : have failed to prove that the sale was for consideration and recessity." judgment and the desree of the Court of first instance were accordingly upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

One of the vendees has some up in second appeal to this Court, It has been contended on his behalf that the vendees were not bound to see to the actual application of the money paid as consideration for the sale deed, and this con tention, as I have already observed, is quite correct. It was, however, necessary for the vendees to prove that the debts mentioned in the sale deed actually did exist and that there was necessity for the sale. Mr. Chona in support of his argument has relied upon the case of Narain Singh v. Surmuth Singh (1). Ia the judgment of Mr. Justice Ros ceaurs the following passage :-

"A ereditor advancing the money would be justified in advancing a reasonable sum if, after due enquiry, he had a bona fide belief that it was required for, and was intended to be spent on, a necessary purpose. But...he cannot be held responsible for the expanditure of the money after it has passed out of his own hands."

According to the rule laid down in the above case, the vendees ought to have shown in this case that, after the enquiry, they had a tong file belief that the sale was being affected for a necessary purpose. In this case it has been held that appellant has failed to establish even the existence of any debt. The two mortgagedeeds referred to in the sale-deeds have not been produced. No application is to be found on the record showing that the vendees ever applied to have those two dosuments produced.

As regards Rs. 860 0.0 Mr. Chona bas drawn my attention to the statement made by one of the plaintiffs before the framing of the issues, in which he stated that there were certain debts due by the vendor. No amount is mentioned there nor any particulars are given. Mr. Chons, however, has argued that, even if the debts did not exist and his client was deseived in believing that certain debis did exist, he is protected under the law, There is, however, entire absence of any evidence on the record to prove the bona fides of the present vendess. In the leading Fall Bench case reported as Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (2) the following rule is stated in the head-note :-

"That the onus of proof of the validity of an alienation of ancestral land by a male propriator always lies, in the first instance, on the alience, whether he be a third party or a person whose debts have been paid off by the alienation."

The effect of the findings of the two Courts below I take to be that the defendants have not discharged the burden of proof which lay upon them according to this ruling. In this view, it is unnecessary to pursue the matter any further, In my opinion, this appeal is concluded by findings of fact and must be dismissed with costs. I order accordingly.

Where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed, prefers an appeal against that decree, and appears in support of the appeal, the decree of the Appellate Court affirming that decree cannot be described as an ex parte decree of

The proper course for a defendant seeking to set aside an exparte decree against which an appeal has been preferred, is to apply to the Appellate Court for an adjournment of the hearing of the appeal to enable him to apply before the first Court to set aside the decree. [p. 61, col. 2.]

Although under O. IX, r. 13 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended by the Madras High Court, that Court has power to excuse delay in making an application to set aside an ex parte decree, that power will be exercised only when there is justification for failing to make the application in time. FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. K. Ramachandra and K. S. Lakshmana Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—In Palaniappa Chetty v. JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver and have nothing to add to it.

RAMESAM, J .- The original suit (Original Suit No. 95 of 1916) out of which the present petition arises was filed against three defend. ants. The second and third defendants not having appeared in the suit, the degree which was passed against all the defend. ants was an ex parte decree, so far as the second and third defendants were concerned. The first defendant filed an appeal to this High Court in which he impleaded the second and third defendants as respondents. While the appeal was pending, the second defendant applied in this Coart Palaniappa Obstry v. Subra. mania Chetty (1) to set aside the ex parts decree. The petition was considered along with the appeal and was dismissed by Wallie, O. J., and my learned brother. Their Lordships were of opinion that, during the pendency of an appeal, an application to set aside the ex parte decree of the First Court does not lie in the Appellate Court but ought to be filed in the First Court.

Now that the appeal is disposed of, the second defendant renews his application. The plaintiff objects on two grounds, (a) that the application does not lie here; and (b) that it is barred by limitation. (a) Taking the first point, the several possible cases that may arise may be considered in order:-(1) When the defendant who did not appear in the First Court is not impleaded in appeal. Obviously, this is a case where the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to deal with an application to sot aside the ex parte decree: Vide Ramachandra Mallya v. Narayana Hegade (2), Indu Meah v. Darbaksh Bhuiyan (7) and Hetlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (8). When he is made a party to the appeal and the applisation is made while the appeal is pending. In this case, too, the First Court seems to me the proper Court in which the application has to be made. I agree with the reasoning of Wallie, C. J., and my learned brother in the order already referred to [Palaniappa Oh-tty v. Subramania Chelly (1)]. Of the cases now mentioned by the petitioner, Sadaya Konan v. Annamalai Udayan (3) and Ramachandra Mallya v. Narayana Hegade (2) were not then sited and Mathura Prasad v. Ramcharan Lal (9) was sited and considered. I am unable to agree with the two former desisions. The desisions in Kumud Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Jatindra Nath Chowdhury (4) (eited in the former order) and Sarat Chandra Dhal v. Damolar Manna (5) affirmed in Letters Patent Appeal in Damolar Manna V. Sarat Chandra Dhal (6) also support this view. Where he is made a party to the appeal but the application is made after the appeal is disposed of, even in such a case, the language of O. IX, r. 13, would point to the First Court as the proper Court for making the application, a consideration adverted to, but to which, I think, with due deference, sufficient weight has not been given in Sadaya Konan v. Annamalai Udayan (3). The weight of the desisions in Sankara Bhatta v. Subrayar Bhatta (10) and Dhonai Sardar v. Tarak Nath Chowdhury (11) has been considerably weakened by the eritieism of the former in the prior order by Wallis, C. J., and my learned brother. We must remember that in the discussion of this question, it must be assumed that the defendant who was absent in the First Court appeared in the Appellate Court, for, if he was absent in the Appellate Court also [O. XLI, r. 17 (2)] an application to set aside the appellate ex parts decree would lie under O. XLI, r. 21 and Article 169 (not Article 164) of the Limitation Act would apply. On this assumption it is diffioult to describe the appellate decree as an ex parts decree of the Appellate Court except by a straining of language which is not justified; and, if it can be so described, the petitioner would have a second period of limitation under Article 164 starting from the appellate decree, an anomalous result which could hardly have been intended by the Legislature. It may be urged by the petitioner that it is equally anomalous if the First Court has jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree after it is affirmed by the Appellate Court. But, in reply to this apparent anomaly, I would urgs two considerations, (1) an application after the disposal of the appeal, to set aside the ex parte decree of the First Court can hardly be in time and can arise very rarely. The Legislature might well have been content not to anticipate and provide for a case which is most unlikely; (2) in such cases, the proper source of the applicant would be not to wait till the disposal of the appeal but to get an adjournment of the hearing of the appeal to enable him to apply before the First Court to set aside the ex parle decree. Such an application for adjournment might well be granted if he is in time [which is not the case with the former petition, Palaniappa Ohetty v. Subramania Ohetty (1)]. These remarks lead me to the next point, tiz, limitation.

The present petition is clearly barred by limitation. No doubt, under O. IX, r. 13 (2), (as amended by the Madras High Court) we have power to excuse the delay. But even the former petition filed during the pendency of the appeal was out of time. The petitioner failed to apply in time in any Court and no justification has been attempted before us for such failure. The petition is, therefore, clearly barred and is dismissed with the sosts of the plaintiff.

MARAIN SINGH C. RAJ KUMAR SINGH.

The evidence afforded by the dakhilas (rent receipts) as to the nature (non-permanency) of a tenancy is not to be regarded as conclusive. [p. 62, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment, and it is preferred by the defendant. The suit was dismissed in the First Court, but decreed on appeal.

The plaintiff's case is that defendant is in occupation of a plot measuring about two cottahs, as a tenant-at-will.

The defendant raised several pleas in her written statement but we are only concerned with two. The first is, that the holding of the plaintiffs in which the two cottah plot is comprised is an agricultural holding in the sense that it is, used for horticultural purposes, and the second is, that the tenancy was created before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, and that a presumption of permanency ought to be drawn.

In regard to the first contention, it is admitted that the two cottah plot is used by the defendant solely for residential purposes. The rest of the holding in which it is comprised has a number of houses on it, and also has several fruit trees growing on it. The learned Judge has held that the plaintiffs' holding is mainly used for residential purposes, and that the evidence does not justify the finding that their holding is a horticultural holding; granted that this finding of the lower Appellate Court is one that can be challenged in second appeal, I think it is obviously correct. The whole area of a residential holding cannot, ordinarily, be covered with buildings, and the fact that the surplus land is planted with fruitbearing trees does not alter the character of the holding.

The learned Judge's finding on the second point is that there is no proof that plaintiffs' tenancy, or the tenancy of defendant's precessor, was created before the passing of the Transfer Property Act. All that is known of the defendant's tenancy is that Rebaki Dasi held the land in 1291 B. S., that is, in 1884, and there is nothing to show. that the tenancy existed before that year. It is urged that, under the circumstacce. there is a presumption that the tenancy is much older, and that in its origin it was intended to be permanent, and attention is drawn to the ease of Surenira Nath Roy v. Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (1) in regard to the remarks made by the lower Courts about the dakhilas. In view of this authority, I think that the evidence afforded by the dakhilas is not to be regarded as conclusive, but both the Courts hold that, quite apart from the entries in the dakhilas, the circumstances do not warrant the presumption of parmaueney. They point out that the sireamstances are different from those in the case of Mohoram Sheikh Chaprasi v. Telamuddin Khan (2), and I think they are right, for in that case the defendants were able to earry their tenancy back to a very early date.

I think, therefore, that the learned Judge was right in holding that the defendant's tentacty was created after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and also in holding that the circumstances do not warrant the presumption that the tenancy was in its origin of a permanent character.

In my opinion, the appellant has failed to show that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong, and I think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A minor cannot be considered a party to a suit so long as a guardian for him has not been appointed in the case and cannot be personally bound as a party by any compromise decree arrived at before the appointment of a guardian. [p. 64, col. 2.]

A compromise entered into by a Hindu daughter in possession of the whole property by inheritance to her father, the last male-holder, whereby a certain portion of the property is given to the daughters of a predeceased member of the family with the full knowledge that they have no right to it is not a family arrangement binding on her son, [p. 64, col 2]

The mere fact that a Hindu daughter joins her minor son who is quite an unnecessary party to suit, will not make the decision against her in that suit res judicata against her son, [p 64, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarb, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondents. JUUGMENT .- The following facts are admitted. Dawan and Budhan Singh were brothers. Dawan died leaving him surviving a widow, Musammat Khaira, and two daughtere, the Musammats Kalwanta and Maktola. On his death his widow's name was recorded against half the property that had originally belonged to Ranjit Singh, the father of the above mentioned brothers. Budhan had two wiver, Musammats Palti and Samarkba, and by the latter a daughter Musammat Jagta who was the mother of Raj Kumar Singb, plaintiff No. 1, and two other sons who are now dead, who were also plaintiffe.

plaintiffs (who are all minors) brought this suit on the allegation that the two brothers, Dawan and Budhan, were joint, and that on the death of Dawan, Budhan succeeded to the whole property by right of survivorship, and that Musammat Khaira's (Dawan's window's) name was recorded against half only for her consolation. After her death, and Budhan's death, the names of his widows were recorded against the entire family property. On their death Musammat Jagta Kuar susseeded to a daughter's estate and the name of the plaintiff was recorded against the whole property. Then Musammats Kalwanta and Maktola brought a suit against Musammat Jagta, elaiming the property, and on the 20th June 1911 "deseived her, and saused her to file a compromise" by which she admitted their right to half the property, which is now the subject of dispute. The suit was decreed according to the compromise and their names were recorded against half. On 10th September 1912 these ladies executed a mortgage, which was "fictitious and without consideratior," in the name of Narain Singh. The relief claimed in this suit was a declaration that on the death of Jagta, plaintiffs are owners of the property in dispute, and prayed that the mortgage be "cancelled" as against the plaintiffs.

They made Musammat Kalwanta (Maktola being dead) defendant first party, Musammat Jagta, defendant second party, and Narain Singh and his sone, defendants third

The main defence to the suit was that Dawan Singh and Budhan were separate, and his widow's name was entered against her late husband's own share as his beir; that on her death, the widows of Bhudhan wrongfully got possession of this property; that Musammat Maktola and Kalwanta then brought their suit against Jagta and plaintiff No. 1, Raj Kumar Singh ; the suit was properly compromised and the right of Maktola and Kalwanta was admitted and decreed. Then same the mortgage to Narain Singh, whereupon Musammat Jagia brought a suit, in which she joined Raj Kumar Singh as co-plaintiff, to have the compromiss she had entered into set aside on the ground that it was induced by fraud, but the suit was dismissed. In short, they pleaded that the compromise was valid, and bound the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiff's suit was barred by the rule of res sudicata.

On these pleadings the parties went to trial. The Trial Court found on the clearest possible evidence, chiefly documentary, that the brothers, Dawan and Badhan, were joint and that on the death of Dawan, his widow and daughters had no right whatever to succeed to any property.

It held the compromise was not binding on the plaintiffs as 'there was no real trial of the case and Jagta was not entitled in this way to compromise the future claims of her issue," Maktola and Kalwanta had no interest in the property, and so the compromise was 'fully injurious to reversioners,"

NABAIN SINGE C. BAJ KUMAR SINGE,

On the plea of res judicata, it held that Raj Kumar Singh was an unnessessary party to Jagta's suit, and so was not bound by the decision. It decreed the suit. On appeal, the evidence as to jointness was so overwhelming, that the plea of separation was abandoned, and the two remaining pleas only were pressed.

On the first point the lower Appellate Court neld, that (1) Jagta had no power to bargain away the rights of her son, following the recent Privy Council case Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (1) and it further held (2) that Jagta had "entered into the compromise resklessly without protesting the interests of her minor son." On the third point it held that " as the compromise itself is not binding on the plaintiffs," the dismissal does not affect the plaintiffe, who "cannot forfeit their right to inherit the property after the death of their mother on account of her reekless conduct ". It upheld the decree. The defendants come here in second appeal. We note that plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 and Jagta are now all dead.

An elaborate argument has been addressed to us on both sides and a large number of eases nave been quoted, some of which may not be easily reconcilable; but having regard to the findings of the lower Appellate Court we have no difficulty in deciding the appeal and do not propose to discuss these rulings.

(1) the compromise was bona fide, and until it could be proved that it had been obtained by fraud, it could not be set side. Fraud had not been proved, (2) The compromise may be regarded "as a family settlement" within the meaning of the well-known Privy Council cases, and, as such, was binding. It is said there was a bona fide dispute between the members of the family. Jagta represented the estate and this was a reasonable settlement by her by which each branch of the family got a half.

Now, what are the facts? The brothers were joint. On the death of Dawan, Budban succeeded to the whole of the property. On his death his widows were entitled to a life estate, after them the daughter of Budban came into a life estate and on the birth of Raj Kumar Singh, plaintiff No. 1, he was sole reversioner to the whole. This state of things depended on whether Dawan and Bud. han were separate or joint. In was admitted in the lower Appellate Court that they were joint when Dawan died. It follows that his daughters, Maktola and Kalwanta had no shadow of claim to any of the property when they filed their suit against Jagta and the infant Raj Kumar Singh. Soon after the filing of the plaint in that suit, the 27th June 1911, was fixed for the appointment of Jagta as gurdian ad litem to her infant son, then a baby in arms. On the 20th June Jagta filed her compromise. No written statement had been put in, issues had not been fixed, nor was any order appointing guardian al litem for These facts speak for them. the minor. selves. There was no contest, and the conduct of Jagta, who was in possession of the whole property and who should have known that the plaintiffs had no sort of elaim, was so precipitate, (although the Courts below have held it to be "reckless" only), that the inference that the compromise was obtained improperly, is almost irresistible. But, in any case, as held by the Privy Conneil in the ease relied on by the lower Court, Jagta could not bargain away her son's right which was only a sres successionis. It was not a settlement of a bona fide family dispute such as has been recognised by the Privy Counsil,

The minor himself cannot be considered a party to the suit, as no guardian had been appointed. He, therefore, cannot be personally bound as a praty to the compromise and decree.

With regard to the last point, the mere fact that Jagta joined her minor son, who was quite an unnecessary party, in her suit, will not, we think, make the decision against her res judicata against her son.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this case is, whether an appeal lies to the Sessions Court when a Magistrate of the First Class has convicted an accused person of more offences than one and has sentenced him for each offence to imprisonment for one month directing, at the same time, that the sentences should run: concurrently. This question has been before this Court before. In the case of Bepin Behary Dey v. Emperor (1) Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin held that the sentences must be taken in the aggregate or added together and that an appeal lay. A similar desigion was arrived at by Mr. Justice Holmwood and Mr. Justice Imam in the ease of Abdul Khalek v. Emperor (2). In a later ease, however, Suknanden Singh v. Emperor (3) Mr. Justice Carndoff and Mr. Justice Imam came to a different conclusion and the construction which they placed on the words of clause (3) of section 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on which the point turns, was subsequently adopted by Mr. Justice Coxe and Mr. Justice Nalini Oriminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1998), ss. 145, 439-Dispute concerning land-Magistrate, duty of-Co-sharers-Failure to make enquiry-Refusal to exercise jurisdiction - Revision.

Where a person makes an application under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code alleging that he is in possession of the land in question it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether or not he is or has been recently in actual passession. The more fact that the revenue records show that the holding is joint is not sufficient to stop the enquiry contemplated by section 145 of the Code. In proceedings under this section it is incumbent on the

Magistrate to examine the parties and to take evidence. [p. 65, col 2.]

Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to a case where the dispute is between co-sharers, each claiming to be in possession of the disputed land to the exclusion of the others; sub-section b) does not render the section inapplicable to a case in which the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question. [p. 66, col. 2]

Where a Magistrate refuses to take action under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, merely on the ground that the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question a High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision where such irregularity has been committed.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, District Labore, dated the 11th June 1921.

Lala Daulat Ram, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT .- On the 25th of April 1921 Musammat Malan, widow of Thakar Singh. filed an application in the Court of a Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, under section 145, Criminal Procedure Ccde. She alleged that ber husband had died some three years ago leaving him surviving a son and herself; that since the death of her busband she had been in possession of her husband's property and that her son had died about 14 years ago. She further alleged that certain reversioners of her husband were interfering with her and that they had foreibly taken possession of her husband's property, and that she feared for her life. The Magistrate made a summary erquiry and then passed an order on the 10th May 1921, holding that the dispute between the parties was as to certain joint lands left by the husband of Musammat Malan who would not allow the opposite party to cultivate, and that this dispute had assumed such proportions that a breach of the peace was imminent. He accordingly directed the issue of notices to the opposite party salling upon them to file their written statements with regard to the actual possession of the land. On the 11th June 1921 written statements were put in cy four of the opposite party. In these statements they elaimed to be entitled to the land in question, alleging that Musammot Malan had re married and further alleging that the khota was joint. Upon this the Magistrate recorded the statement of Musammat Malan who stated that she had been in possession of the land in question for ms - years and that she did not know whether there had been any partition of the joint holding but that the various joint owners had held separate portions of the joint holding for themselves, each one being in actual possession of a definite portion. Without any further enquiry and without taking the statements of the opposite party, the Magistrate dismissed the application, holding that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was not applicable to disputes for possession of joint land. Against this order Musammat Malan has some up to this Court under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, through Mr. Daulat Ram.

It has been contended that the order of the Magistrate is entirely wrong and that he has failed in the exercise of his jurisdiction. After hearing Counsel I am of opinion that this contention is correct. Musammat Malan clearly alleged that she was in posses. sion of the land in question and the object of the proceeding was, or ought to have been, to ascertain how far her allegations were correct. ie., to decide whether or not she was or had been recently in actual possession. The mere fact that the Revenue Records showed that, the holding was joint was not sufficient to stop the enquiry contemplated by section-145, Criminal Procedure Code. In Dyawappa Besgunda Patil, In re (1) it was held that, in proseedings under this section, it was incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the parties and to take evidence. In Baijnath Marwari v. W. S. Street (2), it was held that the mere fact that there may be a joint title to land would not prevent the application of section 145. To the same effect is the decision in Basanta Kumari Dasi v. Mohesh Chandra Laha (3), where it was held that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, applied to a case where the dispute is between so sharers, each elaiming to be in possession of the disputed land, to the exclusion of the others and that subsection (b) to section 145 did not render that section inapplicable to a case in which the parties are jointly entitled to the land in question, In Dhani Eam v. Bhola Nath (4) it was held that, although the provisions of this Chapter could not be applied to joint possession of joint property, the Magistrate had seted with grave irregularity in not ecquiring into the question of possession. In the present ease the Magistrate has some to no finding on the question of actual possession, but, merely because the Revenue Resords showed the holding to be joint, has refrained from exercising his jurisdiction in this matter. Velayudz Kone v. Narayana Kone (5) and Marudanayakam Pillai v. Mohammad Rowthen (6) are authorities for holding that this Coart has jurisdiction to interfere in a case where such irregularity has been committed.

I accordingly set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct him to take up these proceedings anew, to examine the parties as required by law and to allow Musammat Malan to prove her allegation that she had been in actual possession of the land.

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 29—Overstaying leave by Police Officer—Reasonable cause.

A police constable after the expiry of the period of his leave applied for an extension of his leave on which he was asked to submit a medical certificate. He represented that he was not ill but was detained to settle his affairs in a Bank. He was then called upon to join his appointment, and went back. He was, thereafter, convicted under section 29 of the Police Act for overstaying his leave:

Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, the petitioner did not fail without reasonable cause to report himself to duty on the expiration of his leave and that the conviction was not sustainable.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhury and Babn Probadh Oh, Chatteris, for the Petitioner. . JUDGMENT.—The petitioner—a writer constable at Darjeeling—was convicted under section 29 of the Police Act (V of 1851).

He obtained leave for six months and it is said that a year's leave was due to him, After the expiry of the period of his leave, he applied for an extension. He came down to Calcutta to get money from a Bank in which he had deposited his savings. He had to wait here for the Director's meeting which was put off from time to time and he accordingly applied for an extension of his leave. He was asked to submit a medical certificate. He represented that he was not ill but was detained in Calcutta for the business mentioned above. He was then called upon to join his appointment, and went back.

He had to settle his affairs in the Bank at a considerable sacrifice. It is stated that he had Rs. 2,000 due to him and he had to settle it for Rs. 1,100. For a person in his position it was, no doubt, a great hardship.

The question is, whether the petitioner had reasonable cause for overstaying his leave.

Without laying down what constitutes reasonable cause under section 29 of the Act, it cannot be said that in this case the petitioner failed without reasonable cause to report himself to duty on the expiration of his leave.

In these circumstances, we think that the conviction of the petitioner under section 29 of the Police Act and the centence passed upon him must accordingly be set aside. The petitioner will be discharged from his bail-bond.

Revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 26th July 1921.

Mr. H. O. Dutt, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application for revision of an order passed by a Civil Court under section 476 of the Code of Orimical Procedure, directing the proceention of the applicant for offences under sections 195 and 465 of the Indian Penal Code. I should, in any case, be reluctant to interfere in this case as, although the order complained of was passed on the 26th July last, this application is not presented until the last working day before the vacation when its admission would involve the proseedings in the lower Courts being stayed for at least a month and a half. I have also no materials on which to act as the application is not accompanied by a certified copy of the order complained of as required by Rule XXIX B of the Rules of Practice of this Court. No explanation of this fact is given in this application, but it is stated by the applicant's Counsel that he presented an appeal to the District Judge which was rejected on September 3rd. The applicant's legal adviser should have known that no appeal lay to the District Judge from an order passed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and in any case there was nothing to prevent his obtaining a copy of the order passed by the learned Subordi. nate Judge. Even an application for revision is not entertainable under the provisions of sections 435 and 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [Thakur Dass v. E nperor (1)].

Even assuming the correctness of the uncertified copy put in by the applicant, no revision sould possibly lie against the order directing a prosecution for an offence under section 195, Indian Penal Code. ground on which the application is pressed in regard to the offence under section 465 of the Indian Penal Code is that the applicant was not a party to the civil suit, but only a witness, and reliance is placed on a Fall Bench ruling of the Madras High Court in Gouinda Iper v. Rex (2). The VIEW taken by the Madras High Court is not accepted either in Allahabad, Bombay or Patna, as may be seen from the following cthers :- Ganga Rom V. among Emperor (3). Waman Dinkir Kelkar v. Emperor (4), Raskumar Singh v. Emperor (5). The last decision was that of a Bench prasided over by Sir Edward Chamier, who was then Chief Justice. I agree with the view taken in these cases as against the view taken in Madras. I accordingly reject the present application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 118, 496-Order of Additional District Magistrate, nohether appealable to District Magistrate.

An appeal lies under section 406 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the District Magistrate against an order of an Additional District Magistrate under section 118 of the Code, made in a proceeding under section 110 of the Code, [p. 70, col. 1.]

Revision against an order of the Additional District Magistrate, Midnapore, dated the 6th Ostober 1920.

Babu Bir Bhusan Dutt, for the Petitioners. Babu Manmatha Nath Mukheres, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BEACECROFF, J .- The petitioners before us were directed to give security for their good beheaviour under section 118, Criminal Procedure Code, by Mr. Mannoosb, the Additional District Magistrate of Midnapore. Mr. Mannooch had been duly appointed, under section 10 (2), Oriminal Procedure Code, to be Additional District Magistrate with all the powers of a District Magisrate under the Code. The patitioners appealed to the District Magistrate who refused to hear the appeals on the ground that they lay to the Sessions Judge. The petitioners then obtained the present Rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why he should not hear the appeals.

There is no question that the District Magistrate was mistaken in saying an appeal lay to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge, of course, has no appellate powers in the case of a person ordered to give security for good behaviour. The only appellate authority is the District Magistrate. The question is, whether seetion 406, Oriminal Procedure Uode gives him appellate powers in the case of an order made by an Additional District Magistrate, In terms it undoubtedly dose, unless an Additional District Magistrate is included in the words "the District Magistrate,"

For the petitioners it has been argued that the District Magistrate is a distinct person with spesial powers given by the Code, whereas an Additional District Magistrate is merely a Magistrate of the first class on whom the special powers of a District Magistrate have been conferred by the Local Government,

We have been referred to various seetions of the Code having reference to the powers and duties of a District Magistrate. from which, it has been argued, the conelusion is to be drawn that the term "District Magistrate" does not in all cases include an Additional District Magistrate. I do not think any useful purpose will be served by referring to those sections as in many of them it is an open question whether the provisions of section 10 (2) would not make the particular section applicable to an Additional District Magietrate, and, farther, sestions which deal with the administrative or executive duties of the District Magistrate will not ba any sure guide to the solution of the question before us.

An argument for the patitioners which may be noticed is that the words 'other than the District Magistrate" were inserted in section 406 expressly to cover the case of an Additional District Magistrate, otherwise they are unnecessary, for, on general pricciples, a District Magistrate could not hear an appeal from his own order. is, at the same, time conceded that Additional District Magistrate may exercise appellate powers under this section. I do not think this argument conslusive, for even if the words "other than the Distriot Magistrate" were omitted, the same difficulty might arise, though the argument against the petitioners would possibly be strengthened by the omission.

Oa the other hand, it is argued that the Additional District Magistrate has coneurrent jurisdiction with the District Ma. gistrate and it is contrary to fundamental principles for one Court to sit in appeal over a Court of consurrent jurisdiction. and that sestion 435 gives us a guide, as by that sestion the District Magistrate has revisional powers only in the ease of orders of an inferior Court, which term could not include the Court of the Additional District Magistrate.

RAM CHAND &. EMPEROR.

The latter argument does not belp us. for appellate powers are not necessarily subject to the same limitations as revisional powers. The former argument is attractive, but not conclusive: appellate power must depend on the words of the Statute. which being plain in themselves must be held to have their ordinary significance unless such a construction leads to a result clearly contrary to the intention of the Legislature. Now, it eannot be said that it would do so in view of the Foll Bench desision in Nabu Sardar v. Emperor (1). It was there decided that the powers given by section 125 were not limited in any way, and though the correstness of that desision may be open to doubt, it interprets the law for this Province. and if, by the operation of that section, a listrict Magistrate can question on the merits an order of the Additional District Magistrate, being a Court not superior to his. there is nothing anomalous in his being empowered to sit in appeal over that officer.

It might seem unnecessary for the petitioners to press their point in view of the fact that the District Magistrate can interfere under section 125. But the fact that the District Magistrate has the power does not dispose of the matter, for, under section 125, it is a matter within his discretion, whereas if an appeal lies under section 406, the District Magistrate is bound to hear it.

In my opinion, there is only one person who can be the District Magistrate. Consequently, though an Additional District Magistrate may have all his powers he is a "Magistrate other than the District Magistrate" within the meaning of section 406 of the Code, and consequently an appeal lay to the District Magistrate. I would make the Rule absolute and direct the District Magistrate to hear the appeals.

EMPEROR-RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 174—Failure to attend in obedience to order of public servant—Order by Cantonment Magistrate requiring agent of bungalow to attend before him, whether offence.

Petitioner, who was the agent of a bungalow in a Cantonment, was, by a verbal order, required by the Cantonment Magistrate to attend his office in connection with the acquisition of bungalows for military purposes. Petitioner failed to obey this order and was convicted under section 174 of the Penal Code:

Held that there was nothing to show that the order was one which the Magistrate issued in his capacity as a Magistrate, or which he was legally empowered to issue or which the petitioner was legally bound to obey, and that, therefore, the petitioner could not be convicted of an offence under section 174 of the Penal Code [p. 71, col. 2.]

Oase reported by the Sessions Judge, Jullander, with his No. 100 G of the 13th June 1920.

FACTS.—The petitioner, Ram Chand, is an agent of bungalow No. 10 in Jullundur Cantonment. The Cantonment Magistrate wished to see the agents of various bungalows in connection with the proposed acquisition of bungalows for military purposes in accordance with orders reseived from Brigade Head-quarters. He accordingly ordered the petitioner to attend his office on 30th June last. This order was given by the Captonment Magistrate to the Bezar Chowdhary, Abdul Ghafur. The stated that, in obedience to this order, be went to call the petitioner, who, bowever, told him that he could not attend the Cantonment Magistrate's office that day but would do so the following day, petitioner admitted baving received the order but stated that he understood it was in connection with bungalow No. 10 and he had to go and see some repairs in burgalow No. 21. The Cantonment Magistrate in his judgment stated that his order was a verbal one, but it would appear that he wrote on a slip of paper and ordered the Chewdhary to produce before him at once the agents of burgalows Nos. 9 and 10, and on this elip of paper the Chowdhary reported that the petitioner stated that he could not come that day, but would do so the following day. The Cantonment Magistrate's order was, therefore, communicated verbally. The Cantonment Magistrate thereupon wrote an order on the same slip of paper directing that summons should issue on the petitioner under section 174, Indian Penal Code, to attend at once. The summons was accordingly issued on the petitioner, with the result that he was convicted and sentenced.

The Cantonment Magistrate in awarding the sentence considered that "an exemplary punishment was called for as the lanlords in Jullundur Cantonment were a most truenlent lot and required a few lessons to teach them the error of their ways."

GROUNDS .- Though, in my opinion, the petitioner may have been very remiss and wanting in courtesy by not complying at ones with the order of the Cantonment Magistrate, I cannot see that he has committed any offence under section 174, Indian Penal Code. The question is, whether the Cantonment Magistrate, not sitting as a Magistrate, was legally competent to order the petitioner to attend his office and whether the petitioner was legally bound to attend in obedience to that order. proceedings of the Cantonment Magistrate appear to have been comewhat irregular and I do not think that he was legally empetent to require the atterdance of the petitioner on a matter which had nothing to do with him as a Magistrate. From his judgment it would appear that he sent for the petitioner because it was essential that he should see at ones the agents of various bungalows in connection with the proposed acquisition of bungalows for military purposes in accordance with the orders received from Brigade Head. quarters. He was presumably acting in his capacity as the Secretary of the Cantonment Committee when he issued the order to the petitioner to attend at once, but I greatly doubt whether he was legally competent to issue such an order and whether the petitioner was legally bound to attend his office in chedience to that order.

I, therefore, forward the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the conviction and sentence be set aside as illegal. The fine has been realized.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—I entirely agree with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge. It is certainly to shown that the verbal order emmunicated to the petitioner through Abdul Ghafur was an order which the Magistrate issued in his espacity as a Magistrate, or which he was legally empowered to issue or which the petitioner was legally bound to obey. The conviction of the petitioner under section 174, Indian Penal Code is, therefore, set aside and he is acquitted. The fine, if already paid, will be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that the Sab-Divisional Officer of Contai, as a Collector, acting under the provisions of section 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, sab-section (3), made an order prohibiting the removal of certain crops. The case against the petitioners is that they disobeyed the said order and their prosecution under the provisions of section 188 of the Indian Penal Cod has accordingly been directed.

The contention of the retitioners is that section 188 of the Indian Penal Code is not applicable to the facts alleged and that they should be dealt with, if at all, under the Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXXIX,

In the case reported in Chandi Charan Giri v. Gadadhar Prodhan (1) it has been held that the proceedings of a Collector acting under the provisions of sections 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenency Act are of a Civil nature. His Court is, therefore, one of civil jurisdiction and, in the absence of any special bar, by virtue of section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the procedure provided in that Code would appear to become applicable. In support of the contention advanced on behalf of the petitioners stress is then laid on the decision of this Court reported in Chandrakanta De, In the matter of (2).

But, as is apparent from sub-section (2) of section 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the primary purpose of orders made under that section is to prevent breaches of the peace and we cannot suppose that for the earction to such orders the Legislature intended to rely or solely to rely on the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Without, therefore, seeking to lay down that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Order XXXIX, are inapplicable, we must hold that it is competent to the Collector in such esses to aet under the provisions of section 195 or section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and to direct a prosecution under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of alleged disobedience to his order.

ORDER.—In this ease a compensation order under section 250, Oriminal Procedure Code, is attacked as illegal.

It is argued that the facts appearing in evidence constitute an offence under section 467, Indian Penal Code, which is triable only by a Sessions Court, and that, in consequence, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to act under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code. In our opinion, the offenes; disclosed was one under section 467, but the Magistrate undoubtedly regarded it as one under section 465, Indian Penal Code, (which he had jurisdiction to try), and spesifically refers to the latter section in his order. Does the former fact affect the legality of his order of compensation? We think not. The Magistrate undoubtedly proceeded under Chapter XXI, Criminal Procedure Code, and not under Chapter XVIII and King-Emperor v. Ayyan (1) is clear authority for holding that if the case had ended in a conviction, that conviction would not be illegal merely because the offence committed really fell under a more serious section and was not one which the Magistrate was competent to try. Applying the line of reasoning adopted in that judgment to the present ease, we think it must be held that, as the Magistrate was not proceeding illegally in trying the accused for the lesser offence, he was not acting illegally in awarding compensation when he found the accusation to be frivolous or vexatious. Two eases have been cited for the petitioner. Of these Emperor v. Ohhaba Dolsang (2) is easily distinguishable, for, in that ease, the Magistrate was certainly acting under Chapter XVIII and passed his order of discharge under section 209. The other Hait (Het) Ram v. Ganga Sahai (3) is the decision of a Single Judge and the judgment leaves it doubtful which offence the Magistrate conseived himself to be enquiring into. We do not think there are any grounds for interference and we dismiss this petition.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 118-Examination of child witness-Mode of testing its capacity-Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342-Procedure.

When the evidence of a child of tender years is adduced the Judicial Officer should, for the sake of precantion, ascertain, as a preliminary measure, by means of a few simple questions, whether the intelligence of the child is such that (whether sworn or not) it is capable of giving testimony which is patent of credit, and it is desirable that something should, at the commencement of the record of the evidence of a witness of this character, be entered to show that such a test has been in fact made, although it is not obligatory under the law to do so. [p 75, col. 2.]

Where an accused is undefended the Tribunal may point out to him the elements of the evidence adduced against him which seems in his own interest to demand his explanation, but where an accused is defended by a legal practitioner a Tribunal ought not to enter upon a lengthy examination of an accused person. [p. 75, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dismissing the appeal of the petitioner against an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Monghyr.

Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, for the Petitioner. The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT,-This was an application in Oriminal Revisional Jurisdiction made by one Panchu Chaudhry who was convicted of rape by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Monghyr on the 25th of April of this year. and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. An attempt was made to raise before me arguments based upon the general merits of the case and also as to the nature of the sentence. I have read through very earefully all the evidence and the learned Judge's judgment and, although the Assessors did not think that the evidence for the proseention was altogether reliable, I am bound to say that I cannot see any ground for thinking that the learned Judge has come to wrong decision, por do I think that, assuming as I do, his decision was right, the sentence was in any way too severe.

PANCHU CHOUDERY U. BEPEROR.

The points, however, upon which I was particularly addressed were two in number. The first of these was with regard to the procedure adopted by the Judge in connection with the reception by him of the evidence of a small girl who, it is said, was an eye witness of the occurrence. In order to understand this point which has been urged, it is necessary, very shortly, to refer to the ciraumstances under which, it is said, that the offence took place.

The complainant was a young married woman about 18 or 20 years old who was engaged in company with two little girls, aged about 11 and 7 respectively, in scraping up grass in a glade in the middle of a thick field of Rabar, she was seized by the accused, a young man of about 20 or 22, who, pushing her on the ground, had connection with her notwithstanding her attempts to push him off. The two little girls stood by frightened and in tears, and saw it all. need not detail what took place afterwards or the circumstances under which the complainant told what had taken place to persons whom she subsequently encountered, because those circumstances are not really material with regard to the immediate point under The consideration. Assistant Sessions Judge, in coming to the decision which he did, relied very materially upon the evidence of these two children as corrobora. tion of the story which was told in Court by the complainant herself. In the case of the elder girl he writes at the foot of her deposition: "Explained to the witness in Hindi and admitted by her to be correct. I believe this witness understood what was asked of her and gave the answers recorded fairly intelligently," With regard to the younger girl, however, he does not make any comment beyond the formal one: "Explained to the witness in Hindi and admitted by her to be correct." It is clear from the judgment that the Judge does rely upon the evidence of both these shildren and, therefore, I think, it must be presumed that, in doing so, he must have felt satisfied that both the children were capable of giving intelligent and intelligible evidence, although they were of tender years. It is admitted that what he wrote at the foot of the deposition of the elder shild was sufficient to indicate that her evidence was capable of being received and that it was adequate for any purposes neess.

sary. Whether or not he assidently omitted to make a similar entry on the deposition of the younger shild I do not know; but I am inclined to think that it was probably ace dental. However, it is argued before me: that the omission to record any statement of the kind indicated is one which vitiates the proceedings and makes it necessary that there should be a new trial. I have been unable to find any authority, nor has any elear authority been pointed out to me, which would justify me in coming to any such conclusion. I should like, however, to point out that it is undoubtedly of very great import. anse that when the evidence of a shild of tender years is addaged the Judicial Officer should, for the sake of precaution, ascertain, as a preliminary measure, by means of a few simple questions, whether the intelligence of the shild is such that (whether sworn or not) it is capable of giving testimony which is patent of eradit; and it is certainly desirable that something should, at the commencement of the record of the evidence of the witness of this character, be entered to show that such a test has been in fact made. It may, of course, turn out in the course of the examination at the trial that the test has been a fallacious one and that the evidense which the child gives is not intelligible, and in sush a case, of course, it is always: open to the Judicial Officer to say, at any stage, that he caunct ascept the evidence which the child is giving. On the ctier hand, I do not find that there is any thing obligatory imposed by law upon a Judge definitely to make on the record any endorse. ment of his own view as to a child's capa. eity, and when, as in this case, he has clearly relied upon the evidence giver, it would be absurd to suggest that he could have been other than thoroughly satisfied as to the eapacity of the child to give intelligible testimony. I observe that in these depositions there seems no clear indication as to whether either of the children was sworn or affirmed or neither. Bat it esems to be a common practice to omit to note what his taken place with regard to the taking of an oath or the making of an affirmation. I eannot, therefore, think that, under the eirenmstances shown in this case, there is any ground for interference in Revisional Jurisdiction on this point. I have been referred to the cases of Sheikh Bakir V.

ABDUL KADER U. MON MOHAN GOPE.

Emperor (1), Dhani Kam v. Emperor (2), Fin Santal v. Emperor (3) and Queen. Empress v. Lat Sahai (4). But all that they may, in my opinion, seem substantially to show is that it is important that, in some way or other, it should be clear that the Judge has satisfied himself that the child whose evidence has been taken before him is eapable of giving evidence of an intelligible nature.

The second point is a very small one. It is suggested that the examination which was made of the assused in the Sessions Court after the close of the prosecution under the provisions of section 312 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not in accordance with law. On the ground that it was inadequate, I am not prepared, without very convincing authority, to say that it is well open in Revisional Jurisdiction of this Court to enquire into the sufficiency of the examination which has been made under the section. Indeed, it is freely admitted that it is impossible to lay down any very definite bard and fast rule and my own view is that this Court would not enquire, in Revisional Jurisdiction, into any such sufficiency, except possibly in very exceptional and special circumstances. Here I have looked at the examination which was made both in the Committing and in the Trial Courts. It must be remembered that the accused was defended by a legal practitioner and that every thing which could be przed on his behalf was urged. In the Committing Court, the accused was only asked one question which was as follows: "Did you foreibly outrage Rudia Chamarin in the Rahar field"? The answer was, "No. I did not do any thing." In the Trial Court this statement was read over to him and he was then asked if he wished to add any thing to that statement. His answer was that he would file a written statement. I cannot, I think, in these sirenmetances say that in this case this was insufficient or that it showed any special circumstance which would justify any interference by easily be seen that if it me. It can is to be said that a Judicial Officer must ask this or that question or this or that series of questions under the provisions of section 342 of the Code of Crimical Prosedure, the practical effect of the working of that section could be criticised in ravisional applications on every possible coession. I can well understand that, where an accused is undefended, the Tribunal may well point out to him the elements of the evidence adduced against him which seems in his own interest to demand his explanation but where an accused is defended by a legal practitioner it would be, I think, altogether impossible to expect or desirable to contemplate a Tribunal entering upon a lengthy examination of an accused person which might easily develope into a recount. ing of the history of the whole case or into, what would be far worse, some sort of eross-examination.

For these reasons, I, therefore, think that this point must also fail and that the applieation must be rejected.

Revision.

Mr. Md. Nurul Huq Chowdhury, for the Petititioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 379, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months.

The accused is a young man of 2) years of age; and evidently this is the first time that he has been brought to the Criminal Court. One of the witnesses for the defence, a Civil Court Mukhtear, gives him a good character.

Having regard to his youth and character, we think he may be dealt with under the provisions of section 562, Criminal Procedure Code.

The learned District Magistrate says that no application was made to him during the hearing of the appeal that the accused should be dealt with under the provisions of section 562. He has no objection, however, to action being taken under that section if that course commends itself to this Court.

Under the eirenmetancer, in lieu of the sentence passed upon the petitioner, we direct that he be released on his entering into a bond of Rs. 100 (Rupees one hundred) with two sureties for Rs. 100 (one hundred) each, for one year, to appear and receive sentence when called for and in the meantime keep the peace and be of good tehaviour.

This must be done within one fortnight after the arrival of this order in the Court below. Failing that, the petitioner must surrender to his bail and serve the remainder of the sentence and, in that event, the Rule will stand discharged.

253, 494 a'—Warrant-case—Discharge—Fresh complaint--Succession (Property Protection) Act (XIX of 1841)—Disputes as to succession of large estates—
Remedy

An accused person cannot be tried in several Courts on the same facts, although the complainants in the several cases may be different. [p. 70, col. 2.]

An order of discharge under section 494 (a or under section 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code in a warrant-case does not prevent the Magistrate from taking cognisance of a complaint on the same facts if there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly. [p. 79, col. 2.]

The Succession (Froperty Protection) Act, XIX of 1841, has a larger scope than section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and is a more appropriate remedy in cases involving disputes as to succession in large estates involving breaches of the peace. [p. &O, col. 1.]

Oriminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Nawadab, dated 29th September 1921.

Messrs. C. C. Das and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nawadab, dated the 29th keptember 1921, directing the petitioners to be summoned under sections 454, 380, Indian Penal Code upon the complaint of one Bundi Lal, dated the 2rd of September 1921.

Bundi Lal was a servant of the late Raja of Singer, in the District of Gays, who died in the month of September 192). The petitioners are the servants of the sister's son of the late Raja, except petitioner No. 2, who disclaims all concern and is described as the nephew of Geno Singh and petitioner No. 3 is the brother of petitioner No. 1 Biso Ram.

It is undisputed that the petitioners' master, Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi, is the legal heir of the deceased and is now living in Singer.

The opposite party, Bundi Lal and others, claim to be trustees of an idol, to whom it is alleged all the properties of the Raj have been bequeathed by a Will executed by the late Raja. Probate of the Will has been applied for and the proceedings in connection therewith are still pending, Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sabi has entered saveat in those proceedings and disputes the Will. The dispute between the parties has naturally led to an attempt on their behalf to seize possession of the properties, and consequently the several usual criminal proceedings under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, namely, 107, 144, etc., have been instituted. Papers of some of these proceedings have been handed over to me by the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioners:-

(1) the complaint lodged by one Mathura Prasad, servant, of the trustees, against the petitioner Biso Modi and others which was disposed of by the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nawadab, dated the 17th May 1921. That order is in the following words;-

"Mistake of law. Section 448." On the 27th of May 1921 the Magistrate ordered "to return the keys to Biso Modi the person from whom they were taken."

(2) On a complaint of Bundi Lal, the present complainant, against Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi and others, the order of the Magistrate of the 1st of February 1921 was: "I do not think that there is a fear of the breach of the peace now."

(3) In a case instituted under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, at the instance of Bundi Lal, complainant v. Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi, on the 1st of April 1921 the Magistrate passed the following order:-

"The main reason for apprehending a breach of the peace was the continuance of the sollections on behalf of the 1st party and (Bundi Lal) and attempts on their behalf to possess themselves of the Kutcherry. to the collection, as I have remarked another order, they are only authorised to represent the estate in pending suits, and on these grounds I have refused to return the Zemindari papers to them. As to the Kutcherry and its contents it has been attached for the purposes of the case into which I inquired on the 1st January. There is, therefore, no fear of a breach of the peace, Proceedings dropped and assused discharged under sestion 119, Oriminal Procedure Code,"

(4) In a proceeding started at the instance cf Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi as petitioner, the Magistrate recorded the following order on the 17th of January 1921: "There are two portions in the order complained against (1) with regard to the Kutsherry, and (2) with regard to the residential portion. With regard to (1) the let party (Bundi Lal and other tenants) are said to have instituted a probate case and the opposite party have entered a eavest. This matter might, therefore, await disposal of the probate application and both parties prevented from doing anything with regard to the Kutcherry until that application is decided. As regards the second point, the Sub-Divisional Officer cays that the second party are at present in actual possession of the inner apartments and so may be left in possession until the District Judge on the probate application otherwise holds. Call upon the first party to appear on the 25th January why an order in the above terms should not be passed; sall for record and ask Sub-Divisional Officer to state whatever observations he has to make on the grounds of motions and on the above remarks. 8d. B. N. Roy, A. D. M."

The parties were heard Magistrate recorded his order on the 25th January 1921. That order gives history of the dispute between the parties, and it is needless to quote the entire order, except the concluding paragraph, which runs as follows :- "As the District Judge's decision in the probate case will settle the dispute, the petitioner elearing ont if probate is granted on proof of the Will or the opposite party elearing out if the Will be not proved to be genuine, it is best for the Criminal Court to await such decision and not disturb the status quo ante. I accordingly set aside the Sub-Divisional Offiser's order and direct, under section 144, that the petitioner be permitted to live in the inner apartment which has been found to be in his possession, that the Kutcherry be kept locked and both parties be prevented from having assess to anything contained in any of the apartments appertaining to it, that the Thakurghar or temple in the outer court. yard be kept open only for any one to worship BISO RAM C. EMPEROR.

and that a Police constable be deputed at the expense of the petitioner to see that the above order is given effect to until the decision of the probate matter, on receipt of which the Magistrate will cause compliance with such decision. It is expected that such decision will be given within two months. Return records at once to Sab Divisional Officer."

So far back as the 1st of January 1921, a complaint was lodged by one Raj Karan Singh, servant of Bundi Lal, the person complaining against the present petitioners, charging them with having entered the courtyard of the Thakurghar at Singer and of having broken open the look of the room in which were kept the collection papers belonging to Patwari Beni Lal and of having removed the articles belonging to the complainant's master from other rooms of the building. The accused were summoned under sections 454 and 380, Indian Penal Code. As the Sab-Divisional Officer of Nawadah had held local enquiry into the case, be reported to the District Magistrate to have the case made over to some other Magistrate for trial. Accordingly, the case was made over to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaya.

On the 19th July 1921 a petition was filed on behalf of the then complainant, Raj Karan Singh, detailing the several criminal cases which arose between Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi and the trustees and the complaints relating to the properties of Raja and stating that deseased those eases were all decided in favour of Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi, and that there was no likelihood of the witnesses deposing in favour of the complainant. Consequently, he sought permissicn to withdraw from the prosecution. The Sub-Divisional Officer refused to act upon it on the ground that he had no power to permit withdrawal of a warrantcase under sections 350 and 454, Indian Penal Code. He, however, granted time to the petitioner to move the District Magistrate for withdrawing the Accordingly, the complainant, Raj Karan Singh, filed a petition next day in the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate repeating what he had said in the first petition and adding that the accused opposite party (petitioners) "have come into possession of the entire Singer estate and all the raiyots are on their side," and that the charge against the petitioners was brought at the instance of Bundi Lal who "it seems has no concern with the estate and has been trying to oust the real maliks from the possession," and that the case was of a civil nature. The petition was directed to be put up before the latter officer who recorded the following order: "This is a complaint case. The petition is allowed. To the Sub Divisional Officer for disposal."

On receipt of the order of the District Magistrate, the Sub Divisional Magistrate recorded the following order on the 2nd of Angust: Seen the patition filed before the District Magistrate and the latter's order dated the 25th July 1921 passed therein. A warrant-case cannot be withdrawn without the permission of the District Magistrate. The case will proceed. Summon witnesses for 18th August 1921."

On the 29th August 1921 the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaya examined three witnesses: (1) Mr. Reuben, the Divisional Officer of Nawadah, (2) Rai Karan Singh and (3) Beni Lal, adjourned the case to the 1st of September, on which date a petition was filed by Ganga Prasad, Bundi Lal and others, who elaimed to be the trustees of the properties and master of the complainant Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi, alleging the complainant was gained over praying that they may be allowed to step in his shoes and continue the prosecution. This petition was naturally rejected, as third parties could not be allowed to intervene. The Magistrate observed that the applicants may file a pecition of complaint of their own if they like before a proper Court. Further hearing of the case then took place, and on the next day the Magistrate passed an order discharging the accused on ground that the complainant had gone back upon his deposition which he had made before the Sub-Divisional Magietrate of Nawadah and now stated that he had no personal knowledge of the facts. The case was not likely to result in a conviction. He, however, remarked that the trustees might, if they like, file a fresh petition of complaint. The case was accordingly withdrawn and the accused persons disBISO RAM U. EMPEROR.

charged under section 53, Oriminal Procedure Code.

Acting upon the suggestion cf the Magistrate, Bundi Lal, one of the trustees, filed a fresh complaint before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Nawadah, giving the eirsumstances in which the first prosecution failed and the assused were discharged. The Magistrate heard both the parties upon the question as to whether this was a proper case in which the complaint sould be entertained. He passed his order, overruling the objections of the accused petitioners, and directing them summoned under sections 454 and 380, The main ground Indian Penal Code. upon which the Magistrate has passed his order summoning the accused is, that the order of discharge passed by him in former case dated the 2nd of September 1921, did not debar him from summoning the accused, and that section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to it inasmuch as the explanation to that section saves an order of discharge of the assused The complainant, Raj Karan Singh, applied to withdraw the case but the Magistrate would not permit the complainant to withdraw the case until he was directed by the District Magistrate to do so. District Magistrate's order of the July was obviously a permission to withdraw the complaint and whatever the views of the Magistrate might have been on the 29th of August that he was not bound to earry out his order, he did assept it on the 2nd of September when he astually permitted the complainant to withdraw the prosecution.

Now, if the order of the Magistrate was wrong, the first complaint has not been properly withdrawn, and in that case he should have proceeded upon the complaint the seizin whereof had been withdrawn from him and was handed over to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaya. If, on the other hand, the order of withdrawal is a valid one, it could only be passed under section 494, read with section 495, of the Code of Oriminal Procedure, for so long as the first case did not validly terminate the Magistrate had no right to start prosecution on the same facts at the instance of any other person. An accused person cannot be summarily tried in several Courts on the same facts, although the complainants in the several eases may be different. I will, therefore, assume, for the purposes of this case, that the order of discharge of the 2nd of September passed by the Magistrate was a valid one. True it is that an order of discharge under section 494 (a) or under section 233 in a warrant case does not necessarily prevent the Magistrate from taking cognizance of a com. plaint on the same fasts, but an order of disaharge sannot be set aside and prossention started afresh unless there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly, upon those materials there is a possibility of a conviction of the absused persons,

I have, therefore, earefully considered the history of the litigation and the complaint petitions which virtually are based upon the same facts. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gaya had already examined three witnesses on bahalf of the prosecution. Only a few more witnesses out of those named in the complaint petition were not examined. Beni Lal, Patwari, whose bastas containing collection papers were said to have been looted by the petitioners, was already before the Magietrate. Now, examined having the evidence before him, the Magistrate was of opinion that there was no likelihood of the prosecution resulting in the conviction of the assused. The fact that the complainant was won over did not prevent the Magistrate from going on with the prosecution in a warrant-case, but the Magistrate was evidently of opinion that the evidence laid by the prosecution was not to convict the accused persons. The opinion of the Sab-Divisional Officer of Gaya, expressed on the 2nd of September, was one formed upon the estimate of the evidence then produced before him. In the present complaint before the Magistrate nothing has been said in the complaint petition that there is a chance of giving batter evidence. On the other hand, the present complainant, Bandi Lal, has definitely stated that he was not an eye witness to the occurrence. Therefore, upon the complaint has now been lodged before the Magistrate it was obvious that the Magistrate was not justified in summoning the accused NGA ON THE C. EMPEROR.

persons. The statement of Raj Karan Singh, contained in the petition of the 20th of July filed before the District Magistrate, that all the properties appertaining to the Raj is in possession of the petitioners' master, Raja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi, has not been controverted in the present complaint petition. If that is so, it is impossible to conceive that a case under section 380, read with section 454. Indian Penal Code would lie. The dispute between the parties is one relating to the succession of the estate of the late Raja of Singer. The proceedings under the preventive sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure all terminated in favour of the master of the petitioners and these proceedings arose out of a dispute as to the possession of the Garh and the Thakurgarh which is the subject matter of the present complaint. The District Magistrate more than once has held that the Criminal Court is not the proper forum where the dispute of such a nature between the parties can be desided. No breach of peace has oscurred, nor was it ever apprehended. No riot has taken place. Baja Kesho Prasad Narain Sahi has managed somehow or the other to be in possession of the properties and he can be ousted only in the course of law. This was pre-eminently a fit case for invoking the aid of the salutary provisions of Act XIX of 1841, known as the Act for the protection of moveable and immoveable property against wrongful possession in eases of successions, and which I for brevity sake call the Curator's Act. The title of the Act is significant, that is, the object of it is to protect the property appertaining to an estate of this kind in case of a dispute as to succession. The death of the Raja took place only three months ago, and an application under the Curator's Act could be made within six months of the death of the late Raja. That Act in some respects stands in a similar position to section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with respect to certain specified properties, whereas its scope is larger, inasmuch as it all properties, moveable and embraces immoveable, and once for all it settles the right to hold possession of the property summarily directing the other disputants to seek their remedy in a proper Court, and unless that were done the danger to a breach of the peace will not be satisfactorily solved with respect to the estate in question.

The proceedings are, therefore, quashed, and I recommend that an action under that Act be taken.

ORDER.—Ninety villagers held a meeting and resolved to have no religious association in future with Moung Bya because he had been exemmunicated by the Yegu Pongyi and the "Sangha" of his gaing. A copy of the resolution was sent to Moung Bya. It was not denied that the complainant had been excommunicated and it seems clear he had been.

The Magistrate convicted the participants in the meeting of defamation on the ground that laymen had no right of excommunication. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the fact that outsiders were sure to hear what took place at the meeting would amount to publication.

It eannot be assumed that the passing of a resolution must be heard by others unless this is proved. It seems to me that, for a number of persons to meet and resolve not to associate with a person for reasons which I consider good, is not defamation, nor does the sending a copy to the person in question make it defamation. It would be a different matter if a copy of the resolution had been published. There appears to have been no intention to defame complainant. On the evidence, I am of opinion no offence was proved. Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for the recovery of Rs 9.500, principal and interest, on the following facts:—

It appears that one Musarmat Sons, the widow of Girdbari Lal, was in possession of her busband's estate after his death, consisting of certain shares in two villages called Nagla Ashal and Nagla Pachauni. On the 13th September 1888 she executed a deed of mortgage in respect of the share in Nagla Ashal in lieu of Rs. 600 in favour of Si Pal. She died in 1889. On the 21st July 1650 Megh Raj and Sant Lal, the reversioners of Girdbari Lal, executed a simple mortgage for Re. 2,000 in favour of Ganga Ram. property hypothecated in the said deed was the share in Nagla Pashauni. The mortgagors left Rs. 692 with Ganga Ram, the mortgages, for payment to Sri Pal. On the 4th August. 1909 Sri Pal sued to resover his mortgagemoney. He brought a suit against Megh Rajand the heirs of Sant Lal, the latter having died. Banarsi Lal had, prior to the suit of Sri Pal, purchased the share of Girdhari Lal in Nagla Ashal. He died, however, prior to the institution of the suit of Sri Pal. Tota Ram and shee Prased, as his legal representatives, were impleaded as defendants by Sri Pal in his mortgage-suit. The purchasers contested the suit on the ground, among others, that the mortgage.

money claimed by Sri Pal had been left with Ganga Ram and Ginga Ram should have been made a party and should be made to pay. The contesting defendants did not say in so many words that Ganga Ram had paid off the mortgage but they implied by their pleas in their written statement that, probably, the money had been paid. On the 7th July 1910 a decree was passed in favour of Sci Pal. The contesting defendants preferred an appeal which was compromised on the 13th F.bruary, 1911. The decree of Sci Pal was satisfied. In 1914 Sheo Prasad sued the beirs of Ganga Ram for the recovery of R: 4,000 which he had paid in satisfaction of the decree of Sri Pal. . The heirs of Ganga Ram pleaded payment to Sri Pal. and their plea was successful. The slaim of Sheo Prasad was dismissed on the 2nd August 1915. The appeal of Sheo Prasad was also unsusessful. On the 17th June 1919 the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by Sheo Prasad for the recovery of Rs. 4,000, together with interest, on the allegation that Sri Pal and the heirs of Ganga Ram had colladed to defraud him and hence the money that he had to pay to Sri Pal should be refunded to him. allegation of collasion was denied by Sri Pal as also the statement that the heirs of Ganga Ram had paid him any money due on his mortgage.

Tas learned Subordinate Judge decided against the plaintiff, holding that there was no priof to his satisfaction that Ganga Ram or his heirs had paid off the mortgage of Sci Pal prior to the institution of the suit of Sci. Pal, He was also of opinion that no collasion had been made out in the

We think that, on the facts as stated above and in the absence of evidence in support of the alleged collusion, the suit of the plaintiff is not maintainable. It seems to us that the plaintiff has been the victim of circumstances and bad management of his case in the former litigation. The fact, however, remains that as the collusion alleged in the plaint has not been established the mortgage decree of Sri Pal against the appellant cannot be ignored or set aside and relief granted to the plaintiff on the ground that Sri Pal brought a false suit and gave false evidence in support of his case. The view that we have taken is supported by the case

In that ease it was held that if the non-service on the defendant is due to the fraudulent conduct of the plaintiff in the suit and others acting for him which has led to a decree against the defendant, such decree may be set aside on the ground of fraud. That, however, is a very different ease to the one before us.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of '885', s. 52 (a) - Enhancement of rent-Excess area-Intermediate Survey Settlement of land by scientific measurement-Excess area over area found in Intermediate Settlement-Presumption - Onus-Landlord and tenant.

The area of a holding was determined by scientific measurement at the Settlement of 1-98, and was accepted by the tenant who paid rent according to that area. At the subsequent Settlement the area was again measured and was found to be in excess of that found at that of 1894.

Held, that the presumption was that the area found at the previous Settlement was the accurate area for which the tenant was paying rent and that under section 2 of the Bengal Tenaucy Act the landlord was entitled to the additional rent such as may be just and equitable upon the excess area. JUDGMETT.

MILLER, C. J .- This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from the decision of a Single Judge of the Court overruling the decision of the Special Judge who had affirmed that of the Assistant Settlement Officer.

The appellant took proseedings section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as landlord against a large number of tenants elaiming in some eases enhancement of rent under Section 30 of the Ast, and in other eases additional rent under section

The present appeal is concerned only with the claims under the latter section in respect of land held by the tenants in excess of the area for which rent had been previously paid by them. In certain cases it was found that the tenants had been in occupation of their holdings since before the Survey and Settlement operations of 1898 and paying rent therefor to the land. lord, and that the Settlement and Record of Rights finally published in March 1917 showed that, although the rent remained the same, the area of their holdings was in excess of that for which they had been paying rent according to the previous Settlement. The Assistant Settlement Officer before whom the case came, held that in the eases mentioned the landlord was entitled to an additional fair rent for the excess areas after making an allowance of 5 per cent. for probable difference in area extraction. An appeal by the tenants to the Special Judge was dismissed. On second appeal to this Court the case came before Mr. Justice Ross who took the view that in all such eases, in order to prove that the lands in respect of which an additional rent is elsimed are in excess of the area for which rent was previously paid, the landlord must show that the area included in the tenancy at its inception was less than that subsequently shown by measurement to be in ossupation of the tenant. It followed from this, in his view, that although the tenants' holdings were proved by scientific measure. ment at the previous Survey and Settlement operations made some twenty years earlier, to have been less than that for which they BISHNU PRIGASH NEBAYAN U. ACHARI DUSADH.

were still paying the same rent as shown by the subsequent Survey, the landlord could not recover any additional rent in respect of the excess area. For this finding he relied upon the decisions in the following eases, Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1), Razendra Lal Goswami v. Chunder Bhusan Goswami (2) and Rajkumar tratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (3).

With great respect to the learned Judge I am unable to concur in the view taken by him; on referring to section 52 (a) of the Bangal Tenancy Act it does not appear that the tenants' liability to pay additional rent is limited to cases where the area is in excess of that comprised in the Settlement at its inception, but merely to cases where the land is proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him. The section provides as follows:

"52 (1) Every tenant shall-

"(a) be liable to pay additional rent for all land proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him, unless it is proved that the excess is due to the addition to the tenure or holding of land which having previously belonged to the tenure or holding was lost by diluvion or otherwise without any reduction of the rent being made."

The exception in the latter part of this section does not apply to the present case. By elause (b) of the section the tenant is entitled to a reduction of rent in similar eircumstances where the measurement shows a deficiency in the area of his tenure or holding as compared with the area for which rent has been previously paid by him. And in the case of some of the tenants the Assistant Settlement Officer allowed such reductions but we are not concerned with them in the present appeal. Where no previous measurement has been made upon a scientific basis from which the actual area of the land held by the tenant can be securately determined and compared with the area proved to be held at the date of the claim, no doubt the landlord is confronted with a more serious problem in proving an excess of area, and, generally speaking, he sould only discharge the burden of proof in the case supposed by showing that the area of the tenure or holding at its inception was less than that subsequently shown by proper measurement to be in occupation of the tenant. Consequently, it was held in Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1) that the mere fact that a measurement made under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, showed the tenants to be in occupation of lands in excess of the areas shown in the Zemindary papers and rent-receipts did not necessarily prove that the landlord was entitled to an additional rent. It is important to bear in mind that in that case it was found that at no previous time had there been a measurement of the lands in suit, and that the actual areas let out were originally assertained by guess work without any accurate Survey, and it was the areas so arrived at that were entered in the landlord's paper. The Court thought it would be impossible, in these sirsumstances, to find that the areas were accurately stated in the landlord's papers. They added that it was for the Zemindar to show that the lands were in excess of those for which rents were being paid and that to do this it was for him to show what those lands are and what were the terms of the Original Settlement and what was the process of measurement, if any, adopted. This has been relied on for the proposition that in all cases, even if there has been an Intermediate Settlement, the landlord must go back to the inception of the tenancy and prove what area was then settled. I do not think the decision can be held to support this view. In dealing with the object of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act the jadgment states that it is to enable the landlords and tenants to know their relative positions towards one another and not to disturb previously existing relations unless it can be shown that they have terminated, and adds: "The Zemindar in this case is bound to show how the areas in the last Settlement with the raigats were ascertained and that the raigats are now in possession of exsess lands and consequently liable to pay additional rent therefor." The Settlement and Record of Rights defines the relationship between landlord and tenant in various respects including the area of the holdings for which rent is paid and is presumed to represent what is the relationship between them until the contriry is proved. The Settlement in 1898 was made in the preserve of both parties and ascepted without objection as representing the area for which rent is paid. The effect of such a Settlement would be to throw the onus upon the party questioning it, in this case the tenant, to show that it did not accurately represent the true state of affairs. In the present case, therefore, it must be presumed that the Setilement of 1898 was correct and the initial onus east upon the landlord is discharged. The subsequent Settlement shows an area arrived at by the same process of measurement to be in excess of that for which rent has been previously paid.

The later decisions which have been referred to are based upon the decision in Gouri Pattra's case (1) and do not earry the matter any further in so far as the general principle is concerned. In none of them was there an Intermediate Settlement by which the area could be definitely ascertained. Raendra Lal Goswami v. Chunder Bhusan Goswami (2) was complicated by the fact that the excess claimed by the landlord was alleged by the tenant to be due to the addition of land previously belonging to the tenure but lost by diluvion which is not the case here. In Rakumar Fratap San y v. Ram Lal Singh (3), there was leter-Sattlement and, therefore, the Original Settlement had to be proved before it could be shown that the lands were in excess of those for which rent was previously paid. In the later case of Durga Friya Ohoudhury v. Haera Gain (4), it was definitel, held that it is not in all sases neces. sary for the landlord to prove the area of the holding at the time of the incertion of the tenancy. It is sufficient for the land lord to establish that sixes the icception of the tenancy rent has been as essed on the basis of a certain area and that the tenant is in possession of lands not included in that area and on which no rent was assessed.

In the present case the previous Survey and Settlement khatiyan were produced and proved and from these it appears on comparison with the recent Survey, in which the method of measurement was the same, that the tenants are holding lands in excess of those for which they were paying the same rent since 1898. The only point which appears to have been urged by the tenants on appeal to the Special Judge was that the Survey measurements must have been inaccurate, an argument which did not commend itself to the Special Judge. In this respect I concur with his view. On the facts proved, I think the appellant has satis. fied the barden of proof required by section 52 of the Act and is entitled to the additional rents such as may be just ar dequitable upon the excess areas found by the Assistant Sattlement Officer. The appeal is allowed. The decree of Ross, J., is set aside and that of the Assistant Settlement Officer restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs here and before Rose, J.

ADAMI, J.—The appellant in applications or der section 105 read with section 52 (1) (a) of the Lengal Tenency Act claimed additional rent in respect of lands in the holdings of the respondents his tenants in village Hiramni, which, according to his allegation, were shown by the measurement entered in the Record of Rights to be in excess of the area for which rent had been previously paid by them. He asserted in the application that at their inception of the tenancies the area of the holdings had been determined by measurement with a pole of ten cubits.

The Assistant Settlement Officer decided that the appellant had failed to prove either actual enercachment or that there was a practice of Settlement of land by measurement in the estate, and, if there was such a practice, how the measure adopted for the purpose compared with the present Survey measure. He found, however, that the respondents had held the tenancies from the time of the previous Settlement, the Record of Rights of which was finally published in 18.8, and that there had been no alteration of rent since that year, and beld that the appellant landlord was entitled to additional rent for any excess area found on comparison of the Survey area of 1898 with the area shown in the Record of Rights published in 1917. Therefore, after making an allowance of 5 per cent, for probable difference in the area extraction of the came field by different persons at differen BIGHUN PRAGASH NABAYAN U. ACHAIB DUSADH.

times, he assessed a fair rent in respect of the excess area so found, and granted the applications to that extent.

The Special Judgs, on appeal by the present respondents, upheld the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer, finding that at each Survey the area was determined by a scientific process and that the comparison gave sufficient evidence of an excess.

On second appeal the learned Judge of this Court has disagreed with the lower Courts and has held, basing his decision on Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1), Raiendra Lal Goswams v. Chunder Bhusan Goszami (2) and Rojkumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (3), that in order to show that the lands in respect of which an additional rent is elaimed are lands beld in excess of those for which rent was paid, the landlord must prove an excess over the quantity of land included in the tenancy at its inception, and that the criterion is the area of the holding at the inception of the tenancy and not any intermediate measurement. learned Judge refused to accept the argument that the present case should be differentiated from the cases on which he relies because in the present case there were two Survey measurements in both of which the same seientific standard was employed, as be finds that there is no authority to support the view. and no justification in principle to support the argument.

Now, section 52 (1) (a) is perfectly clear in its terms; it provides that "every tenant chall be liable to pay additional rent for all land proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him" and sub-section (2) runs: "In determining the area for which rent has been previously paid; the Court shall, if so required by any party to the suit, have regard to —

"(a) the origin and conditions of the tenancy, for instance, whether the reut was a consolidated rent for the entire tenure or holding......

"(d) the length of the measure used or in local use at the time of the origin of the tenancy, as compared with that used or in local use at the time of the institution of the suit,"

In the case of Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1) the landlord sought to prove the area for which rent had been previously paid by the tenants by entries of area in his Zamindari papers and in rent receipt. There was no evidence in that ease that there had been any measurement of the lands assording to any actual standard and it was found that the areas shown in the Zamindari papers were arrived at by guess work. The Court rightly held that the areas shown in the papers sould not be accepted. The judgment shows that it was assumed that the tenants had required the Assistant Settlement Officer to have regard to the points mentioned in sub-section (2). In absence of other evidence of measurement, the Court decided that it was for the landlord to show what were the terms of the Original Settlement and whether it was by any, and if so by what, process of measurement.

In the case of Rajendra Lal Goswami v. Ohunder Bhusan Goswami (2) the landlord sought to base the comparison on the area shown in the Revenue Survey papers of 1854. The learned Judges appear to have considered that sub-section (2) of section 52 was mandatory, whether the tenants required the Court to have regard to the origin of the tenancy or not, and held that the landlord must show that the alleged excess is really an excess over the area of the tenure as originally created. They state: "We think the language of sub-section (2), elause (a), by referring to the origin and conditions of the tenancy as some of the eircumstances which the Court is required to have regard to, shows that the expression the area for which rent has been previously paid' must be understood to mean the area with reference to which the rent previously paid had been assessed or adjusted."

The decision in Rukumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (3) followed that in Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily (1) as did the decision in Ratan Lall Birwas v. Jadu Halsana (5) but in both of these cases the landlord cought to base the comparison on entries in Zamindari papers and receipts, no scientific previous measurement was shown.

The above eases are authorities for the principle that where there is no good evidence of rejentific measurement, assessment or adjustment since the inception of the tenancy the landlord will have to prove what was the area at the origin of the tenancy, or that the lands criginally settled were defined by boundaries which have been encroached upon or that rent was settled at a certain rent per bigha.

In Ra endra Lal Goswami v. Chunder Bhusan Goswami (2) and in Akbar Ali Mian v. Hira Bibi (6) it has been held that the words "the area for which rent has been previously paid" in section 52, mean "the area with reference to which the rent previously paid has been assessed or adjusted," and lin the case of Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra Gain (4), where the District Judge has held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the area of the holding at the time of the inception of the tenancy, Sir Asutosh Mukerjee, Acting C. J., beld that the view taken by the District Judge was erroneous and that it was sufficient for the landlord to prove that since the creation of the tenancy rent had been assessed, that when rent was last assessed the assessment was on the basis of a certain area and that the defendants were in possession of land on which no rent was assessed at the time.

Now, in the present ease, there is nothing to show when the tenancies were created, or how rent was assessed, whether the rent was a consolidated rent, or was assessed, at a certain rate per bigha or whether there was any measurement of the holdings at the inception. We have the evidence, however, of the Record of Rights published in 1893 that a certain rent was then being paid for a holding of a certain area. During the preparation of the Record of Rights the holding was measured scientific. ally and the area shown in the record was the result of the measurement, the Settlement proceedings were carried on publicly and the parties may be presumed to have been present and to have had every opportunity of object. The rent payable by the tenants was ascertained and recorded and it must be presumed that the tenants accepted that reit as the rent payable for the area as recorded. They did not come forward and prove that the area recorded was less than the area of the holding at its inception The entry shows that the rent entered there was either the rent for the area which the tenants had been paying previous to 1898 or was the rent assessed or adjusted after dispute during the Settlement proceedings between the parties as to the amount payable. In my opinion, the area shown in the Record of 1898 was the area with reference to which the rent previously paid by the respondents was assessed or adjusted. The respondents continued to pay the same rent for nearly twenty years and at the end of that time in the Settlement of 1917 it was found after scientific measurement by the same standard that the area of the holding for which that rent was being paid had increased. I am of opinion that, according to the clear wording of section 52 (1) (a), the landlord was entitled to additional rent for the land in the holdings which was not covered by the area entered in the Record of Rights of 1898.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs and set aside the decree now appealed against.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal is, whether a woman who was living in adultery with a deceased Hindu up to the time of his death is entitled to maintenance from his estate in the hands of The plaintiff, Musommat his widow. Rukmin, is the wife of one Bahore Singh who is still alive. She lived for a number of years as the conenbine of Amer Singh and was so living at his death. On Amar Singh's death bis widow, Musammat Chandra Kunwar, the defendant appellant, succeeded to his estate. Musammat Rokmin brought the suit out of which this appeal arises, claiming to be entitled to maintenance under Hindu Law and also asserting that the amount of that maintenance was fixed at Rs. 30 a month by agreement with the defendant. Both the Courts below have decided in favour of her right to maintenance The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the story of the argeement and fixed the maintenance at Rs. 20 a month. She accepted this desision and did not appeal. Noth withstanding this, the learned Additional Judge held that the agreement was proved, though, as she had not appealed, he could not increase the amount allowed by the Trial Court. In this Court the learned Counsel for the respondent has argued that the connection of his elient with the deceased sannot propsalled adulterous pecause erly be husband Bahore Singh consented to her being taken into the keeping of the deceased. This, however, did not have the effect of dissolving the marriage and the lower Appellate Court has expressly found that her connection with Amir Singh was an adulter-

There is considerable authority for the view that a concubine who lives with a man up to the time of his death is in general entitled to maintenance from his estate but the only authority for extending this right to the case of an adulterous connection is to be found in two Bombay eases, Khemkor v. Umiashankar Ranchhor (1) and Ningaraddi v. Lakshmawa (2). In the former ease the plaintiff had actually contracted a marriage with the person with whom she was living but it was found that the marriage was invalid. The judgment is a very brief one and the 'point that the connection was adulterous was not really considered. The only authorities referred to by the Court were two passages in Strange's Hinda Law and West and Buhler's Digest, respectively. naither of which touch the point here in dispute. In the case of Ningaraddi v. Lakehmaka (2) the only passage in which this point is referred to is a sentence in the judgment of Mr. Justice Crowe which 8ay8 : -

"There can be no doubt on the authorities that a concubine is entitled to maintenance though the connection was an adulterous one, provided that it was of a permanent nature."

No authorities are referred to and the only authorities refereed to in the judgment of the Court below were the case of Khemkor v. Umiashankar Ranchhor (1) already referred to and a case in 12 Bombay High Court Raports, page 229 [Vrandavanias Ramdis v. Yamunabai (3), in which there is nothing in the report to show that the concubine in question was a married woman. Oartain at stements in modern English commentaries have been sited for the respondent, but these state. ments are all based on the foundation of the two Bombay eases referred to above. Mayne, Eighth Elition, page 620, reproduces the statement of Mr. Justice Crowe in Ningaraddi v. Laksimawa (2) and supports it in a footnote by reference to the eases in 10 and 12 Bombay High Court Reports . Khemkor v. Umiashankar Hanchhor (1) and Vrandavindas Rundas v. Law, page 174, 2 Macnaughten, page 119, and West and Buhler, page 164. (Lomit references to the Dayabhaga and the Mayukha as irrelevant in this case where the parties are governed by Mitakshara Law). None of these authorities enpport the statement in the text. The only one on which the respondent's Connsel was prepared to rely was the passage in the Mitakabara, Chapter II, section 1, paragraphs 27 and 28. This contains a quotation from Katyayana who, after saying that heirless property goes to the King, says that a deduction must be made for subsistence for the females. The commentator expounds this 88 kept in concubinage. is also a reference to maintenance to concubines in a passage cited from Narada in paragraph 7 of the same Chapter. In neither of these passages is any reference made to the case of a concubine living in adultery. Now, it is cartainly highly repugnant to natural feeling that a widow should be under an obligation to provide out of her busband's estate for a woman whose connection with her husband amounted to a criminal offence and was a continuing injury to herself; and some clear authority in the Hindu texts would be required to justify it. No such authority can be found. It is argued by the respondent that the fact of adultery being an offence under the Criminal Law is irrelevant inasmuch as the Indian Penal Code is a modern enastment, but adultery by a married woman is at least as grave an offence under the Hindu system of law as it is under any modern system. In my opinion, the two Bombay cases relied on by the respondent are not supported by the authorities on which they profess to rely and have given an extension to the right of maintenance which is not warranted by the original authorities. If the plaintiff's claim under Hindu Law fails she cannot fall back on the agreement. which was a mere promise to pay unsupported by consideration. If the agreement had been made by Amar Singh in his lifetime it might be suggested that there was consideration for it in the fact of past cohabitation, but such an argument cannot be advanced in the case of a promise made by the widow. It has also been suggested that the promise might be regarded as a compromise of a disputed slaim, but there is no evidence to support this view nor has this been found by the Court below.

For the above reasons, I allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to his Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court dated the 12th April 1921. The judgment which it is sought to appeal from is a judgment of reversal and the value of the matter in dispute is over Rs. 10,000, but the respondents contend that the application for leave to appeal was out of time. The period of limitation under Article 179 of the Limitation Act, as now amended, is 90 days for a person desiring to appeal under the Civil Procedure Code to His Majesty in Council. The judgment of this Court was dated the 12th April 1921 and the 90 days allowed would expire on the 11th July. The petitioner applied for a sopy of the judgment appealed from on the 9th July and did not obtain that until the 25th and two days later, on the 27th, the application for leave to appeal was filed. It is quite obvious that, if the period occupied in obtaining a copy of the judgment is excluded, the application is in time. Even if one only excludes the two days of that period from the 9th to the 11th July still as the application was filed two days after the copy was obtained, Ithink that the application was clearly in time. It has been contended, however, by the learned Vakil who appears for the respondents that we ought to exclude the period which was not occupied in obtaining a copy of the judgment and that sestion 12 of the Limitation Ast does not apply to eases of appeals to His Majesty in Council. In my opinion this contention is not well founded. The question of whether section 12 applies to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council has no doubt been the subject of somewhat ecflicting decisions in the different High Courts in India but the matter was considered by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Rafique in the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ram Sarup v. Jasuant Rai (1), and the learned Judges in that case came to the conclusion that in computing the period of limitation under Article 179 of the Limitation Act the applicant was entitled, under section 12, clause (2), of the Limitation Act, to exclude the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced end the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. They atrived at this conclusion on the ground that section 12, sub section (2) of the Limitation Ast was general in its terms and arplied to all applications for leave to appeal, whereas, formerly, under the previous Act, it had been restricted to appli-eations for leave to appeal as a pauper. opinion that desision expresses la my properly the interpretation of section 12 Sub-clause (2), however, of section 12 only deals with obtaining copies of the decree, sentence, or order appealed from and, therefore, does not in terms cover the present case where the time sought to be deducted is the time occupied in obtain. ing a copy of the judgment. A copy of the deeree was applied for sometime between the 9th July and the 25th July and it does not appear that any further time was occupied in applying for a copy of the decree. I think, however, that subsection (3) of section 12 of the Limitation Act applies to the present case and that the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment ought also to be deducted in eases of application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. I think that the provisions of sub-section (3) are meant to apply generally to cases covered by sub-section (2) and the reason seems to me to be this that if the appeal in question is from a decree then it is generally nessessary that the judgment on which that decree is based should also be obtained in order that the parties may satisfy themselves by reference o it exactly what its terms are and, further, in order that they may, as is provided in the Civil Procedure Code and under the rules of most High Courts, file a copy of the judgment with the application for leave to appeal. Under the practice in this Court it is necessary that a copy of the judgment from which it is sought to appeal should always be filed with the petition applying for leave. The Court insists upon that, because in some cases it is absolutely necessary that the judgment itself should be considered, notably in cases where the question is whether a substantial question of law arises for consideration by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In my opinion, therefore, the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the judgment ought to be dedusted in this case. If that is done, then the application for leave to appeal was in time and I think a certificate should issue that the case complies with the provisions of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. As this application has been opposed by the reSADIQ BUSAIN C. NAZIR BUSAIN EHAN.

Case-law considered.

In order to ascertain whether a property is wakf, user may be evidence of a dedication the origin of which is unknown, but it cannot be substituted for it. What is required is an indication that the wakif has divested himself of his proprietary interest in the subject of the waky. Besides cases of complete endowment there may be instances of less complete dedication, in which, notwithstanding a religious d. dication, property descends and descends beneficially to heirs subject to a trust or charge for the purpose of religion. [p. 5t, cols. 1 & 2.] Case-law considered.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 15th February 1919.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haider Huszin, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought for a declaration that an area of 23 bighas 12 bismas. known as the Talkatora Karbala in the City of Lucknow, is walf property, and that the defendants have no proprietary right over any part of the property or its income. and for any other relief which the Court might think just. The Karbala in disoute is the principal Karbala of the Shia Community in Lucknow, being the place where all but a few of their tazias are buried in the Muharram of each year. It contains a large pakka mausoleum containing a representation of the tomb of Imam Hasain. it also includes two morques. To the south of these buildings is an area of grove and culturable land, Burials take place by permission of the so-sharers on payment of a substantial sam, both incide and outsite the enclosure containing the mausoleum. The whole compound is regarded with reverence by the Shia Community.

The defendants are the successors of Khuda Bakheb, who built and founded the Karbala in question in 1817 (1232 Hijri). They have defined shares in the property. The case of those of them who resisted the suit was that they were its owners. Four defendants admitted the plaintiffs' elaim and several others put in no appearance. For one reason or another the litigation has been going on since the year 1915. On February 15th 1919 the Trial Judge held the property to be wakf and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The only defendant who has appealed against the decree is Sadiq Husain who owns a three-annas share in the property. The learned Subordinate Judge decided the case without hearing any of the defendants' evidence and this necessitated a remand. Bat for this eireumstance the appeal would have ben decided a year and nine months ago. The SADIQ HUSAIN U. NaZIR HUSAIN KHAN.

appeal has been pressed on two grounds only. The first is, that the suit as brought was not maintainable except by permission of the Court obtained in accordance with O. I, r. &, Civil Procedure Code. It is common ground that no such permission was obtained. The second plea is, that the property is not wakf.

The rights in virtue of which the plaintiffs have brought their suit are stated in paragraph 13 of the plaint, which runs as

"That the plaintiffs beiong to the Shia sect and perform religious ecremonies and other practices in the kham and pukia compounds of the said Karbala, and the graves of their relations also stand there."

The first ground is common to the whole Shia Community of Lucknow. The second ground may be described as personal but the appellant contends that it is not sufficient to give a right of suit. He urges.—

vague and that there is no evidence in support of it except the equally vague statement of the first plaintiff in his evidence:—

"some deceased relations of mine are buried there."

(2) that it is admitted on both sides that no one can claim as of right to be buried in this plot.

Burials are only made by permission of the defendants on payment of a fee.

(3) that it is not suggested that the defendants have ever done any act which might amount to a desceration of graves or that they had any intention of committing such an act.

As regards the right claimed in common with the other Shias, the appellant's contention is, that in a case to which O. I. r. 2, applies no suit can be brought except in accordance with the provisions of that rule.

Sub rule (1) of O. I, r. 8, which is the rule relied on, provides that where there are numerous persons having the same interest in a suit one or more of them may with the permission of the Court sue or be sued on behalf of all of them. The Court is required in any such ease to give notice of the suit to all the persons interested, and under sub rule (2) any such person may apply to be made a party. Sub-rule (2) was enacted for the first time in the Ocde of 1:08, but sub-rule (1) re produces slucet without change the provisions of section 30 of the Code of 1882. It was at one time doubted whether section 30 of the Code of 1882 applied to a right such as the right to worship in a mosque which is common to a large number of persons, and there is at least one decision, e.g., Jawahra v. Akbar Bussin (1) in which it was held that the section applied only to a joint right. Later decisione, such as that in Dasondhay v. Mohammad Abu Nasar (2), have not taken this view but have at the same time established that in such cases the plaintiffs need not resort to the provisions of the section but are entitled to sue on the ground of the infringement of their personal right. The claim in the last mentioned case was for a declaration that the property containing a mosque, a graveyard and the shrine of a eaint was wakf property. It was held that the plaintiffs sould have brought a suit under section 3C on behalf of the whole Muhammadan Community of the town but that their suit should not be dismissed on the ground that they had failed to do so. A similar decision was arrived at in Muhammad Alam v. Akbor Husain (3) with reference to the right to use an Idgah. In the ease of Baiju Lat Parbatia v. Bulak Lal Pathuk (4) it was held that the section was only an enabling section and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their individual right. This was a case in which the right elaimed was common to a limited community of Hindu priests. Whether in a case like the present, in which the provisions of O. I, r. 8 are not invoked the desision would be binding on other members of the community under Explanation VI of section 11 of the Code is a matter which we need not here consider. It was no doubt answered in the negative in Ram Chandar v. Ali Muhammad (5), but the language of Explanation VI is very wide and. as a matter of public policy, if a claim that property is wakf is fought out on the merits and decided in the negative, it appears to be to the public interest that the persons in possession should not be liable to be harrassed by successive suits at the instance of other persons making a similar claim. As regards the point actually at issue there is a large consensus of authority for the view that the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the suit irrespective of the provisions of O. 1, r. 8 and we decide accordingly.

accordingly. The ease set up by the plaintiffs and accepted by the Judge of the Court below is, that the character of the property as wakf is established by user, which the Sabordinate Judge erroneously learned imagines to operate by way of estoppel. There is very little room for dispute as to the facts. It is clear from the evidence on both sides that the Karbala is regarded as a very sacred spot by the Shia Community. When Shias enter the compound they frequently take off their hats and raise the dust to their foreleads. Besides the burial of tazias at Moharram, people go there for prayer, to visit the tomb, and to read portions of the Kuran. The defendant admits the right of the public to do these things and disclaims any right or desire to prevent them. He also admits that the mausoleum and Khemagah are treated as sacred. Sajjad Mirz), one of the defendants' witnesses himself a so sharer in the property, goes so far as to admit that the mausoleum is walf. The other witness, Agha Ali, also a cc-sharer, denies this, but he also admits that any Shia can visit the premises at any time he likes to see the grave of the Imam, to observe religious ceremonies, say prayers and hold a maglis (religious assembly), and that no one has any right to prohibit him. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the property has been treated and dealt with as the property of the co-sharers and that interments within the area in suit can only take place by their permission. The khewats also support this. It is in evidence that on one occasion burials were stopped for a whole year owing to a dispute between the so-sharers. All the witnesses are agreed that, in the words of the plaintiffs' first witness, "if any one is buried on the Karbala land his heirs pay some money for the use of such land." He speaks of it as being paid to the manager of the Karbala, but this is because he regards the co sharers as being merely mutawallis. It is, however, perfectly clear and has been admitted that they have never been appointed as mutawallis. Several of them are women who would be most unlikely to be appointed mutawallis of a sacred shripe and who have in fact acquired their shares by transfer or inheritance. The learned Subordinate Judge unfortunately construed the order of remand as prohibiting him from examining the appellant as a witness, but of the two co-sharers in the property, who were examined, Sajjad Mirza inherited most of his share from his father who had acquired it by purchase, while he himself purchased the remaining one anna from the wife of Hamid Ali Khan, Barrister, He has not made it wakf al al aulad i.e., wakf in favour of his descendants. He has given two different reasons for doing sc. In examination in chief he stated that it was to avoid the expense of defending this suit. Considering the length of time that the litigation has been going on the expense must certainly have been considerable. In cross-examination he stated that it was to prevent the property being sold or mortgaged in future. Possibly. both motives may have it fluenced him. The other witness, Agha Ali, inherited his share through his father's eister. who was the wife of Zain-ul Abdin, son of Khuda Bakhsh, the original founder. Khuda Bakhsh in his life-time made a gift of the property to Zain-ul Abdin. The property was recorded as held in the proprietary right in defined shares both at the First and Second Regular Settlements, and various transfers have been proved covering a period from the year 1887 down to the present time.

The position of the defendant appellant is that, while he fully admits the obligation to allow Shias to use the Karbala for Muharram ceremonies and other religious acts and an obligation on his part to maintain the tomb (which obligation is expressed in the title deed under which he holds the property), there is nothing in these obligations inconsistent with the proprietary right which he and his co-sharers have, and have always had, in the property. It is a case of a property burdened with a trust and not a case of property which has ceased to be the subject of private ownership at all. While he admits an obligation to maintain the mansoleum be does not admit that he and his so-sharers are obliged to spend the whole income of the property on this purpose. The plaintiffs' witnesses have made vague statements as to the income being employed in the upkeep of the property, but in reality not one of the witnesses was in a position to prove that the whole income was spent on this purpose. Of the five witnesses whose statements appear in the appellant's paper book three are public officers, the City Magistrate and two Police Officers, whose only knowledge of the property was derived from their duty of seeing that no disturbance of the peace occurred at time of the Muharram. None of the witnesses have ever seen any assounts of income and expenditure. The appellant summoned a witness to produce the accounts, but this witness, Sajjad Mirze, the same man who made a walf al-al oulad, stated that when he made this wakf he made over the accounts to the mutawalli appointed under it. The Subordinate Judge, again unfortunately, refused permission to allow another witness to be called to put in the accounts: Vide proceedings of 18th June 1921. On the other hand, we have the positive evidence of Saiyed Agha Ali that the income from burials, which sometimes amounts to as much as Re. 40, for a single interment, is divided between the ec-sharers. This is in accordance with the probabilities of the esse. The defendant's two witnesses, Sajjad Mirza and Agha Ali, though they are ec-sharers in the property, are highly respectable witnesses who are not contesting the case in this Court and whose evidence there is no reason for discrediting.

As regards the two morques, the appellant's Counsel has stated that he has no objection to their being declared wakf. His position is that it is impossible that a building once used as a public mosque can ever again be diverted to secular uses, and as a mosque yields no income there is nothing to which private ownership can attach. The position with regard to the mansoleum is different. The mansoleum does yield a substantial income from offerings and from burials made for the inside and outside the walled enclosure which surrounds it.

The recorded eases in which wakf has been proved by user have all been cases in which no direct evidence of the origin of the trust was available. In this case the origin of the buildings is known and the intentions of the founder, Khuda Bakhab. are recorded in a deed which he excented in favour of his son, Zain al Abdin. The original of this document is not forthcoming and it may be presumed that it was lost in the Mutiny. The defendant filed in Court below a sopy purporting to be a true copy attested by the Assistant Resident at the Court of Ondb. This sopy was torn at the place where the attestation appeared and for this reason the learned Subordinate Judge to whom the ease was remanded considered that this fact precluded him from applying the presumption of section 90 of the Evidence Act and presuming it to be a true copy of the genuine original. The learned Subordinate Judge says in his report to this Court that he is sorry he could not treat it as proved because it would have thrown a flood of light upon the question of wakf. The appellant was subsequently able to obtain from another defendant and put in before this Court another certified copy which is not torn and which bears endorsement as a true copy purporting to be signed by the Assistant Resident of the time Mr. A. Loskett, It also bears the initials "A. L." in the same handwriting both at the foot of the page and on the reverse. This doonment is of vital importance, and as the appellant was unaware until after the remand hearing that the Court would not accept it we considered that there were sufficient reasons for allowing it to be tendered in the Appellate Court, and have admitted it under O. XLI, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The remand evidence was heard on 2nd and 18th June 1921, but the endorsement on the document as unproved was only made on 30th November 1921, the day after the learned Subordinate Judge submitted his report. The respondents' Counsel when asked whether he admitted it, at first said that it did not much matter whether he admitted it or not as the Court would probably, in any case, presume its genuireness. Ultimately, he desided to deny it. We have no doubt whatever that it is, to use the words of the learned . Subordinate

SADIQ HUFAIN C. NAZIR HUSAIN RHAN.

Judge, a true copy of the genuine original, and as both the original and the copy are more than thirty years old we presume its genuineness under section 90 of the Evidence Aet. The original purports to have been executed in the Hijri year 1232, the year when the Karbala was built, and the copy must, from the very fact of its being certified by the Assistant Resident, have been given at some time before the annexation of Oadh. This copy also goes to prove the genuineness of the copy previously tendered as the two copies are word for word the same, and in one instance where the handwriting of the latter copy is not quite clear we are enabled to make use of the former copy as a check on the latter.

The document is in the form of a petition presented to one Muhammad Afrin Ali Khan, evidently an official at the Court of the King of Oudb, in whose service Khuda Bakbsh was. It shows that both Knuda Bakhsh and his master were at the time in disfavour at Court and their lives were not safe. It is said that "there appears to be no likelihood of the continuance of our honour and good name" and that "owing to the implacable enmity of the Government officials I am entirely in despair of my life." The document further states that the writer has only one son, Mir Zain ul-Abdin, who has been brought up under the kind protestion of Muhammad Afrin Ali to whom the letter is addressed and who has no experience of the ups and downs of the times. It is mentioned, as a fact well known to Afrin Ali, that the writer's children and his family (apparently this description is not intended to include his son) are of bad disposition and not likely to remain in union with each other. Directions are given for the marriage and dower of the writer's unmarried daughter. The document then continues: -

The sum and substance is, that it is well-known to you that whatever I have earned by my exertions through your kindness. I spent the whole on building a copy of the Mausoleum of the Holy Karbala, considering it as a provision for the benefit of my soul for the next world, and it is my desire that the said mausoleum be illuminated and adorned in perpetuity without failure, diminution or disturbance, and that pilgrimage and weeping and mourning should be performed and that believers male and fe nale should mourn there, because this is the best object of desire in this world, and it is my further desire that there should not ossur any quarrel and disturbance such as took place among the mujawiran, managers and trustees of the Mausoleum of Hazat Abbas where every thing was destroy. ed. Therefore, while in the enjoyment of sound health and unimpaired intellect, of my own desire and free will, without reluct. anse and coercion, I have given and bestow. ed on my said son Mir Zain ul Abdin the said baildings of the mansoleum with pakka and kachcha compounds, mosques, watertanks (banz), etc., fourteen standard bighas of land whereon the said building stands with all the appurtenant rights, together with the old and new mango trees and Rs. 30,000 current coin cut of Rs. 52,000 which is held in deposit with you by way of trust and made him the proprietor thereof (dadam wa hiba wa tamlik namudam) without co-parcenership of any one else and having taken it out of my own possession have delivered it into his possession and control"

Then follows a sentence as to the exact reading of which the parties are in dispute. The appellant reads it, "If afterwards any of my relations slaim the property against the said donee, i. e., my son, for any reason or any ground it shall be deemed in law false and wrong," The plaintiffs would read it, "If afterwards any of my relations or those of my said son claim the property, ets" The partiels which preceds the words "mahublahu" is read by the appellant as "ba" and by the plaintiffs "ya." In favour of the former reading is the fact that in the copy first filed the word is clearly written as "ba." In the former reading two different prepositions are used express the same relation. According to the plaintiffe' reading, words have to be supplied which are not in the text. The official translator of the Court renders the passage thus :-

"If in future at any time, any one connected with me brings forward in any way any claim and dispute against the said dones (ba mahublahu maskur), i. e., the said son, the same would be false and wrong before God and under the Muhammadan Law."

SADIQ HUSAIN C. NAZIR HUSAIN KHAN,

In view of the preceding and succeeding context the general result of the deed is quite clear. The property is referred to in the succeeding sentence as property bestowed by gift in contradictinction to the remaining property which the writer directs to be divided amongst all his heirs after payment of debts. He then concludes:—

This petition of mine, which is in fact a deed of gift, is quite sufficient in my life and after my death and there is no need for a fresh document. Should I survive, I having taken this petition from you shall make it over myself to the said son; otherwise you will kindly deliver it with the aforesaid sum to my son, so that he, my children, wife and servants, who have no other patron and master than your blessed personality in their state of helplesness, despair and fear, be not in need of daily bread."

The thought in the doncr's mind seems to have been that as in the case of Hazrat Abbae's Mausoleum which had been made wakf and made over to trustees disputes among the latter had led to the ruin of the entire foundation, he thought it heat to give the property to his son and trust the latter to see that the buildings were properly kept up. The words which he uses clearly indicate an intention to confer proprietary right on the sen and the last centence, with its reference to his not being in need of daily bread, suggests strongly that he did not contemplate the upkeep of the buildings absorbing the entire revenue.

The certified copies of the above document produced in Court include also a copy of a retition presented by Khuda Bakhsh to the Resident at the Court of Oudh in the year 1235 Hijri, i.e., three years later. From this it appears that his patron had in the meantime died; while Khuda Bakhsh himself had only escaped through the intervention of the Hon'ble East India Company. He, therefore, encloses his deed of gift to the Resident with a request that it may be kept in deposit and acted on in due course.

The Subordinate Judge's finding regarding the question of wakf is contained in the following passage from his judgment:—

"I have given my best consideration to the evidence address by the plaintiffs and have no hesitation to hold that the whole plot

No. 18 (old) constitutes Kerbala and that it has ever been treated as wakf by the Shia public. The very form and title of the edifice leads to the constraint that in building the Karbala the founder, Khuda Bakhab, intends that it should be devoted exclusively to purposes of public worship. No portion of the Karbala is the private property of any person. The whole of it is wakf. Being wakf, it is neither heritable nor transferable."

The position as it appeared to the learned Subordinate Judge is radically modified by the deed executed by Khuda Bakhsh which we have received in evidence. This deed shows that Khuda Bakbeh did not intend, as the learned Subordinate Judge thought, that the property should cease to be the private property of any person. The only new development since his time has been the use of the property for Muharram selebrations and it is clear that though this was acquiesced in by the owners, indeed they have welcomed it as it has brought them increased revenue. they had never up to the time of suit abandoned their claim to private ownership. The desision of the ease cannot be affected by the fast that four of the defendants in their written statement have admitted the property to be wakf while others have not joined in the appeal. The fling of this suit by four leading Shias is an indication of the existence of a strong local opinion among the Shia Community in favour of making the property wakf. The appellant, Sadiq Husain, is a resident of Ajudhia and, therefore, probably less inflaenced by local opinion than most of his o defendants.

On the state of facts found by us, the plaintiffs could only succeed in the suit by showing that it is impossible in the Muhammadan Law for property made use of for religious purposes to be the subject of private ownership. There is no authority which goes this length. The property is elaimed primarily on behalf of the Shia Community, and the case is admittedly governed by Shia law. In the leading Shia authority, the Sharaya ul-Islam, as translated in Baillie's Digest, Volume II. Blok V. wakf is discussed under four heads, namely:—

Conditions relating to the maukuf or dedicated property.

Conditions relating to the wataf or dedicator.

SADIQ BUSAIN U. MAZIR BUSAIN KHAN.

Conditions relating to the maukuf aichi or bereficiary.

Conditions relating to the wakf itself.

It is only under the four heads that any reference is made to the effect of user. The conditions relating to the wakf are four in number, one of which is that possession must be given of the thing appropriated. Under the head of 'possession' it is laid down (page 219) that the seizin will ordinarily be that of the maukuf alchi but that in the case of an appropriation for a maslahat or useful purpose, acceptance is dispensed with and as to possession that of the Nazir or Saperintendent is sufficient. Then follows the only passage dealing with user with reference to wakf:—

"If one should appropriate a masjid or place of worship, it is valid though only one person should pray in it. So, also, if the appropriation is of a semetery, it becomes a wakf by the interment in it of a single corpse. But though people should pray in a masid or bury in a semetery, without the formal words being pronounced; neither would pass out of the property of the original owner."

This passage presupposes an original dedication. User may be evidence of a dedication the origin of which is unknown, but it cannot be substituted for it. This is also clear from Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, page 500, where it is said.—

"What is required is an indication that the wakif has divested himself of his proprietary interest in the subject of the

A brief reference to the most important cases cited at the bar will suffice to conclude this judgment. The appellant has relied on the Privy Council judgment in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (6), and on other cases in which this judgment has been followed, for the proposition that a person who disputes a right to alienate land on the ground that it is endowed property must give strong and clear evidence of the endowment and that the fact that the rents of the property have been applied for a considerable period to the support of a religious institution is not

(6) 2 C. 341; 4 I. A. 52; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 503.

by itself sufficient. Kontear Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (6) is a case of a Hindu endomment but Abdul Grifur v. Mahant Shiam Sundar Das (7) and Mahmud v. Muhammad Hamid (8)ere cases in which the property was claimed as wakf under Muhammadan Law. He has cited Fakhr ud din Shah v. Kifayat-ul lah (9) as an instance to show that where user has been relied on in support of a walf it has been treated as evidence from which a dedication sould, in the sireumstances of the case, be inferred. He has relied on the judgment of the Privy Council in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hamenta Kamari Debi (10) for the proposition laid down therein that besides eases of complete endowment there may be-

"Instances of less complete dedications, in which not withstanding a religious dedication, property descends (and descends beneficially) to heirs subject to a trust or charge for the purpose of religion "

"desire to speak with caution, but it seems possible that there may be other cases of partial or qualified dedication, not quite so simple as those to which reference has been made." not used in it and although the trust did not exhaust the entire property. The deed was one which in terms made over the entire property to trusts reserving no proprietary interest to the beneficiaries as such. The deed in that case cannot be used as a guide to the construction of the deed executed by Khuda Bakhsh. They also rely on the Privy Conneil case of Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (13). This was a case in which a certain plot of land in the City of Multan had been publicly thrown open for the purpose of a graveyard for the Muhammadan Community. Their Lordships upheld the elaim that the land was walf in the following terms:-

"Their Lordships agree with the Chief Court in thinking that the land in suit forms part of a graveyard set apart for the Musalman Community, and that by user, if not by dedication, the land is wakf."

It is possible to read the sentence quoted as implying that user may be a substitute for dedication but on a perusal of the entire judgment we do not think that this was their Lordships' meaning.

As some of the defendants have admitted the property to be wakf while others acqueiseed in the decree of the Court below we do not think it necessary to disturb the degree so far as it affects them. So far as the appellant's share is concerned, we uphold the decree as regards the two mosques but set it aside as regards the remaining property and substitute therefor a decree in terms of paragraph 16 (c) of the plaint declaring,—

(a) that the appellant has no right to interfere with the use of the property for Muharram ceremonies, prayer, majlis, recitation of Kurav, visits to the tomb and similar religious acts and that he has no right to make any use of the property which is inconsistent with its use for the aforesaid purposes, and—

(b) that he is liable from the income of the property to defray his share of costs of maintaining the buildings which stand on the land.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch. I, Art. 181 - Foreclosure decree nisi-Application to make decree absolute-Limitation.

An application to make a foreclosure decree final is governed in matter of limitation by Article 181 of the Limitation Act. [p. 99, col. 1.]

A preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed by the High Court on the 3rd of July 1912, but the mortgagor preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Council which was ultimately dismissed for non-prosecution on the 9th October 1916:

Held, that the limitation for applying for making the decree final began to run from the 8rd July 1913 inasmuch as the result of the dismissal of the appeal for non-prosecution was to place the parties in the same position as if there was no appeal [p. 99, col. 2]

Where during the pendency of an appeal to the Privy Council in a suit on a mortgage an order is made for the appointment of a Receiver with a direction upon him to pay the interest due to the mortgage, it operates in substance as an order staying further proceedings in the suit until the disposal of the appeal by the Privy Council and the period during which such order subsists should be excluded within section 15 of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation for making an application for a foreclosure decree. [p. 101, col. 1.]

under the provision of Order XXXIV, rule 3, of the Code; and the only question which we have to determine in this appeal is, whether the application of the plaintiff was barred by limitation.

On the 3rd of July 1913 the Calcutta High Court, modifying the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge which was a desree for sale, passed a foreelosure decree nisi in favour of the plaintiffs whereby it fixed the 3rd of January 1914 as the date for payment of the mortgaga-money by the defendants to the plaintiffs. On the 22ad Desember 1921 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 presented an application and in due course obtained a certificate for lasve to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On the 9th January 1914 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 presented another application to the Calcutta High Court. They stated in that petition that they were negotiating for a loan to pay off the mortgage and had also preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Counsil from the decree passed by the High Court. They asserted that the opposite parties were "contemplating to apply for the final decree of foreelosure and for the delivery of posseseion of the property to them" and they asked as follows: "It is, therefore, prayed that your Lordships will be pleased to stay the passing of the final decree for forcelosure for such period as to your Lordships appear proper, and, in the alternative, to stay the delivery of possession over the said mortgage property on your petitioner's furnishing security, and in case of their being unable to do so, to appoint a Receiver for the management of the property and to pass such order or orders as to your Lordships appear just and proper." On the 20th January 1914 the High Court appointed Babu Siva Nandan Roy, pending the disposal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council, Reseiver of the disputed mortgaged properties in suit, and directed the Receiver to pay all the rents as they fell due and also the interest on the mortgage debt. On the let of June the Reseiver was discharged as he deslined to act on the remuneration fixed for him. On the 1st of September 1914 some of the mortgagees applied for an order that, as there was no fresh order for the appointment of a Receiver, they were at liberty to apply for the final decree for foreclosure and delivery of passession of the mortgaged properties in accordance with the decree of the High Court dated the 3rd July 1913. This application had the effect of compelling the defendants to make another application for the appointment of a Receiver, and this they did on the 2nd September 1914. On the 3rd September 1914 the High Court made an order on the Subordinate Judge to appoint a fit and proper person as the Reseiver of the mortgaged properties. It is not disputed that, in pursuance of this order, the Subordinate Judge appointed a person the Receiver of the properties and directed the Receiver to pay the interest on the mortgage debt. The next date of importance is the 9th of October 1916, when the Judicial Committee dismissed the appeal of the mortgagors for non prosecution of the appeal. On the 20th December 1917 the plaintiffs applied to the High Court for the discharge of the Reseiver and for an order on the Reseiver to make over mortgaged properties to them. On this application the High Court passed the following order: "We direct that the Receiver do forthwith pass his assounts, but that he be not discharged until a further application. mortgagees will be at liberty to proceed with a view to obtaining a final decree notwithstanding the fact that the Receiver is in possession". This order was passed on the 18th March 1918, and on the 3rd April 1918, the mortgagees presented their application out of which the present appeal arises for a final decree in the foreelosure action under the provision of Order XXXIV, rule 3 of the Code. It is to be remembered that the preliminary decree for foreelosure was passed on the 3rd July 1913; and the fact that the present application was presented on the 3rd of April 1918 encouraged the mortgagors to raise plea of limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected the plea; and the only question which we have to determine in this appeal is, whether the plea put forward on behalf of the mortgagors was a good plea.

Mr. Manuk on behalf of the respondents argues that his right to apply for a final decree in a foreslosure action accrues from day to day and that the Statute of Limitation is inapplicable to such an application and he relies on Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (1). As has been pointed out more than once, that was not a decision on the question which we have now to determine, for the learned Judges in that case held that the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, did not apply to the case at all. It is conceded that the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, does apply to the present case, and I have no doubt whatever that the question, as it has now arisen, is comewhat different from the question which the learned Judges in Madhao Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (1) had to try. Now, there was considerable difference of opinion at one time on the question as to whether orders under sections 87 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act were orders in the suit itself or in execution, and whether the Limitation Ast, and, if so, whether Article 178 or 179 of the old Limitation Act governed an application for obtaining such orders. It was with a view to put an end to the corflict of decisions that provisions as to mortgage suits have been removed from the Transfer of Property Act to the Code of Civil Procedure and applications which follow preliminary decrees either for eale or for foreslosure are now described as applications for a decree for sale and a decree for foreelegare and not applications for an order for sale or for an order for foreslosure. It is impossible now to contend that these applications are not applications under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. If that be so, Article 181 of the Limitation Act elearly governs such an application and the period of limitation is three years from the time when the right to apply accrues. This was the view which was taken by this Court in Bala Ram Naik v. Kanhai Bharan (2).

CHLOTEY NABAIN SINGH U. KEDAR MATH SINGH.

The next question is when did the right to apply accrue? It will be remembered that the preliminary decree was passed on the 3rd July 1913 and that, though the mort-gagors carried an appeal to His Majesty in Council that appeal was dismissed on the 9th October 1916, not on merits, but for non-prosecution of the appeal. Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the appealants contends that the result of the dismissal of the appeal for non prosecution was to place the parties in the same position as if there was no appeal and that, accordingly, the right to apply asserted on the 3rd July 1913. That was certainly the view which was taken by the Judicial Committee in Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (3). That ease was decided under the Transfer of Property Ast and the old Limitation Act before the new Civil Procedure Code made a change in the relating to mortgage actions. procedure In that case the Court of first instance passed a decree in favour of the mertgagee on the 12th May 1890 for the sale of the mortgage property unless payment was made on or before the 12th August 1890. There was an appeal to the Allahabad High Court and that appeal was dismissed on the 8th April 1893. The mortgagor obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but did not prosecute his appeal, and on the 13th May 1901 the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution. The Judicial Committee held that Article 179 of the Limitation Act governed the application which was then presented by the decree-holder for an order absolute for sale and that limitation began to run, not from the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution, but from the order of the High Court confirming the deares. The Judicial Committee in the course of its judgment said as follows:-- The dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised anthoritatively that the appellant had not somplied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that, therefore, he was in the same position as if he had not appealed at all. To put it shortly, the only decree for sale that exists is the decree, dated . the 8th April 1893, and that is a decree of the High Court of Allahabad." That case was of sourse decided on the view that an application for an order absolute for sale under the Transfer of Property Act was an application in execution of the decree. The position now is different but we are entitled to hold by analogy that the right to apply in the present case accrued on the 3rd July 1913, and that the application is accordingly barred by limitation unless the operation of the preliminary decree was stayed by an order and injunction of the Court.

Mr. Manuk contends that the order for the appointment of a Receiver coupled with the direction upon the Receiver to pay the interest on the mortgage-money operated in effect as an order staying further proceedings and that he is, accordingly, under section 15 of the Limitation Act, entitled to exclude the period between the 3rd September 1914 and the 18th March 1918 on which date the High Court gave him liberty to apply for the final decree notwithstanding the fact that the Receiver was not discharged. The argument involves an examination of the nature of a final decree in a forcelosure action. Order XXXIV, rule 3, of the Code, after dealing with the case where the defendant pays into Court the amount declared due to the plaintiff, provides as follows: - "Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the defendant and all persons elaiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property". The form of a final decree for forcelosure is to be found in Appendix D to the Code of Civil Procedure .and is No. 10. Under that form the decree which the plaintiff is entitled is to follows :- "That 88 the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property set out and deseribed in the Schedule hereunto annexed. (Where the defendant is in possession add and shall put the plaintiff in possession of the said property)". There is no doubt at all, on a perusal of the form as provided by the Legislature in No. 10 of Appendix D, that the words, "if necessary" in Order XXXIV, rule 3 (2), refer to a ease where the defendant is in possession and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree first debarring the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him from all right to redeem the mort. gaged property; and, secondly, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property. Mr. Manuk contends that, in the events which have happened, he was not entitled to either of these orders until the 18th March 1918.

I will first consider the question whether the plaintiffs were, in the events which happened, entitled to an order debarring the defendants from the right to redeem the mortgaged property. Now, it will be remembered that the Receiver was appointed on an application by the defendants in which they stated that they were negotiating for a loan in order to pay off the mortgage money and that they were confident that they would be able to raise such a loan within two months from the date of that application. The appointed a Receiver and directed the Receiver to pay the interest due on the mortgage money to the plaintiffs. In my opinion, so long as the order of the High Court stood, the defendants had the right not only to pay the interest on the mortgage-money to the plaintiffs but also, to quote their own words, 'to pay off the decree". In other words, the appointment of a Receiver and direction upon him to pay the interest due to the plaintiffs operated in substance, though not form, as an order staying further proceed. ings in the suit until the disposal of the appeal by the Privy Council.

In the next place, so long as the Receiver was in possession of the mortgaged properties, it was elearly incompetent to the plaintiffs to ask for an order that the ec.defendants do put the plaintiffs in posses. sion of the property. The Code of Civil Procedure recognizes the right of the plaintiff who is out of possession to be put in possession of the mortgaged properties; in other words, he is in the same action entitled not only to a decree for foreslosure, but also to a decree for possession. At one time it was doubted in England whether a Court of Equity could grant the mortgagee leave to join an action for the recovery of land with the action for foreclosure. See Sutcliffe v. Wood (4). It was in order to remove the difficulty raised by such cases as Sutcliffe v. Wood (4) that a proviso was added to Order XVIII, rule 2 of the Rules of the Supreme Court in December 1885. That proviso now permits a plaintiff to join a elaim for possession in an action for foreslosure or redemption. There is no doubt at all that an order for foreslosure absolute in a foreelosure action may now include an order for delivery of possession by the defendant to the plaintiff: Best v. Applegate (5). It is quite true that an order for delivery of possession may be given after the final decree. This was established in Keith v. Day (6), though the proposition was not accepted in Wells v. Luff (7). It may be assumed, however, that the plaintiffs were entitled to have an order as to delivery of possession not as part of the foreslosure decree, but after the decree; but the fact that the plaintiffe may obtain such an order after the final decree does not take away their right to elsim such an order as part of the foreclosure decree. That order they could not have obtained so long as the Receiver was in possession of the mortgaged properties. The Calcutta High Court removed the bar on the 18th March 1918 and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs became entitled to apply for the final decree on the 18th March 1918.

In my opinion the conclusion at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived is right and I would dismis this appeal with costs.

given in the referring order and may be stated in a very small compass. The house in dispute was sold to one Ram Narain by Ganga Din on 6th April 1906. Ram Narain re-sold it to the defendants in 1908. The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendants and their predecessor-in-interest have been in adverse possession from the date of the sale to Ram Narain which took place more than twelve years before the suit. Ganga Din was separated from his father. Nohri, and his brother, Radhe Shiam, and it has been found that the real title to the house vested in the latter. Radhe Shiam was born on 9th March 1900 so he was a minor till within a little more than a year of the present suit. On 13th January 1919 Radbe Shiam executed a sale-deed of the house to one Kandhai. Under the roling of this Court in Imam-ud din v. Mumtae unnissa (1) Kandhai could not have maintainted a suit to recover possession. Accordingly, shortly afterwards, the plaintiffs brought a suit to get the sale deed to Kandhai set aside and a compromise deeree was passed on 4th June 1919 setting aside the sale. On 3rd July 1919 Radhe Shiam executed a fresh sale-deed in favour of the plaintiffs and on the same date the present suit for possession was launched against the defendants. The object of these mar cenvres on the part of Radhe Shiam and the plaintiffs evidently was to take advantage of another distum in Imam ud.din v. Mumtas-un-nissa (1) to the effect that, though the benefit of section 6 does not enure in favour of the transferee from the minor, yet the transferse can maintain a suit if he brings it on the same date on which the transfer takes place. question of law which arises for decision in this case is whether that dietum is

The general principle of law that a transferse cannot claim the benefit of section 6 of the Limitation Act was not questioned when the case was argued before the Referring Judge. It has been disputed at the hearing before us. That principle was first laid down by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Rudra Kant Surma Sircer v. Nobe Kishore Surma Biewas (2) and it has quite recently been followed by the Madras High Court in the case of Rangasami Chetti v. Thangarelu Chetti (3). It was also affirmed by a Judge of this Court in the case of Imamud-din v. Mumtaz-un-nissa (1) already referred to and in the earlier case of Matadin v. Ali Mirza (4). The respondents have suggested before us that the rule laid down in these cases is incorrect, but they can adduce no authority in their favour except the ruling of the Bombay High Court in Arjun Rampiv. Ramabai (5) which was concerned with a suit by the legal representatives of a minor. The learned Judges held that where a minor died after attaining majority his legal representatives could bring a suit within three years of his attaining majority. They expressly stated, however, that they were not concerned with the question decided in Rudra Kant's case (2) with reference to representatives by transfer. We agree with the view laid down in the Calentta and Madras cases that both, on the wording of the Act and in view of the intention of the provisions, a transferes sannot elaim the benefit of section 6. As the learned Judges of the Madras High Court pointed cut if the view contended for by the respondents is correct sub-section (3) of section 6 is entirely superfluous.

With the greatest respect to the learned Judge who decided Imam-ud din v. Mumtazun-nissa (1), we can find no reason for the distinction there taken between a suit brought on the date of the transfer and a suit brought on a subsequent date. Either the benefit of section 6 is a personal one or it is not. If it is a personal one, which may be regarded as settled by the authorities already referred to, it makes no difference whether the alienes sues one hour or one year after the transfer takes place. Until the transfer is complete he has no cause of action at all. As soon as the transfer is made, the special privilege which is vested in the minor is extinguished. As was pointed out by our learned solleague in the referring order, the distinction drawn in the concluding portion of the judgment in the ease of Imam ud din v. Mumtae.unof the transfer and a suit instituted on the day of the transfer and a suit instituted subsequently is not to be found in any of the eases relied on by the learned Judge in support of his decision. It is noticed by Mr. Rustomji in his commentary with a querry, which appears to us well founded, whether any such distinction is made by the Act. For the above reasons, we hold that the decision of the Courts below on the point of limitation is incorrect and that the suit was barred by time.

We may note in conclusion that the respondents have argued that adverse possession did not begin till 1910 when the appellants actually began to reside in the house and that the sale-deed was not proved. From the judgment of the Court below it appears that neither of these facts was challenged before it. It is enough to say that there is sufficient evidence to establish the sale-deed and that there is a finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court, supported by evidence, that adverse possession began in 1906.

We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts. The suit having been dismissed, the cross-appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SABJAN MANDAL-PLAINING.

APPELLANT

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1835), s. 167—Purchaser of holding at sale in execution of rent-decree —Previous purchaser in execution of mortgage-decree — Subsisting encumbrance.

On the 18th September 1913 the plaintiff purchased a holding in execution of a decree for arroars of rent obtained in a suit instituted on the 16th April 1912. In taking possession he was resisted by the defendant who had purchased the interest of one of the tenants in execution of a mortgage.

decree on the 18th May 1912. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of possession on the basis of his right by purchase at the ront-sale:

Held, that inasmuch as rent was the first charge on the holding the defendant's purchase was subject to that charge and that, therefore, there was no subsisting encumbrance at the date of the plaintiff's purchase which the plaintiff was bound to annul under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant in this case, purchased a holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 18th September 1913 and obtained formal possession on the February 1914. He was, however, resisted by the defendant who had purchased the interest of one of the tenants in execution of a mortgage decree on the 18th May 1912. The rent suit appears to have been instituted on the 15th April 1912, and the sale in execution of the rent-droree took place, as stated above, on the 18th September 1913. The defendant's purchase at the sale in execution of the mortgage deeree, therefore, took place after the institution of the rent suit, but before the sale in execution of the rent decree.

The plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of possession on the basis of his right by purchase at the rent sale. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal the decree was reversed on the ground that the plaintiff had not annulled the ensumbrance of the defendant, the service of notice under section 167. Bengal Tenancy Act, not having been proved. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The question for consideration is, whether the defendant had any subsisting ensumbrance at the date of the purchase by the plaintiff at the rent sale which it was necessary to annul under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, The learned District Judge, relying upon the decision in the case of Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (1), held that "the right purchased by the defendant was an encumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Act", and that he was entitled to "fall back upon his original mortgage as a shield" against the purchaser in execution of the landlord's decree for arrears of the rent of the holding in question.

The learned Judges in the ease of Banbihari Kapur v. Khetra Pal Singh Roy (1) relied upon the decision in Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prasad (2). The latter ease was, however set aside on appeal by the Judicial Committee: See Bhawani Kumar v. Mathura Prasad Singh (3).

It was beld by their Lordships that after the sale took place on the mortgage, the mortgages who purchased at the sale became the owner of the property and that he could not maintain as against himself or against third parties unconnected with the mortgage transactions upon the property, the position that his mortgage still remained an encumbrance thereon.

It is true that the defendant's purchase in execution of the mortgage decree took place after the institution of the rentsuit, but he purchased a portion of the holding long before the sale in execution of the rent-decree took place and although he was not liable for arrears of rent for the period before his purchase, the rent was a first charge upon the holding. He, therefore, purchased subject to that charge, He became the owner of a portion of the holding before the rent sale took place, and his interest in the holding (which was that of an unregistered transferee) passed at the rent sale. There was, therefore, no subsisting encumbrance at the date of the plaintiff's purchase which the plaintiff was bound to annul under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. We make no order as to costs.

s. 17 (1)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5, applicability of—Application to set aside exparte decree—
Payment of decree amount after limitation period—
Power of Court to excuse delay.

A payment required by the proviso (1) to section 17 (1) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is not independent of the petition for setting aside a decree passed ex parte but is an element required to complete such a petition. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Section 5 of the Limitation Act is applicable to the applications under Order 1X, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, even when that procedure takes place in a Court of Small Causes. [p. 105, cols. 1 & 2.]

Therefore, a Small Cause Court Judge is competent to excuse the delay in depositing the decree amount in Court on an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Taticorin, dated the 8th November 1920, and made in Execution Application No. 448 of 1920 and I. A. No. 850 of 1920, in Small Cause Suit No. 299 of 1920.

Mr. T. Nallaswami Fillay, for the Peti-

Messrs. Ohidambaram and Morthandam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition asking us to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tutisorin refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed in a Small Cause suit. The petitioner alleges that he came to know of the decree which had been passed on 31st March 1920, only about two weeks before he filed his petition on 30th July 192). Unfortunately, owing, as the lower Court has found, solely to a mistake of his Pleader's gumastah, he did not pay with his petition the whole of the decree amount. On the other side objecting that his payment was deficient, he, however, made good the deficiency. But he did so after the time of 30 days from the date of his knowledge of the decree, within which his petition would have been in time. The question then was whether the Court could exense the delay under section 5 of the Limitation Act. It has refused to do so, and we have been asked to revise its order of refusal.

The lower Court has dealt with the matter at considerable length, although it is really, in our opinion, very simple. We do not propose to follow the lower Court through over elaborate discussion. Shortly, its difficulty was that section 5 has been made applicable by an order of this High Court to petitions under Order IX, rule 13, but it has not been made applicable to payments under the proviso to meetion 17 (1) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. This, however, cao, in our opinion, easily be met. There was, of course, no difficulty under the former Ocde.

Section 17 (I) of the Small Cause Courts Act makes the chapters and the sections of the Code specified in the Second Schedule thereof, the procedure to be followed in Courts of Small Causes in all suits and in all proseedings arising out of such suite, subject, of course, so far as section 10: of the previous Code was concerned, to the proviso already referred to. The Code now in force, no doubt, does not re-produce the Schedule of the former Code, but that is clearly because the Legislature took another course and embodied the contents of the Schedule in substantive provisions of the Oode itself. For there is, firstly, the general application of the Code to all Courts subjest to the superintendence of the High Court. There is, next, section 7, which specifies certain substantive provisions of the Code as not applicable to Small Cause Courts, and Small Cause Order L, which excepts certain orders. Neither the section 7, however, nor Order L excepts Order IX. It is, therefore, clear that Order IX will be applicable to the case before us. sufficient to displace one argument which has been suggested, that the section, taken with the Second Schedule of the former Code, and section 158 of the present Code, cannot be read as applying the provisions of the present Code, in so far as they differ from those of the former Code. Section 5 of the Limitation Act having been applied to Order 1X, it will be none-the-less applieable to the prosedure under that Order, when that procedure takes place in a Court of Small Canses.

It is then, however, argued that the pay. ment required by the proviso to section 17 (1) must be considered as independent of the petition for setting aside a decree passed ex parts and that section 5 cannot be applied to the making of that payment, as justifying the Court in excusing the delay in making it. The answer is that the pay. ment is directed only in connection with the filing of a petition under Order IX. rule 13 and is as much an element required in order to the completeness of such a petition as any other portion of it, for instance, the stamp or verification; and this view of the payment referred to in the proviso to section 17 (1) is entirely consistent with the tenor of the judgment of the Fall Banch of this Court in Assan Mahomed Sahib v. Rahiman Sahib (1).

The result is, that the order under revision cannot be sustained on the grounds by the lower Court, The lower Court has already placed on record its opinion that if discretion to expuse the delay in making the payment were vested in it, this would be a case in which that discretion might properly be exercised, and no reason for dissent on W8 800 that

The remaining question ie, accordingly, whether the patitioner did, as he alleges in paragraph 3 of his affidavit, come to know of the passing of the decree against. him only about two weeks before his petition was filed. On that point the lower Court has recorded no evidence and there is no finding. We must set aside the lower Court's order and remand the petitions for re-admission and disposal in the light of the foregoing after enquiry as to whether the petitioner's statement just referred to is true. Costs to date will be costs in the cause and will be provided for in the order to be passed by the lower Court.

JUDGMENT,-This second appeal has been referred for the desision of a Banch by a learned Judge of this Court. question for determination is, whether a perpetual lessee of agricultural land holding the rights conferred by the leass in quastion would some under the definition of an under-proprietor given in the Oath Rent Ast, section 3 (8). It will not be possible to deside such a question generally because the decision of every case will depend on the conditions of the lease. In the present ease the perpetual lease to be interpreted was executed by a predecessor of the palintiffs Zemindars in favour of the defendants' predecessor-in-interest on 9th January 1885. It purports to be a perpetual lease of 26 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 38-40 with a right of transfer to be held generation after generation on the payment of the same rate of rent which was not to be revised till the time of the next Settlement.

lessee had been granted a previous lease of 11 bighas of land at a rental of Re. 15 on 7th May 1883. That lease also was a perpetual leare, and the land covered by that lease was, it is conceded, entirely different from the land included in the lease for consideration here. The lessor in the lease of 1885 declared that the prior lease of 1883 was cancelled and further made it a condition of the lease of 1825 that if the lessee should lay claim to the 11 bighas of land of the cancelled lease on any future date, the present lease of 1885 would be reseinded. Another condition of the lease of 1885 was that in case the lessee desired to transfer his rights the offer should first be made to the lessor or his successors. A lessor contracting for a right of re-purchase does not in any way derogate from the transferable quality of the rights transferred under the lease. The question to determine is, whether the other sondition, giving the lessor a right of re-entry by reseission of the deed of lease, prevents the lesses becoming an under-proprietor of the property transferred. . In the ease Bameshar Bakhsh Singh v. Sankata Bakheh Singh (1) a Bench of this Court pointed out that the right of an under-proprietor was not exhaustively defined in section 3 (8) of the Oudh Rent Act. It held that if, in any circumstance, a proprietor is afforded a right of reentry against a transferee of agricultural land in Oudb, such transferee will not be entitled to under proprietary rights. According to that definition, where a lease imposed aron the lessee certain conditions to be fulfilled by him and provided for the lessor resuming the lesse bold in the lessee failed to satisfy any ditions no under proprietary right would be conferred on the lessee under such a lease. Applying the principle of law enunciated in that roling here, if the condition regarding re-entry in the lease were operative, the defendants would not have the status of under-proprietors under the Oudh Rent Act. In the present ease, however, that condition is no longer operative. The former lease was executed in 1883 and admittedly the lessee lost possession of the lease land in 1885. The lessee cannot, therefore, claim any longer any rights under the lease of 1883. Such a claim having become impossible there is no possibility for the exercise by the lessor of a right of recutry and that clause should be put out of consideration in deciding whether the defendants are now under-proprieters or not. The possible bar to the defendants' ander-proprietary title has been removed; so we are of epinion that the rights conferred by the lease have been perfected into under-proprietary rights at the present moment.

The learned Counsel for the respondents referred us to the Bench case of Data Raws Tewari v. Deckali Tewari (2) in support of his contention that, in the siroumstances, of a transfer like the one under the lease in suit no proprietary or under-proprietary rights devolved on the transferse. In that ease it was held that a patta of birt sanhalp did not amount to a sale so as to give rise to a right of pre emption. There the question was one of consideration and different from the question raised in this ease. The lease was held not to be a because the consideration was not gale purely a money consideration but was compounded of a money-payment and the blessings of the Brahmans or their resformanse of the services of family pricats.

The learned Counsel for the respondents sought to distinguish between a right to enjoy property acquired by a lease under section 105 of the Transfer of Property Ast and the right of property possessed by an under proprietor. We see no distinetion between a right to enjoy property and a right of property in these two cases. It was urged that the lease by its form deelaring it to be a perpetual lease by the fact of rent being payable and by the proviso of a right of reentry fell short of conferring the right of an under-proprietor on the lessee. The form of transfer is not to be considered when an inquiry is made into the essential characters of a transfer, and an under proprietor is liable to pay rent and the proviso has been fully discussed above.

We are of opinion that in the present ease the defendants are under-proprietors of the land in suit. We, therefore, set aside the decress of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs of all the Courts.

the property was sold free from all encumbrances. But there were in fact certain encumbrances existing on the property at the date of the purchase. The vendor sold certain other properties to the first defendant to pay these encumbrances but they were not paid. On the mortgages who held the prior charges taking steps to realise their securities by sale, the first appellant paid certain sums to them in order to clear the property. The appellants instituted the present suit to recover the amounts paid by them from the first defendant and their vendor or from their properties.

The Trial Judge decreed the claim of the appallants, but on appeal the High Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that the appellants were not compelled to make the payments to aver: the sale. Hance this appeal.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants.—Section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1262, clearly lays down the duties of the vendor. The payments were made by the appellants to prevent the sale of the purchased property. The appellants are bound to redeem and pay the prior mortgagess.

Section 69 of the Indian Contrast Act is

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER. - On the 6th September 1904 one Lakbpat Nath sold to Natha Khau, Girab Ali Khan, Badhan Khan and Raman Khan, three Marzahe situate in the Zimindari of Bagdo, at the price of Rs. 19,000. Natha Khan is dead and his representatives, together with the other purchasers, are the present appellants. purchase price was to be discharged by the eancellation of certain debts due from the vendor to the purchasers and as to the eash. in The purchase-deed contained the express declaration that the property was sold free from ensumbrances and consequently by section 55 (1) (g), sub section (2) of the Transfer of Property Act the vendor must have been deemed to contract with the buyers that he had power to transfer the property so sold and consequently that the property was free from burdens. In truth there were existing upon the estate considerable charges and it appears that the vendor recognising this being auxious to seeure their fact and liquidation on 7th September 1904 entered into an arrangement with one Bindesri Obsran. This took the form of a sale by the vendor to Bindeeri Charan of another estate for a sum of Rs. 82,200, the purchase-price to be discharged by the payment of a considerable number of debts, which included, among others, those owing upon the property already sold to Nathu Khan and his co-purchasers. Had Bindeeri carried out the terms of that arrangement no dispute would have arisen, but, unfortunately, he did not and as the mortgagees who held the prior charges upon the property sold to Nathu Khan and others proceeded to extremities and took steps to realise their securities by sale, Nathu Khan, apparently alone but probably on behalf of all the purchasers, paid three separate sums of Rs. 4,287, Rs. 37,090 and Rs. 4,645 in order to clear the property, and no part of these moneys has been re-paid to them. About these facts there appears to be no doubt, for, although the High Court, from where this appeal proseeds, appears to have doubted whether the property was actually subject to an effectual order for sale, yet the fast that it was subject to the mortgages appears reasonably clear. After the payments had been made. Nathu and his co-purchasers instituted a suit against Bindeeri, Lakhpat, who was defendant No. 2 to the proceedings, and others, asking for the recovery of the sums paid against the properties and persons of the defendants. The plaint was a clumey dosument, and the suit as against Bindesri was misconseived, for the plaintiffs were no parties to the deed of 7th September 1901 and no trust was thereby ereated in their favour. The real case was a personal claim against Lakhpat, and this is in fact included in the general confusion of the suit. A subsequent suit was also brought by Lakhpat Nath against Bindesri Charan and Nathu Khan and his so purchasers and others to obtain ressission of the sale of 7th September 1904 on the ground that Bindeeri Charan had wholly failed to comply with the obligations that he undertook for Nathu Khan; the purchaser was made a party to this suit which was compromised before trial and the compromise became incorporated in a deeree under the seal of the Court of the 20th July 1908. It is unfortunate that this decree is couched in language which renders it extremely difficult to give a fair grammatical construction to all its terms, but their Lordships think that none-theless its purpose is elear and the obscurity is doubtless due to the fact that it represents the actual agreed terms of the parties which put into plain legal rot been bave phraseology. The desres provides for the return of the properties sold to Bindesri, subject to a condition expressed words:-

"That in case the defendant No. 2 becomes liable to Nathu Khan and others (plaintiffs in Suit No. 122 of 1907), in the final decree in that suit, that sum will be payable by the plaintiff to those defendants, and the property which is the subject of this suit will remain charged with this debt payable to those defendants."

The effect of this order was as follows: that if Lakhpat Nath, who, notwithstanding the fact that be was plaintiff, because he was defendant No. 2 in Suit Nc. 122 of 1907, is referred to as the defendant No. 2, becomes liable to Nathu Khan and others who are the plaintiffs in the Suit No. 122 of 1907, in the final deerse of that suit that sum—that is the sum for which he is liable—will be payable by him, LakhputNath, to Natha Khan and others and the property the subject of the present suit will remain charged with the debt payable to those defendants. The confusion in this decree is due to the fact that while it refers to the suit instituted by Nathu Khan against Lakhpat Nath and others to obtain a declaration of liability, it introduces the description of the parties alternately by virtue of their capacity in that suit and their capacity in the suit which is being compromised, with the result that the same person becomes the defendant and the plaintiff in the same sentence. Their Lordships having carefully studied the language of the decree are satisfied that the interpretation that they have placed upon it is correct and indeed it is the only interpretation that could give reasonable effect to the claim that Nathu Khan possessed against Lakhpat Nath at the time when the suit was set on foot. suit referred to as No. 122 of 1907 was the suit brought by Nathu Khan and others asking for relief against Lakbpat Nath in respect of payments to which reference has been made and it is the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. Lakhpat died before this suit came on for hearing, his heir was added in his place, and the learned Subordinate Judge held that as he derived benefit from the payments made by the plaintiffs, it was equitable that the plaintiffs must be resouped, and he ordered sale of the properties that had been sold to Bindesri, if the amount were not paid.

Upon appeal the High Court held that the plaintiffs were not compelled to make the payments to avert the sale and that they were not entitled to any relief.

Their Lordships find it difficult to accept the view that purchasers of a property are not compelled to pay off mortgagess who have obtained decrees for sale, even though a sale is not immediately threatened, but it appears there were questions about the nature of the sales not explained to their Lordships which may have caused misunderstanding on this bead.

The present appellants are themselves responsible for what occurred, for there would have been no difficuly in obtaining relief had the section of the Transfer of Property Act to which attention has been called been placed before the Court. It is plain from that section that as Lakhpat Nath had bound himself to deliver the property free from ensumbraness, and had only delivered it subject to the charges which Nathu paid. Lakhpat was, therefore, liable paid by the purchaser for the monies in order to clear his title. If that simple view had been presented to the Court of first instance and to the High Court their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the matter need not have proceeded as far as this Board; but the Courts below appear to have been confused with the effect of what had taken place and they do not seem to have had their attention directed either to the Statute or to the decree although the compromise was mentioned. It may be that as decree was made after this suit was instituted, its execution might have been a difficult matter in the present proceedings, but with that their Lordships do not intend in any way to interfere. All that they think the appellants here are entitled to is (a) a declaration that in the eireumstances Lakhpat

KARIM DAD KHAN D, BIB! GHAPURAN.

Nath did become liable to Nathu Khan for the monies paid by Natha Khan either for redemption of the mortgages existing on the property purchased by him on the kobala of the 6th September 1934 at the date of such purchase, or for purchase of the properties on sales under such mortgages, or to prevent such sales; and (b) that the person mentioned in the decree of the 20th July 1908 as the defendant No. 2 was intended to be Lathpat Nath. Their Lord. ships, for these reasons, will humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment appealed from should be set aside and the decree of the learned Judge of first instance be medified by the introduction of the above declara tion that Lakhpat was liable to the plaintiffe in the suit for the monies paid under either of the above heads, and if any dispute exists as to such payments an enquiry must be directed to ascertain the facts. The appellants will have their sosts in the Courts below. There will be no costs of the appeal.

The true construction of a document does not depend upon the name which is given to it, but it must be determined with reference to its terms. [p. 111, col. 1.]

A document was christened with the name of a "perpetual lease." After reciting theorem of the lands which were the subject matter of the dead, the document prescribed a jama of Rs. 102.2.0, annually payable by the lessor and then proceeded as follows:—"I do hereby agree and reduce to writing that the said" lessee "having his possession over it shall annually pay the pay of the Patwari and Chaukidar, i. c., the entire amount of Rs. 102.2.0 shall be paid to the Government and he shall remain in possession and enjoyment of the same generation after generation mastan bad nastan, bathan bad bathan and shall exercise all sorts of proprietary powers (akhtyarat bater malikana)." The granter did not reserve any right of re-entry or reversion in his favour in any event. It was found that the donee and his sons used to pay rent to the donor and her transferee:

Held, that the above document created an absolute interest in the dones with this qualification that a liability to pay the annual jama of Rs. 102.2.0 was imposed on him, so that he became an under-proprietor of the lands as defined in section 3 (8) of the Oudh Rent Act. Dr. J. N. Miera, for the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Miera, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, dated 14th of May 1920, by which the plaintiff respondent's suit was decreed. The suit was instituted by one Musammat Bibi Ghafaran who, on her death, is now represented by the fear respondents in this appeal. The relief which the plaintiff prayed for was a declaration to the effect that the lease, dated the 19th of December 1873, conferred no right superior or inferior in the lands in suit on the defendants.

The eriginal owner of the properties in suit was one Musammat Bibi Rahmani who executed the document of the 19th of December 1873 in favour of her brother, Jahangir Khau, who is now represented by the four defendants in the suit. On the 19th of November 1895 the same Musammat Bibi Rahmani executed a deed of gift of her entire property in favour of Musammat Bibi Ghafuran, the plaintiff in the suit, and in virtue of the title acquired by Musammat Ghafuran under the deed of the 19th of November 1895 she brought the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen.

The defendants urged a number of pleas in defence but in appeal to this Court the two grounds, which are set forth in the KARIN DAD KHAN C. BIBI GHAFORAN.

memorandum of appeal, attack the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge relating to the interpretation of the deed of 19th Decem. ber 1873. The argument urged before us in support of the appeal is to the effect that the deed in question created at least heritable and transferable interest in favour of the donee, Jahangir Khan. The sole question, therefore, which arises for decision in the appeal is the true interpretation of the dosument of the 19th of Dacember 1873. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the said deed erested heritable but not transfer. able interest in favour of Jahangir Khan. We may reproduce here the learned Subordinate Judge's finding on the question.

"On a true construction of the document it appears to me to be nothing more than a perpetual lease. It certainly does not give a life estate as is alleged in the plaint but is a heritable lease. It also does not amount to an absolute transfer of the proprietary rights because under this lease the lessees are liable to pay a certain amount every year to the lessor. It does not in any way give any transferable rights."

The document is christened with the name of a "perpetual lease". The true construction of a document does not depend upon the name which is given to it, but it must be determined with reference to its terms. After reciting the area of the lands, which are the subject-matter of the deed, the document prescribes a jama of Rs. 102 2-0 annually payable by the lessor and then proceeds as follows:—

"I do hereby agree and reduce to writing that the said Khan having his possession over it shall annually pay the pay of Patwari and Chaukidar, i. c., the entire amount of Rs. 102-2-0 shall be paid to the Government and he shall remain in possession and enjoyment of the same generation after generation (naslan bad naslan, batnan bad bathan) and shall exercise all sorts of proprietary powers."

It is conceded that these words of the grant create a heritable interest in the dones. The learned Subordinate Judge is also of the same opinion, but the contention on behalf of the respondents is that the dones did not acquire a transferable interest, and consequently the grant creates only heritable and non-transferable tenure. We provide the opinion that the contention put forward on behalf of the respondents is not sound. We think that the words of the grant which we have quoted above create an absolute interest in the donee with this qualification that a liability to pay the annual sama of Rs. 102.20 is imposed on him. The words "naslan bid naslan" have acquired a technical import in Indian conveyancing. If we were to interpret these words in their literal sense they would mean, line of descendants in unending succession. This sense of the words leads to one or the other of the two conclusions:—

(1) that the successor in each generation takes as a donee under the terms of the grant, or

(2) that the first dones takes an absolute estate. The first conclusion must be rejected because it would, in the first instance, infringe the rule against perpetuity and, secondly, would create an estate of a nature of an estate tail which is wholly foreign to the Muhammadan Liw by which the parties to the suit are governed. The result is that we must adopt the construction which leads to the second of the two conclusions indicated above.

In the ease of Thakur Harihar Baksh v. Thakur Uman Parshad (1) Lord Hobhouse, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, made the following observations which appear to us to be sonelusive on the question of the construction of the deed of the 19th of December 1873:-

Their Lordships have not been farnished with any authority; in fact Mr. Branson has fairly said he can find no authority in which a gift with the words naslan bad naslan' attached has been held to confer anything less than the absolute ownership. On the contrary, in the various cases in which the expressions 'mokurari', 'istemrari'. istemrari mokurari', have been weighed and examined with a view to see whether an absolute interest was conferred or not, it seems to have been taken for certain that, if only the words 'naslan bad naslan' had been added, there would have been an end to the argument, because an absolute interest would have been elearly conferred. Their

Lordships think that the insertion of those words in the razinama would be conclusive in itself; but, looking at the expressed objects of the ratinana, they would come to the same conclusion even if words of a less peremptory character had been used."

Further, besides the words upon which we have laid stress so far, we find that the grant confers "all sorts of proprietary powers" upon the donee (akhtyarat bator malikana). The word "malikana" is a grammatical variation of the word "malik", and connotes powers of a malik, and must be given the same meaning as the word malik" itself. This word has also acquired a technical sense conveying a heritable and alienable estate as was observed by Lord Davey in his judgment in the case of Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (2). The same view was expressed by Lord Collins in the ease of Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Otha (3). His Lordehip said :-

"But while there is nothing in the context or surrounding facts to displace the presumption of absolute ownership implied in the word malik' the sontext does seem to strengthen the presumption that the intention was that malik' should bear its proper technical meaning."

The respondents in this case contend that the name "perpetual lease" given to the document excludes the presumption We do not think that absolute ownership. that fact in any way affects the technical sense of the word 'malik' or the presumption of absolute ownership arising out of the use of that word. As we have said before, it is not the name given to a document which would determine its construction but the interpretation must be founded on the terms of the deed as a whole. In the case of Tirugnanapal v. Fonnammai Nadathi in construing a document which was styled as a Will, Lord Moulton observed:-

"But calling a document a Will does not make it so."

liability to pay an annual ama of Rs. 102-2-0 the grantor Musimmat Bibi Rahmani intended to create only a subordinate tenure with heritable and transferable interest. There is also evidence on the record (P. W. No. 1) that Jahangir Khan, the donee, and his sons used to pay rent to Bibi Rahmani and Bibi Ghafuran. Such a tenure is generally treated as an underproprietary tenure in the Province of Oadh, The word "under-proprietor" is also defined in the Oadh Rent Act (Act XXII of 1886) section 3, sub-section (8) as 'any person possessing a heritable and transferable right of property in land for which be is liable to pay rent." The name of the document as a "perpetual lease" is, therefore, also not inconsistent with a grant of heritable and transferable right in the property which is the subject-matter of the deed in question.

The conclusion at which we have arrived is further strengthened by the proposition of law that property of every kind is transferable except as provided by any Act of the Legislature or by any other law for the time being in fores: See section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882). And it is significant that the grantor does not reserve any right of re-entry or reversion in his favour in any event: See the decision in the ease of Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam

The lower Court has relied upon a decision of a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Kalka Singh v. Sura; Bali Lal (6) and that decision has also been pressed on us. To use the language of Lord Shaw in the case of Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (7): "The case merely illustrates the inexpediency of laying down a fixed and general rule applicable to the construction of settlements varying in terms and applying to estates varying in situation." The decision of the case reported in 5 Oudh Law Journal [Kalka Singh v. Suraj Bali Lal (6)] does not lay down any rule of construction. On the contrary, the learned Judge makes the following observation:-

"Cases like these must be decided on their own facts and the law being well understood the only question in each ease is, how the law is to be applied to the particular facts which are put before the Court."

CHAJJU U. SHAM LAL,

In the document which was construed in the case reported in 5 Oath Law Journal Kalka Singh v. Suraj Bali Lal the words "akhtiyarat malikana" occur in the document before us were want. ing as were also the words "batnan bad batnan."

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the deeres of the lower Court and grant a declara. tion to the respondents in the following terms:.-

That the defendants are not the propristors of the lands in suit, but that they are under proprietors, i. e., they possess heritable and transferable interest in those lands. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellante in the Court of first instance. Each party will bear its OWD coats in this Court.

SHAM LAL-PLAINT: FF-RESPONDENT. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1999), U. XLI, r. 23 -Remand-Court to which case can be remanded.

The remand contemplated by rule 23 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code is a remand to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but if the Appellate Court making the order of remand has power to transfer a case from one Court to another, there is nothing illegal in its remanding the case to some other Court.

An Additional Judge, however, has no power to transfer a case from one subordinate Court to another, and, therefore, cannot remand a case to a Court other than that which originally tried it.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Delhi, dated the 3rd January 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 8th Ostober 1920.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellants. Lala Gopal Chand, for the Respondent, JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Delhi, remanding a case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Precedure Code, for re-trial to a Court other than that which originally tried it. The ground upon which the Additional Judge remanded the case was that certain witnesses tendered by the plaintiff had not been examined by the Trial Court, and the Bench of this Court which admitted the appeal sent for the record to see whether the plaintiff or any other witnesses were tendered whether the lower Court examine bim or them. The Bensh was satisfied that this was so and admitted the appeal only on the question of the trans. fer of the ease to another Court than that which originally tried it. I, therefore, heard arguments upon this point only. According to Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, the remand should be to that Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but if the Appellate Court has power to transfer a case from one Court to another, there is nothing illegal in remanding the case to another, as was laid down in the case report. ed as Fati v. Gaddi (1). The officer who heard the appeal from the Munsit's order was the Additional Judge who had no power under the Paujab Courts Act or the Code of Civil Procedure to transfer a case from one Subordinate Court to another. His order remanding the case to another Court to that which tried it was, therefore, to this extent illegal.

I, therefore, accept the appeal so far as to order that the case be remanded to the Court which tried it. Mr. Gopal Chand on behalf of the respondent has urged that the Munsif who tried the case is prejudiced in favour of the defendants and that this Court should transfer the case to another Munsif. I am not, however, prepared to exercise my power of transfer. If the plaintiff has any ground for supposing that the Munsif who tried the case is prejudiced against him he can apply to the District Judge for transfer, Costs in this Court will be costs in the case.

Co-sharer-Joint land-Profits, suit for-Lease-Proprietor, full rights of, whether acquired-Mortgagee as well as lessee, position of.

F A co-sharer cannot always deal with joint land against the wishes of the other co-sharers

A lessee or a grantee may be a co-sharer for the purpose of a suit for profits, but he does not thereby acquire the full rights of a proprietor for all purposes.

Where a person obtains a lease with regard to a certain plot appertaining to joint shamilat land from one of the co-sharers and also obtains leases and mortgages from some of the other co-sharers, he is not entitled to deal with the lands as he likes, but is bound by the terms of the leases obtained by him.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Fyzybad, dated the 15th March 1920, modifying that of the Munsif, Akbarpar, dated the 2 th March 1919.

Mr. Niomat Ullah, for the Appellant. Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The disputes in this case are now reduced to a narrow compass. The suit related to plot No. 639 in the village Basulpur Mubarakpur. There are two pattis in this mahal, Patti Zubeda Bibi and ratti Badri Parshad, and an area of 285 bighas 6 biswas shamilat land is held jointly by the proprietors of both. The plot in suit is in the shamilat land. The defendant-appellant is a lessee from the plaintiff. The lease contains an express covenant forbidding the deferd. ant to convert the land in suit into a bagicha or garden. The lower Appellate Court has granted an injunction to prevent his doing so. The injunction forbids the defendant to plant any fruit or garden trees or to do anything which would convert the land in suit into a bagicha or garden. Toe lower Appellate Court has maintained the walls which the defendant has built round the land subject to this condition that if at any time the plaint ff or her successors in interest become entitled to actual possession of the land, the appellant and the second and third defendants in the Trial Court or their successors will be bound to demolish so much of the new walls on three sides of the garden as affects the area to actual possession of which the plaintiffs respondents or their successors become entitled. Other reliefs claimed by the plaintiff were refused.

Both parties filed separate appeals but the plaintiff's appeal abated on her death as her legal representatives made no application to be brought on the record. The appeal of the defendant, Pandit Sri Nath, has now to be decided. The defendant's learned Advocate does not deny that he is bound by the covenant in the lease as against the plaintiff. He argues that, because he has obtained leases and mortgages from some of the other co-sharers, he has, therefore, become a cosharer and cannot be prevented from dealing with the lands as be likes. Even a co sharer cannot always deal with joint land against the wishes of the other so sharers, but putting this aside, the appellant's argument is fallacious. It has, no doubt, been held in two rulings of this Court that a lessee or a grantee may be a so sharer for the purpose of a suit for profits, but that does not mean that he has acquired the full rights of a proprietor for all purposes. As against the plaintiff his rights are those which acquired under the lease. He has acquired no further rights against her and thing which has taken place the defendant and third parties deprive the plaintiff or her successors of her right to enforce the express sovenant entered into between her and the appellant, As regards the second relief it is conceded that it does no more than express what the rights of the parties will be in the event of the plaintiff's successors at any time becoming entitled to actual possession of the land and I, therefore, see no reason for disturbing it. The result is, that the appeal fails and I accordingly dismiss it with costs. J. P.

ORDER.—This is a petition asking us to direct the Agent to the Governor, Vizaga-patam, to review his proceedings dismissing as inadmissible an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Agent.

A preliminary objection has been taken to our hearing the petition, that it does not lie, because the Agent's disposal is not a decree, to which rule 20, V zigapatam Agency Rules applies. The question whether the Agent's disposal is a decree is indistinguishable from the question whether the decision under appeal before him was likewise a decree. The Assistant Agent was dealing with what undoubtedly was described before him as a petition and was beaded as prasented under Order XXI, rale 52, Civil Procedure Code. The circumstances were that the present first respondent was claiming the property attached by the present petitioner in execution of her decree against the second and other respondents. The Assistant Agent in dealing with the ease appears to have eventually deslined to decide the two issues originally framed which related to the claimant's title and to restricted his enquiry to possession with reference to the terms of Order XXI, rule 59. That was all in accordance with the character of the proceedings as resembling what in non agency tracts are known as claim proceedings. In fact, however, the petitioner, who was then in position of first counter-petitioner, had expressly pleaded that the claim procedure under Order XXI, rule 58, was not in force in the Agency tracts at all and had relied on a plea of title. The petitioner, therefore, cannot be held in any degree responsible, if the Assistant Agent erred in treating the proceedings before him as elaim proseedings or in limiting the scope of the enquiry consistently with their being of that pature.

The law applicable is contained exelu. sively in the Agency Roles already referred to. The only provision for appeal is rule 16, allowing an appeal from the Assistant Agent to the Agent, and there is, of sourse, the provision in rule 20 for the powers and control exercisable by this Court. Those provisions apply only to decrees and we have been able to find no provision for appeals against either order passed in execution or other orders of a miscellaneous character. If, then, we are constrained to regard the Assistant Agent's order as passed on a petition and as not constituting a decree, we shall have to hold that the appeal to the Agent was rightly rejected by him and to dismiss ANANT BAM U. NATIONAL BANK OF CPPER INDIA LTD., LUCENOW, the present petition. To support the position that orders in execution are not appealable there is a decision in Sri Sri Sri Vikramadeo Maharaiulam Garu v. Sri Neladeri Pattamadhaderi Garu (1) and there is clearer authority in Lagadapati Venkatanagabushanam v. Ovilapati Mahalaxmi (2) to show that miscellaneous orders by an Agent or Assistant Agent can be displaced only by an application to the Governor in Council.

The result, however, is not, in our opinion, to limit a person in the first reapondent's position to a petition as the means by which he can make his claim. consequence is that, if he approaches the Coart in order to do so, he should be regarded rather as availing himself of the only remedy which the law in the Agency tracts provides; that is, the institution of a suit. The fact that he bimself deseribed his action as a petition and referred to a provision of the Civil Procedure Code which was wholly irrelevant, cannot prevent us from assertaining what was the real character of the proceedings or from treating them as what they really were, especially when we have not been shown how any unfair prejudice to any of the parties to them is to be apprehended, The necessary averments for a suit by a elaimant were contained in the first respond. ent's petition and the proper defenses were put forward in the patitioner's counterpetition. If the proper issues were not joined, that was, as already pointed out, through no fault of his. It may be observed that there is no reason why the existence in the Agency Court of a remedy by way of slaim petition should be assumed or the elaim procedure is not a part of English Law and there is no reason for regarding it as anything but a special provision of the Code or importing it into a legal system which has always stood on an independent foundation. In these circumstances, we feel at liberty to treat the proceedings as taken in the only manner available to the first respondent, by suit and, therefore, to regard the orders of the Assistant Agent and the Agent as desrees, the former being appealable and the latter being subject to the interference of this Court with reference to rule 20.

Taking this view, we must direct the Agency Commissioner to review his order after hearing the appeal on the merits in the light of the foregoing. In doing so, we take the opportunity to refer to a statement made by Mr. Appa Rso on behalf of the petitioner before us, which is entirely consistent with the record, that his elient was not heard before the order was passed. We are constrained to eall the attention of the Agency Com. missioner to this irregularity in his pre desessor's procedure. Secondly, we observe that the Agency Commissioner should, in dealing with the merits of the case, consider before desiding against the petitioner, whether the scope of the trial was not undaly limited by an unnesessary regard for the provisions of the inapplicable Order XXI, rule 59. We direct that easts of the proesedings in the Court here and in the lower Courts to date by costs in the cause and follow the result.

Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT .- This ease is really a simple one. The suit was brought by the plaintiff, the National Bank of Upper India, Limited, on a pro-note expented by the first defendant, Baba Ishari Prasad, on 21st Dasambar 1916. The pro note purported to be executed by Ishari Prasad "in my capacity as trustee of Obhedi Lal's Dharamahala and administrator of Chhedi Lul's estate." It was executed in renewal of a pro-note dated 23rd Dasember 1913 executed by Babu Ishuri Prasad's late brother Baba Ganga Peasad Varma, The pro note was signed "Gauga Prasad Varma, executor of Chhedi Lul's estate." Chhedi Lul died in 1904 leaving the greater part of his estate for charitable purposes. He appointed four executors, of whom two were Baba Ganga Prasad and Baba Ishuri Prasad. Ganga Prasad alone took out Probate and was appointed executor by the Court. Hy desided to apply the money left by Chedi Lal in bailding a Dharamahala. Ha also applied a considerable amount of his money for the same purpose. In the spassh which he made at the public opening of the Diaram. shala, Exhibit 270, he stated that bailding would sout a little over Rs. 50,000, of which Rs. 35,000 had been or would be met from the estate of Cheddi Lal. In order to make up the amount he borrowed money from time to time on pro-notes of which the pro-note of 23rd Dasambor 1913 was one.

After Baba Ganga Prasad Varma's death in 1914, Baba Ishuri Prasad and one Baba Brijmohan Lil were appointed administrators of Chhedi Lal's estate. On 14th June 1917 their Letters of Administration were cancelled and, subsequently, on 5th March 1918, Letters of Administration were granted to the appellant Baba Anant Ram. It is in his eapsoity of administrator of Chhedi Lal's estate that Baba Anant Ram was made a defendant. The first relief asked for was a decree against the first defendant as trustee and manager of Chhedi Lul's Dharamshala. The second relief was that "if the said Dharamahala for any reason be not deslared to be a trust property but a portion of Baba Chhedi Lal's estate and assets then a decree for Rs. 9,911-15-2, with fature interest, be passed against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by creating a charge on the estate of Baba Chiadi Lal including the said Daaramabala" There was a third alternative relief asking for a desree against the defendant No. 1 personally and as in possession of property of Baba Ganga Prasad Varms, which is not now material. The learned Subordinate Judge has held the Dharamihala to be trust property but has navertheless passed a desree against the essend defendant as administrator, though this relief was only asked for in the plaint in the eyent of the Diaramshala not being held to be trast property. Dharamshala and no decree against specific property could be passed on a simple pronote. The only question is whether Babu Ishuri Prassad or Babu Ganga Prasad, merely by purporting to sign a pro-note as executor, could render the estate of Chhedi Lal liable for the amount borrowed. The general rule established by Furhall v. Farhall (2) and referred to in Williams on Executors, Tenth Edition, page 1634, is in these terms:—

"It appears to me to be settled law, that, upon a contrast of borrowing made by an executor after the death of the testator, the executor is only liable personally, and cannot be sued as executor so as to get execution against the assets of the testator."

Certain special cases in which the estate is liable are mentioned by the learned author in Chapter II of Part IV. This rule has been held applicable to India in two cases of the Caloutta High Court, Romanath Paul v. Kunai Lal Dry (3) and Debendra Noth Biswas v. Een Chandra Roy (4). In this case it is quite clear, on the contentions put forward by the respondent, that there was no necessity to borrow this money for the purposes of the estate. In so far as the money was borrowed by Babu Ganga Prasad to supplement the assets left by Chhedi Lol, his liability was olearly a personal one. If, we is also suggested, the money was partly b rrowed because there was considerable delay in realising the assets and Baba Ganga Prasad Varma did not want to wait, this was still not a case of necessity. It appears to me clear, therefore, that even if there are cases in which a decree on a pro note in respect of money borrowed by an executor can be passed against the estate, this is not one of those cases. In my opinior, the suit should have been dismissed as against the appellant and I allow the appeal and dismiss the suit as against him with costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.—This case was remanded by a Division Bench of this Court under Order XXII, rules 5 and 11. Civil Procedure Code, for the decision of the question whether Mehr Chand, deceased, was a member of a joint Hindu family with his brothers. The report has been returned and is to the effect that Mehr Chand, deceased, was not a member of a joint Hindu family with his brothers at the time of his death.

Objection is taken to this report by Mr. Tak Chand on behalf of the appellant, it being contended that the report is based on evidence, which is inadmissible. This inadmissible evidence is said to be a record of certain partition proceedings, which requires registration. The documents in question are lists of properties allotted by arbitrators in the course of their award to the various members of the joint Hindu family, which was then being disrupted.

Our attention has been drawn to Asimat Singh v. Kalwant Singh (1), and it has been urged that the documents in this care are practically the same as the documents in that one. We have perused the authority sited and examined the documents in this case, and are satisfied that the two cases are not Asimat Singh v. Kalwant Singh (1), i.e., the lists of properties, were prepared by the so pareeners themselves. In the present case the lists were prepared by the arbitrators, and the mere eignature of the parties, i.e., the members of the family, on these lists does not remove these documents from the eategory of an award. We hold that these documents are a part of the award, and are, therefore, not compulsarily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act. We are supported in our view by Wasir Ali v Mahbub Ali (2), in which case Gobardhan Das v. Jai Kishen Das (3) was approved.

We assordingly hold that it has been proved that Mehr Chand was not a member of a joint Hindu family at the time of his death. In these circumstances, admittedly, the appeal abates not only against the legal representatives of Mehr Chand, but against his so vendese, the sale being indivisible.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with ecsts.

Mr. Ghulam Harm, for the Appellant. Mr. Sunder Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for possession of certain plots of land. His allegation was that the said plots had been mortgaged by him with possession in favour of Ram Narain Pande and Dabi Pracad on the 22nd November 18 7 for Ra. 200; that he deposited Rs. 200 on the 26th Jane 1918 under section 83 of Act IV of 1882 for payment to the mortgagess but they refused to ascept the money; that he subsequently ebtained a decree for redemption and in enforcement thereof obtained presession of the mortgaged property, and that Sheo Ratan, the present defendant-appellant, was wrongfally setting up his right to remain in possession of the said land under a lease said to have been granted by Ram Narain Pande, one of the mortgagees.

It appears that the defendant appellant filed a suit against the present plaintiffrespondent for possession of the said land in the Reverus Court under section 108, clause (10), of the Oadt Rent Act (XXII of 1836) alleging that he was a tenant of the said land and that the plaintiff respondent wrongfally ejected him. He got a decree from the Revenue Court, the propriety of which is here questioned by the plajotiff. respondent. The contention of the plaintiff respondent is that the lease, said to have been granted by Ram Narain Pande to the defendant appellant, was fistitions and fraudulent and intended to defeat the application by the mortgagor, tendering the mortgage-money under section 83 of Act IV of 1882, which was then pending. He also said that the defendant appellant did not obtain possession and that there were cartain sub tenants who entinued in possession of the land as before, The contention of the defendant appellant was that the suit was cognizable by the Civil Court. He did not file the crigical lease or a sertified copy thereof or mention the date on which, according to him, it was granted. The Courts below found that the lease had been executed fraudulently by one of the mortgagees on the 5th July 1919 after the suit for redemption was decreed and the possession of the mortgaged property had been taken by the mortgagor and that it was a sham and fictitious transac. tion.

The defendant appellant urges that the desision of the Revenue Court barred the Oivil Court from entertaining the suit for the possession or cancellation of the lease, and reliance is placed by him in support of that contention on Jagannath Singh v. Drigbijay Singh (1); that case does not, however, apply because there it was admitted by the defendant appellant during the trial that he was not in a position to claim proprietary or underproprietary rights in the disputed land and that he was only a tenant with a right of occupancy. The existence of the tenancy is denied in this case. In fact the finding of the Court below is that the lease was executed by one of the mortgagees after redemption of the mortgage. It must, therefore, be treated as inoperative and the position of the defendant appellant is no better than that of a trespasser liable to ejectment through the Oivil Court.

The learned Counsel for the defendant. appellant states that the lease was really executed on the 7th May 1918, but the finding of the Court below is against him. The defendant appellant is responsible for not having produced the original lease or accounted for its non-production and for not filing a certified copy thereof, if the original was on the file of the previous proseeding in the Revenue Court On the finding arrived at, the defendant-appellant has no locus standi, and the lease on which he relies, having been excented by a person whose right had terminated under the decree for redemption and being, moreover, fictitions, cannot ba given effect to.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case alleges that on the 28th of March 1915 he sold the fruit of two mango gardens for one year to Ranzan, now deceased. The plaintiff now sues the defendants as representatives of Ramzan for the balance of the price of the fruit. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has dismissed the suit as time barred holding that the case is governed either by Article 110 er Article 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Now, Article 110 clearly is inapplicable for there is here no question of rent; the support of this contention, and I am unable to agree with him, The term "goods" seems to me quite wide enough to include fruit even before the fruit has been gathered. I may note that in this ceso Mr. Badr ud Din raised a preliminary objection that this Court had no power of revision under section 115 of the Civil Precedure Code, but the answer is eimple, ramely, that this is a case of revision under scotion 25 of Provincial Small Cause Courte Act.

I ascept this application, and, reversing the order of the Small Cause Court Judge dismissing the suit as time-barred, I send tack the case to him for the contract between the parties was simply one for . JOGOBONDHU PAL U. BIJENURA NATH CHATTERJES.

the sale of the fruit for the season of 1915. Article 115 also seems to me to be inapplicable, for the plaintiff is not alleging a breach of any contract, but merely demanding the balance of the money for which the fruit was sold. In my opinion the Article applicable is Article 52 and the period of limitation under that Article being extended to six years by Panjab Loans Limitation Act, this suit, brought within six years of the sale, is within time.

Mr. Badr.ud.Din contends that fruit cannot be described as "goods" until it is removed from the tree but he has no authority to quote in support for desision on the merits. Stamp on application to this Court to be refunded. Other costs in this Court to follow the event.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERISS, J .- This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the preliminary deeres in a suit for partition of joint properties. The subject matter of the litigation originally belonged to one Kedernath Chatterjee, who left a widow, Thakamani Dabi, and four sons, Rajendra Nath, Bidhu Bhushan, Sadhir Kumar and Akshay Kumar. On the 10th August 1917 the plaintiff purchased from Akshay Kumar his right, title and interest in the ausestral properties. On the 8th April 1919 the plaintiff instituted the partition snit the for present in which he had besome properties parchase, by OWDer joint claimed to be placed in separate possession of a one fourth share after partition by metes and bounds. The widow of the original owner who was joined as a defendant, contended that she was entitled to a share in of partition. that the event and plaintiff the WB3 eansequently entitled to more than a one-fifth share. The Subordinate Judge has given effect to this contention and has made a decree accordingly. The substantial point which has been argued on the present appeal is, that the widow is not entitled to a share, inasmuch as partition is claimed, not by one. of her sons, but by the purchaser from one of We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention.

It was raied by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali in the case of Amrita Lal Mitter v. Munick Lal Mullick (1), that, as a Hindu mother is entitled under the law to be maintained out of the joint family property, if anything is done affecting that right, as, for instance, by the sale of any particular share by any of her sons, her right somes into existence. The position of a purchaser from a son is exectly that of a son himself; he has the same rights and takes it subject to the same morw ment acereq edt to eredt es reitilideil he purchased. This desision is precisely in point and was given twenty one years ago. We have not been able to trace any judicial pronouncement where it has been doubted or discented from or where an inconsistent rule has been formulated. Apart from this, it is plain that the view adopted by Mr. Justice Ameer Ali was not a new departure but purported to follow the opinion expressed by Macl-an, C. J, and Banerjee, J., in 18.9 in the out of Jozenira Chunder v. Falkumari Dassi (2) Maelean, C. J., observed, no doubt with reference to an entirely different set of eiroumstancer, that as the widow's maintenames specially as against the sons is a charge on the estate, a right in rem in the fullest sense, adhering to the property into whatever hands it may pass, a right convertible in the event of a partition into a right to a share equal to that of sons, it is difficult to see upon what principle a son can so deal with his share as to defeat that right of his mother. Mr. Justice Banerjee emphasised the view that, as a general rule, no owner of property can convey to any person a higher right than what he bimself possesses, and that, consequently, the purchaser of joint family property from a member of a joint Hineu family must take it subject to the right of his vander's co. charers to demand partition and subject also to such rights of other persons (who were not, strictly speaking, co sharers with the vendor at the date of the alienation) as may arise under the Hindu Law upon partition. A similar view had been adopted in 1880 by a Foll Bench of the Allahatad High Court in bil so v. Dina Noth (3). where it was ruled that a Hindu widow, entitled under the Mitakshara Law to a proportionate chare with cons upon partition of the family estate, can claim such share, not only against the sons, but as against an austion purchaser, at the sale in the execution of a decree of the right, title and interest of one of the sons in such estate, before voluntary partition. It was explained that the right the mother has is a right to participate in the property left by her husband, a latent and inshoate right of participation which becomes effective when separation takes plass; in other words, she has, as Maslean, O. J., put it in the case already mentioned, a quasi contingent right which may ripen or crystallise, if and when the partition takes place. (Sir Francis Macnaghten on Considerations on Hindu Liw, page 57). It would be contrary to elementary principles to hold that a right of this nature is l'able to be defeated by resourse to the device of an alienation, by one of the sors, of his share in the ancestral estate. The same doctrine was substantially recognised by Colvile, O. J., in 1855 in the oase of Stremutty Soor esmoney Doises v. Denubundro Mullic: (4), when he said that the rights of a so-parsener in an undivided family may, in his life time, pass to strangers, either by alienation, or, as in the case of creditors, by operation of law, but is all cases those who some in, in the place of the original eo.sharer, by inheritance. assignment cr operation of law, can take only his rights as they stand, including of source the right to call for a partition. The view we take is not affected by the decision in Barahi Debi v Debkamini Debi (5) which is an authority for the proposition that as the share allotted to a mother on a partition between her cons is given to her in lieu of or by way of provision for her maintenance, [Sorolah Dossee v. Bhoobun Mohun Neoghy (6), Remangin: Dasi v. Kedarnath Kuntu (7) she is not entitled to a share, if a portion only of the joint property is divided and the bulk of the property, ample for her maintenance, remains undivided.

It has been contended, however, that the desision in Amrita tal Mitter v. Manica Lal Malica (1) is opposed to the test of the Dayabhaga, which provides as follows, in Chapter III, section 2, paragraph 29: "When partition is made by brothers of the whole blood after the demise of the father, an equal share must be given to the mother; for the text (of Vribarrati) expresses, the mother should be made an equal sharer". This passage has been treated as authority for what most now be deemed settled law, namely. that the mother's right to elaim a share arises only when her some come to a partition, in other words, that she cannot enforce her claim to stare so long as her sons remain joint and do not ask for partition : Ganeth Dutt v. Jewoch Thakoorain (8). Now it has been argued by the appellant that under this text of the Dayabhaga, strictly construed, the mother is entitled to a stare, only when her sons make a partition, ard that, consequently, if a partition texes place at the instance of the pursbaser of the share of a son, the mother cannot obtain a share. This mode of interpretation is manifestly fallacious and proves too much; for it may as well be maintained that the purchaser of a share of a con cappot at all maintain a suit for partition, inasmuch as such a suit is not explicitly authorised by the text of the Dayabt aga. The truth is, that the author of the Dayabhaga had before him the problem of the partition of the family estate at the instance of a member thereof; he did not deal with the question of partition enforce. ed by a stratger, who, by his purchase, becomes a joint owner of the family property but not a men ber of the joint family itself; a partition at his instance cannot, by any stretch of larguage, be called Dayabhaga or partition of heritage, and must consequently be regarded as foreign to the proper scope of the treatise of Jimutavahana, When partition of the family properties is claimed in such circumstances by a stranger to the family, the question which arise must accordingly be determined by reference to general principles not inconsistent with those formulated for the case of partition enforced by a co parcener in the joint family. One of such general principles, as we have already explained, is that a member of the family cannot, by aliexation of his interest, prejudice the position of another member, because no owner of property is competent, as a general rule, to sonvey to any person a higher right than what he himself possesses. The substance of the matter thus is, that although the text of the Dayahbaga, Chapter III, seerion 2, paragraph 2 , speaks only of a partition made by some and the allotment thereupon of a share to the mother, there is nothing said in the passage or in any other authoritative text of Hindu Law which we have been able to dissover, as to the mother's right to a share on partition being so absolutely nonexistent before partition, that it may be defeated by any of her sons alienating his share before a partition. Apart from this, it is plain that the literal and restrictive construction of the passage of the Dayabhega, as interpreted by the appellant, would lead to the obviously unreasonable conslusion that if the suit were instituted by one of the sons, the mother would be entitled to a share, even though one of the defendants happened to be the purchaser of the share of another son, while the mother would not be entitled to a share if the suit bappened to be instituted by such purchaser himself ; surely the rights of the mother could not, on any rational ground, be made dependent upon a purely accidental circumstance, namely, whether the purchaser of the share of one of ber sons is claintiff or defendant. We hold accordingly that though a mother cannot compela particion so long as the sons ramain united, if a partition doss take place between the sone, she is entitled to a share equal to that of a son in the co-parcenary property, and she is entitled to a similar share on a partition between the sons and the purshaser of the interest of one or more of them. The plaintiff has consqueatly share of the correctly determined to aeed ba 008filth.

A subordinate point which has been argued before us requires consideration. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the lady had been given by her hasband Government Promissory Notes of the value of Ro. 8,000, and that she was consequently not entitled to put forward a claim for mainterance. In his deposition the plaintiff asserted that the lady had got from her husband Government Promistory Notes worth Rs. 5,000, The lady admicted that her husband gave her Notes of the value of Rs. 1,500 and that her father gave her. G. P. Notes of the value of Ra. 3,500. The Sab. ordinate Judge has believed her statement and has directed that at the time of partition the value of her allotment would be the value of one fifth share of the estate minus the value of the G. P. Notes she received from her husband of which the nominal value is Rs. 1,500. The appellant has contended before this Court that this direction is erroneous, that no distinction should have been made between the G. P. Notes received from her husband and those received from her father. and that the value of her allotment should be the value of one fifth share of the estate minus the actual value of the G. P. Notes for Rs. 5,000. We are of opinion that this should contention not prevail. well-settled that if the mother stridhan from her husband or received father in law, its value should be deducted from her share. Mr. Justice Maspherson held in Jodoo Noth Dey Sircar v. Brojonath Dey (9) that on partition of the family property by the sons after their father's death, their mother is entitled to a share equal to that of a son, but if she has, before the partition, received property from their father either by gift or Will, amounting to more than a son's share, she is entitled to nothing more on partition; if, on the other hand, she has received less, she is entitled on partition to as much as will make what she has reseived equal to a son'e share. Reference was made to a text of Yajnavalkya where a share is allotted, in the case of a partition in the father's lifetime, to such wives as have had no separate property given to them by their husband or father-in law. Reliance was also placed upon the Dayabhaga, Chapter III, section 2, paragraph 31, and Jagannath's Digest, tr. by Colebrooke, Book V, section 2, Pl. 87. This visw was approved in Kishors Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun Ghose (10) and also receives support from the desision in Poorendia Nath Sen v. Hemangini Disi (11) which followed Jugomohan Holdar v. Sarolamoyee Dossee (12). The rule is stated in similar terms in paragraph 587 of the latest edition of the Vyavastha Darpana of Syamacharan Sarkar (3rd Ed. 1883, Pt. I, P. 517): "the equal participation, however, of the mother with her sone takes effect, if no separate property have been given her by her husband or any of his kinsmen; but, if any have been so given, she is to have ardha or a portion which, together with the stridhan, will be equal to a son's. share." The statement is amply supported by the authorities set out in paragraph 238 (p. 199) and paragraph 552 (p. 42c). It is thus indisputable that the approved opinion is that the deduction to be allowed is in respect of stridhan received from the husband, from the father-in law, possibly also from any of the kinemen of the husband; it does not include stridhan received from the family of the father of the lady. This position is eminently reasonable; the primary responsibility for maintenance rests upon the husband and the father in-law, and gifts made by them may well be set off against the share of the family estate receivable in lieu of mainterance, on the ossasion of a partition amongst her sone; the same theory cannot be predicated in respect of gifts reseived from her father and members of his family who are not primarily responsible for her maintenance. We accordingly hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to impose on the lady a further reduction in respect of the G. P. Notes received by her from her father.

The result is, that the decree of the Eubordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 20!—Evidence— Entry in Revenue Record—Presumption—Alteration in share, effect of.

Where in a suit for profits it appears that there has been an alteration in the Revenue Record prior to the institution of the suit, but made during the period for which profits are claimed the duty of the Court trying the suit is to consider the order by which the alteration was made and give effect to the intention of the said order. If, for instance, a plaintiff was the recorded proprietor of a certain share in a mahal during the first year of the period in respect of which profits were claimed, and it were shown that after the close of that year he had been recorded as proprietor of a less share only, upon a finding that he had transferred his interest in the remaining share after the close of the first year in suit, then the duty of the Court would be to give effect to the entries year by year, calculating the profits for each year on the basis of the record as it stood in respect of the said year in the revenue papers. [p. 126, col. 1.]

When, however, it is clear, upon an examination of the order passed by the Revenue Court, that the alteration made in respect of the extent of the plaintiff's share was intended to be a correction of a previous erroneous entry, and was not passed upon any alleged transfer having occurred during the years covered by the suit, then the Revenue Court is bound to give effect to the entry as it stood on the late of the institution of the suit. [p. 126, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Bareily, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, First Class.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appella it. Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for profits. These were a simed on account of three years, 1323, 13:4 and 1325 Fasli, in respect of a share of 7½ biswas and odd in a certain mahal. The defendant replied that the plaintiff vas the proprietor only of a share of 12 bi wansis and odd, that is to say, about one twelfth of the share stated in the plaint. The Court found that during the years 13:3 and 1324 Fasli the plaintiff stood recorded as proprietor of the entire share claimed by her, that this cutry had been ultered under the orders of a Revenue Court, and the entry recording the plaintiff as proprietor of only 12 biswansis and odd bad been made before the commencement of the reverue year 1325 Faeli, Both the Courts below have held that the entry of the year 1325 Faeli, made before the institution of the present suit, raised an irrebuttable presumption that the plaintiff's share was only that shown in the said entry (namely, 12 biswansis and odd), and they have based their decrees upon this finding. In appeal before us two points have been raised, and we may note that three bave been argued. With respect to the third point, it is only necessary for us to say that a plea was taken before us in argument which we cannot find in the memorandum of appeal to this Court and which was not even taken by the plaintiff in her appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The contention is that, even on the share of 12 tisuansis and cdd and the figures given in the Patwari's statement and accepted by both the Courts below, the sum in arithmetic has been so worked out as to give the plaintiff less than her lawful dues. We have not looked into this matter or allowed the point to be taken. It was essentially one of fact, to be determined by the lower Appellate Court and, not having been taken at all in that Court, must be beld to be concluded against the plaintiff by the decision of that Court. With respect to the extent of the plaintiff's share, the memorandum of appeal raises two distinct points. The first of these is, that the irrebuttable presumption recognised by this Court in the Full Bench decision of Durga Parshad v. Hasari Singh (1) should be applied to each one of the three years in suit in accordance with the entries in the Revenue Records as they stood at the commencement of each of those years. If this contention were adopted, the plaintiff would be entitled to profits calculated on the share as elaimed in the plaint in respect of each of the years 1323 and 1324 Fasli, and to profits on the smaller share of 12 biswansis and odd in respect of the third year only. We have been referred to two decisions of this Court, one of which was in a suit for profits between the same parties. This is the case of Mubarak Fatima v. Muhammad Quli Khan (2). Reference is made in that indement to a pravious destrion by another Bench of this Doact in the oase of Lichman Frasid v. Shitabi Kunwar (4). These two cases are authority for this propositio , that if on the date of the inalita tion of a suit for profits the plaintiff's name stands in the Revenue Repord as the proprietor of a certain share, the R vanue Courts are bound to presume the correctness of that entry and to frame their decree for profits accordingly, in spite of the fast that during the pendency of the lingation (either in the Trial Court, or in a subsequent appeal, or in second appeal) there may have been so, order of the Revenue Court altering the entry in are, therefore, There question. PARED distinguishable from the one now before us, in which there had been an alteration in the Revenue Record prior to the institution of the suit. We have to consider the question now raised independently of any express authority of this Court to which we have been referred. It seems to us that in a case like the one before us, when there has been an alteration in the Revenue Record prior to the in titation of the sait, but made during the period for which profits are claimed, the duty of the Court trying a suit for profits must be to consider the order by which the alteration was made and give effect to the intention of the said order. if, for instance, a plaintiff was the recorded proprietor of an eight-appa share in a mahal during the first year of the period in respect of which profits were elaimed, and it were shown that after the close of that year he had been recorded as proprietor of a four anna share only, upon a finding that he had transferred his interest in the remaining four anna share after the close of the first year in suit, then the duty of the Court would be to give effect to the entries year by year, calculating the profits for each year on the basis of the resord as it stood in respect of the said year in the revenue papers. When, however, it is clear upon an examination of the order passed by the Revenue Court, that the alteration made in respect of the extent of the plaintiff's share was intended to be a correction of a previous erroneous entry, and was not passed upon any alleged transfer having securred during the years covered by the suit, then the Revenue Court is bound to (3 59 Ind. give effect to the entry as it stood on the date of the institution of the suit. Applying this principle to the present osse, the desizion of the Courts below estudiating the plaintiff's share of profits on the basis of her being the proprietor of a share of 12 biswansis and odd only appears correct. There is, however, point to be considered, further which arises out of the desicing of this Court in the case of Mabarak Fitim: V. Muhimmad Qui Rhin (2). Tist derisien was propositioned on the 25rd of May 1921, that is to say, after the decision of the lower Appellate Court in the case now before u', taeverq edt to coitatitai edt retta Leebai bas appeal. The learned Jadges had before them the order of the Revenue Court by which the village papers were corrected with effect from the year 1325 Fadi and they edt die pritespace ai relacient berehiere desision of a Civil Court upon which it parperted to be founded. They same to the onelusion that, as a matier of fact, the Rayanue Court had misunderstood the Civil Court's decision and had ordered the piaintiff's name to be recorded in respect of a smaller share than that a varied to her in the Oivil Cour litigation. So far as we can understand the matter, the opinion of the learned Judges in the case above referred to was that the plaintiff had been found by the Civil Court to be entitled in her own right to one sixth of a share of 7 biswas and odd, which is evidently just double the share in respect of which she was recorded as proprietor by the Ravenue Court and in the papers on the basis of which the decree under appeal was framed. Assuming, as we must do, that this decision was sorvest, it would seem that the Cours below have, as a matter of fact, awarded the plaintiff on account of each of the three years in suit only one-half of the profits which she would have obtained if the Revecue Court had not misunderstood Civil desree οŧ the Court upon which it professed to act. We think, however, that it is impossible for us in the present suit to give the plaintiff any relief on the basis of this contention. The presamption raised by the Revenue Court reords must be applied either one way or the other. According to the plaintiff appellant it ought to be applied so as to treat her as proprietor of the entire share of seven biswas and odd during eash of the years 1323 and SURJA MARAIN DAS C. AMIRUDDIN MOHAMMED.

1374 Paeli, a sontention which we have already repelled. If we had acceded to this contention, the plaintiff would have received a great deal too much. The only alternative for us, so far as the present suit is concerned, is to accept the Revenue Record as it stood on the date on which the present suit was instituted and to affirm the decree under appeal, although it proceeds upon an entry made in ascordance with a Revenue Court decision which this Court has pronounced to be erroneous. The effect of the present suit will apparently be to dispossess the plaintiff to the extent of one half of the share which the learned Judges of this Court in the former litigation pronounced to be her rightful share. We fear that we have to leave the plaintiff to seek an appropriate remedy for this dispossession in a further Civil Court litigation, unless she san persuade the Revenue Courts by means of a fresh application to re-sonsider their own order respecting the entry in the Revenue Records in the light of the decision propooneed by this Court and to make a further correction Even if this were done now, the astual result would be a temporary dispossession of the plaintiff in respect of the years covered by this suit, and for this we san see no remedy other than by way of suit in a Civil Court. As the case stands, we must dismiss this appeal, and we do so accordingly with costs.

JUDGMENT,—We are asked in the Rule to set aside an order of the Munaif of Jalpais uri refusing to issue an injunction restraining the sale of the property in suit in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by the opposite party. The order was affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Jalpaiguri.

The mortgage decree has been obtained by the opposite party against certain persons alleged to be the heirs of one Nunda Ram Das. The petitioner's claim to be the real heirs of Nanda Ram and have instituted a suit for a declaration that the mortgage decree is not binding on them. The suit is pending before the Court of first instance and the petitioners have applied for the issue of a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit.

Apart from the question whether an applieation like the present one lies to this Court under section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, we are of opinion that we ought not to interfere in this matter on the facts of the case. The petitioners were no parties to the mortgage-decree and their interest, if any, will not therefore be affected by a sale under that decree. If the sale is etayed at this stage the decree holder will be kept out of his money for some length of time to which course we do not think he should be compelled. Considering that the petitioners will not be prejudiced in any way by the sale we hold that they have failed to makt out any case for our interference.

Hindu Law-Debt of father, when estate under Court of Wards-Pious duty of son, whether arises-U. P. Court of Wards Act (III of 1899), s. 34.

It is not the pious duty of a son to pay off such loans as were contracted by his father during the time that the estate was under the Court of Wards as during such a time the father is incompetent under section 34 of the U P. Court of Wards Act to enter into any contract which might involve him in pecuniary liability.

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Banda.

Mr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Appel-

Mesers, B. E. O'Conor, R. Malcomson, Badri Narain and Sarkar Bahadur Johri, for the Respondent,

JUDGMENT .- It appears that one Ganesh Prasad was under the Court of Wards for several years up to the time of his death in May 1914. On the 7th of January 1912 and 10th of April 1912 be executed two promissory-notes in favour of Chaubey Baldeo Prasad for consideration carrying interest at the rate of Re. 1.6.0 per cent, per meneem. Ganesh Prasad died leaving a Will by which he left his estate in charge of certain trustees. The Will of Ganesh Prasad was contested by his son Bindeshri Prasad who in the end was successful in having it set aside. The Court of Wards continued in possession of the estate till the 19th of December 1914. On the 5th of October 1914 there was a compromise between Bindeshri Prasad and the trustees appointed under the Will of his father. On the 6th of October 1914 Bindeshri Prasad executed a simple money bond in favour of Baldeo Prasad in lieu of the moneys due on the two promissory-notes given by his father on the 7th of January 1912 and 10th of April 1912 to Baldeo Prasad. The amount due on the said two promissory-notes on the 6th of October 1914 was found to be Re. 9,261-8-9. The bond carried interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. On the 6th of September 19:8 the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was brought by Baldeo Prasad to recover the sum of Re. 9,261.8.9 plus interest on foot of the bond dated the 6th of Ostober 1914. The claim was resisted by Bindeshri Prasad on various grounds. He said that the bord in suit was obtained from him under undue influence and pressure, that it was without consideration, and that he was not bourd to pay it. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit came to the conclusion that Bindeshri Pracad had failed to prove the allegation as to pressure and undue inflaence, and that the bond was for MANAKAL MURTHI SANKARAN U. AREEKARA AZHAKATH SANKARAN NAIR, consideration. But he further held that the defendant was not bound to pay it as the bond was given in lieu of debts which were contracted by his father at a time when the estate was under the Court of Wards, and under the Court of Wards Act a ward could not enter into a valid contrast. In appeal before us it is contended on bahalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the view taken by the Court below is incorrect. It is conceded that the bond in suit was given in lieu of the debts contracted by Ganesh Prasad at a time when he was a ward of the Court of Wards; but it is said that it is the pious duty of a Hindu son to pay off the debts of his father, and that the bond in suit was given for consideration and the defendis liable to pay it. In support of ant this a case is eited which is to be found at page 974 of 46 Ind. Cas. [Rajmal Shah v. Court of Wards of Tika Baldev Singh (1)]. We find ourselves unable to assede to the contention of the plaintiff appellant. Under section 34 of Act III of 1899, the Act which was applicable at the time the two promissory-notes of the 7th of January 1912, and the 10th of April 1912, were given, Ganesh Pracad was incompetent to enter into any contract which might involve him in pecuniary liability. In other words, any contract by which he made himself pesnniarily liable was void. The bond in suit was given by his son in consideration of the two promissory notes mentioned above. We do not think that it was the pious duty of the son to pay off such loans as were contracted by his father during the time that the estate was under the Court of Wards. The ease relied on by the learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffappellant is quite different to that before us. In that case both the father and the son gave a bond after the release of the estate from the management of the Court of Wards not merely for the sum that was borrowed during the management of the Court of Wards but for a further sum that was advanced after the release of the estate. The facts of the two eases are quite different, We, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the bond in suit is not enforceable against the defendant

The appeal fails and is dismissed with coste.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCIE, J .- In this case the appellant obtained a desree for ejectment of a tenant in South Malabar and, after depositing the amount assertained as due to the tenant improvements under the Improvements Compensation Act, applied before the District Mansif for execution of his decree by ejestment of the tenant from all the lands mentioned in the deares (1) 48 Ind. Cas, 974, 142 P. W. R. 1918, or, in the alternative, he added that, if the tenants claimed that any improvements had been effected subsequent to the decree in Kudiyiruppus, Parambas and hills, execution might be granted of the other properties, that is, Nilams (double erop lands), Palliyals (single erop lands) and Nattupoyils (seed-beds).

As observed by the District Munsif, this application for partial delivery was intended to be for the benefit of the tenants and to avoid further demands for compensation owing to delay in execution. The District Munsif granted the appellant's prayer and ordered delivery of the Nilams, Palliyals and seed beds and directed that execution in regard to other items should wait. He also directed that the tenant should give security for any relief that might be obtained against him in execution before he took the amount deposited for the value of improvements.

The District Judge held that partial ejectment, before compensation was finally settled upon the other lands which were left in possession of the tenant, was contrary to the provisions of section 5 of the Malabar Tenants Improvements Act, and he, therefore, allowed the appeal and directed the District Munsif not to grant the petitioner's prayer till he finally determined the question of valuation.

Section 5 of Madras Act I of 1900 provides that any tenant to whom compensation in due shall be entitled to remain in possession until ejectment in execution of a decree or order of Court. The section not make the payment of doss compensation a condition precedent to ejectment. Section 6 (b) contemplates revaluation being calculated on the condition at the time of ejectment and provides that the decree shall be varied in assordance with such order of the Court executing the decree. It does not provide that ejectment shall be stayed until revaluation is made.

There is an observation in Ohowakkaran Keloth v. Karuvilote Parkum (1) that a tenant retains in Malabar his status as a tenant until the improvements are paid for; but in Nynam Veetill Mayan Kutti v. Valappilakath Kunhammat (2), Sadasiva

Iyer, J., doubted the correctness of the statement and I respectfully consider that it is not warranted by the language of the section. There is no provision in section 5 or in section 6 to the effect that, until compensa. tion is paid, no ejectment should be ordered. In the Fall Bench case in Puthiapuravil Kannyan Baduvan v. Ohennyanteakath uthia. purayil Alikutti (3) Seshagiri Aiyer, J., held that partial ejectment was not contem. plated under the Act in any circumstaness, but the majority of the Fall Beach held that a lessor was not entitled to eject a tenant in Malabar from a portion of his holding while an assignee of the reversion could do so on payment of the value of improvements to that part.

The District Judge was not correct in his opinion that ejectment of a tenant could only be ordered after the final determination of the value of improvements. If that was the state of the law it would be possible for a tenant to postpone eviction perpetually by continually making fresh improvements while the enquiry into the last application for revalution was going on.

The appellant's (the execution petitioner's) application for execution of the whole decree was not open to any objection even though a petition for re-valuation might be pending, and the order actually passed by the District Munsif was, as already observed, a concession to the tenants whose consent was assumed to a course which would naturally be preferred to immediate eviction from the entire holding. The District Munsif's order requiring security to be given for any relief that might arise after the execution of the decree was not reasonable and must be set aside.

In the result the appeal must be allowed and the District Munsif's order will be restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Ramesam, J.—I will only add that, even if a plaintiff decree holder, who obtained a decree under the Act, is not entitled to eject the defendant until he pays the sum mentioned in the decree for improvements, it does not follow that, when he pays the amount so mentioned to the de-

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, confirming that of the Additional Munsif.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellants. Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- The facts of this case are as follows. The plaintiffs executed, on the 18.h of September 1903, a usufrustuary mortgage for five years in favour of Kulanjan Singh and Sat Ram. The deed is not on the record and it is not clear what exactly was mortgaged. According to the plaintiffs, on the 10th of August 1905 they executed a simple mortgage for Rs. 599 in favour of Mahabir Singh in which an eight. anna Zemindari share in five villages was hypothesated. The interest chargeable was Rs. 2 per mensem, On the 8th of October 1908 the plaintiffs executed a usufructuary mortgage of an eight anna two pie share in three villages which had been hypothesated in the mortgage of 1905 in favour of Kulanjan Singh alone. This mortgage was for Rs. 2,400 and for 15 years. The plaintiffs stated that, under a contemporaneous oral agreement, when the mortgage of the 10th of August 1905 was entered into, it was agreed between the parties that if the plaintiffs executed a usufructuary mortgage subsequently, then in that case the mortgages would not charge the interest as agreed npon in the mortgage-deed of 1905. It appears that proceedings were taken before the District Judge in lunasy with reference to one of the plaintiffs and in those proceedings the guardian of the lunatic wished to raise a loan on the property, whereupon the defendants produced the mortgage deed of 1905 and elaimed that it had not been fully discharged. This was the cause of action alleged in the plaint and the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the mortgage-deed of 1905 had been paid off. The main defence with which we are now concerned was that there were two mortgage deeds executed in August 1905 and that, as a matter of fact, only the interest due on those two mortgages ALI JAWAD U. KULANJAN SINGH.

had been paid when the mortgage of 1908 was executed and that the principal same due on both the mortgages were still unpaid. Both Courts have tried the case on the allegations of fact mentioned in the plaint, assuming them to be correct, but have come to the conclusion that oral evidence was inadmissible to prove the contemporaneous agreement set up by the plaintiffs and, consequently, that having regard to the terms of the mortgage of 1908, the allegation of the plaintiffs was not proved. They dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs come here in second appeal and they urge two points, (1) that under the proviso to sestion 92 of the Indian Evidence Act oral evidence could be given to prove that on the happening of a certain event the agreement to pay interest would cease to be operative, and (2) that they could prove that, as a matter of fast, when the document of 1908 was executed the whole amount due under the mortgage of 1905 was remitted and that this was evident from the terms of the document of 1905 itself and the Court below had misread the document.

The meaning of proviso (3) would seem to be illustrated by an illustration (1) to section 92 and it would seem to refer to cases where there was an oral agreement to the effect that a contract in writing was to take effect only on the happening of a particular contingency.

On the first point it has been pointed out that "a distinction must be drawn between the cases where the matter sought to be introduced by extraneous evidence is a condition precedent or a defeasance. It may be shown that the instrument was not meant to operate until the happening of a given condition; but it cannot be shown by parol evidence that the agreement is to be defeated on the happening of a given event." (Vide Woodroffe and Amir Ali, Law of Evidence, 6th Edition, page 601). seems to sum up the English Law on the question and it does not seem to us that in this respect proviso (3) lays down anything different. In the case of Ramiban Scrouge v. Oghore Nath Chatterjee (1) Mr. Justice Sale took the same view. He says: "I do not think that it was intended by proviso (3) to permit the terms of a written contrast to be varied by a contemporaneous oral agreement; but having regard to the illustrations (b) and (i), I think, the proper meaning of proviso (3) is that a contemporaneous oral agreement to the effect that a written contract was to be of no force or effect at all, and that it was to impose no obligation at all until the happening of a certain event, may be proved." The same view was taken by a learned Judge of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in Vithu Jairam v. Akaram (2) and we agree entirely with that judgment. This disposes

As to the second point, of sourse the plaintiffs could prove if it was a fact, that when the mortgage of 1908 was executed. all liability under the previous mortgage of 1905 was discharged. This, however, was not their case as brought in their plaint and the argument that the terms of the document itself are only consistent with this view, cannot be supported. Under the mortgage of 1905 the principal sum of Rs. 599 was advanced. When the mortgage of 1908 was executed, it was recited that a sum of Rs. 600 was left with the mortgages "to pay Mahabir." That is all. No reference is made to any particular debt or to any particular mortgage, much less is there any recital to the effect that this payment of Rs. 600 was in complete satisfaction of the whole debt due to Mahabir. But it is said that the words later on written in the doonment must be considered. They are to the effect that the property then mortgaged "is free from all charges and liability." It is said these words can only mean that the whole liability under the mortgage of the 10th of August 1905 was admitted to have been discharged. There might have been some force in this argument if it were not a fact that there were several mortgages between these parties on the record, and we find the same words occurring in other mort. gages where they cannot have the meaning which the plaintiffs now seek to put on this mortgage. It seems to be a set phrase used carelessly by the scribe of these documents. In the written statement it is stated that, as a matter of fact, there were two mort. gages executed in the month of August 1:05 by the plaintiffs in favour of Mahabir. When the deeds are on the record, the sam of Rs. 600 which was left to be paid to Mahabir represented not the whole amount due to Mahabir but the interest then due on the two mortgages. This may be so, or it may not, but it shows that the words relied upon as proving the complete satisfaction of the particular mortgage of the 10th of August 1905, do not of necessity mean what the appellants contend. It is, however, a remarkable eirenmetance which is on the record that the mortgage deed of the 10th of August 1905 was in the possession of Mahabir and was produced by him. If it had been paid off and nothing remained due whatever under that mortgage, one would have expected it to have been given back to the plaintiffs, or at least to the defendant Kolanjan Singh who satisfied it, with an endorsement to that effect.

In our opinion, therefore, the view taken by the Courts below is right and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Custom-Adoption-Daughter's son-Dhanoi Jats of Tahsil Kharar, Ambala District-Wajib-ul-arz-Riwaj-i-am.

Among Dhanoi Jats of Tahsil Kharar, Ambala District, the adoption of a daughter's son is valid by custom.

A waith-ul-arz is a part of the Revenue Record and is, therefore, of greater authority, than a riwaj-i-am which is of general application and is not drawn up in respect of individual villages.

Mr. N. O. Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit a collateral in the fourth degree seeks to set aside an adoption of a daughter's son.

The parties are Dhanoi Jats of Tabell Kharar, Ambala; the wailb-ul-ars of 1852 favours a gift to a daughter's son, and the customary adoption of such a son is merely another form of a gift. Sundar Singh v. Musammat Mano (1), is a ruling concerning this very family and in that case the entry in the wailb-ul-ars which was supported by affirmative evidence of the validity of the custom was assepted.

Against that ruling there has been adduced by the plaintiff-appellant nothing tangible, Ralla v. Budha (2), does not weaken the authority of Sundur Singh v. Musammat Mano (1), for in the latter case the burden of proving the custom was laid on the persons.

However that may be, the fast remains that we have in this very family a clear judicially proved instance of the alleged custom, which is, moreover, supported by the wijib-ul-art; this document is a part of the Revenus Resord and, therefore, of greater authority than a riwai-i-am which is of general application and is not drawn up in respect of individual villages.

We see no reason to differ from the Courts below which hold that the custom resited has been established, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law-Mortgage to pay off prior mortgage of date when son not born-Antecedent debt-Legal necessity.

A mortgage effected by a Hindu father to pay off a prior mortgage of a date when a son was not born to him is an antecedent debt for which the father can validly alienate family property, and no question of legal necessity arises for the validity of such a debt. [p. 135, col. 2: p. 136, col 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subor. dinate Judge, Aligarh.

JUDGMENT.

P.GGCTT, J .- The suit cat of which this appeal arises was brought to enforce a mortgage deed of the 7th of June 1905. The executants were Recti Prasad, bis step-mother, Muscmmat Man Konwar, and his brother's widow, Mu.ammat Hokam Kunwar. It is fully established, and has admitted before us in been practically argument, that the whole of the property affected by the mortgage was the property of Reoti Prasad. The ladies concerned were simply living with him as female members of a joint undivided Hinda family in the enjoyment of their right of maintenance. It so happened, however, that their names had been shown in the village papers in respect of fractional shares in the property. On the case, as admitted before or, we must take it that these entries had in fact been made as a mere formality out of consideration for the feelings of the two widows and that the property was Reoti Prasad's. The ochesquerce, however, was that the merigagee. before entering into the transaction, insisted upon execution of the deed by the two widows as well as by Reoti Prasad. On the date of the institution of this suit both the widow ladies who joined in executing the bond were dead; so also was Reoti Pracad. The suit was brought against Suraj Prasad, minor son of Reoti Prased, and his mother, Musammat Kamla Devi, the widow of Reoti Presad, was formally impleaded as an additional defendant in case any question might arise as to ber rights. In rep!y to the suit the defendant put the plaintiffs to proof of execution, but this has been fully established and is ro longer in question in ap sal The point for setermination in appeal is, whether the cebt rerresented by this bord was ireprred by Reoti Prasad slore or by Renti Pracad and the two widows jointly, and whether as a matter of law the money paid as consideration for this bond was taken by Recti Prasad in whole or in part for family necessity, so as to make the transaction binding upon the miner appellant. The Court below having decided all the questions raised in favour of the plaintiffs, it is the miror Suraj Prasad who appeals to this Court. The first question we have to consider is, whether the whole of the consideration was received by Reoti Prasad. According to the bond itself a som of Rs. 5.900 was left with Budh Sen for payment to a creditor ramed Hardeo Das. The balance of Rs. 4,100 was paid over in eash at registration. It is in evidence that it was fermally paid to the two ladies. There is also a great deal of evidence to show that at about this time Recti Pracad was making a number of rayments orgently necessary on account of Government revenue and to meet other debts. We have already pointed out that the whole of the property affected by the mortgage was Reoti Prasad's. On this state of facts, we think the Court below was abundantly justified in finding that the whole of the consideration, including the sum of Rs. 4, (O paid in each, reached the hands of Reoti Prasad and that the payment of this each to the two widow ladics at the time of registration was as much a matter of form and precaution as the entry of the ladies' names in the village papers and their appear. arce as joint ex entants of the bond in suit. There remains the question of legal necessity for the alietation. Of the debt due to Hardeo Das, a sum of Rs, 3,100 was due upon a previous mortgage executed in his favour by Reoti Prasad alone on the 12th of June 1901. The remainder was due on a promissory note. There is oral evidence, which has been accepted by the Court below and which we see no reason to distrust, to prove that Hardeo Das received payment both on his mortgage and in respect of the unsecured debt. This evidence being accepted, the unsecured debt due to Hardeo Das stands beyond question as an antecedent debt for the payment of which Recti Prasad was entitled to hypothecate the joint family property in his hands. The question of the sum of Rs. 3,10 paid in satisfaction of the mortgage of the 12th June 1901, has been strenuously argued before us. We have been referred to the desision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), and more partisularly to the manner in which that pronouncement has been interpreted in subsequent decisions of this 'ourt, down to the case of Ram Sarvop v. Bharat Singh (2). I do not feel it incumbent upon me in the present case to discuss or criticise the decision of another Banch of this Court above referred to. I take the liberty of saying only this much that, with all respect to the learned Judges conserned, I entertain some suspicion that the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council have received a considerable extension at the hands of this Court in the case above referred to. I do not see why stress should be thrown entirely upon the propositions of law laid down by their Lordships in Sahu Ram Uhandra v. Bhup Singh (1), at page 447* of the report to the entire ignoring of the question dissussed in two previous pages, 443 and 44. , regarding the pions daty thrown upon the sons and grandsons to dissharge their father's debts. Their Lordships expressly noted that in the case before them the argument founded upon this pious obliga. tion, as such, failed by reason of the fact that they were dealing with a case in which the father was still alive when the suit was brought by which it was sought to bind the rights of the sons in the joint family property. In a case like the present, in which the son is being sued after the death of the father, it seems clearly neceseary that this question should be taken up and considered and decided (if it is to be decided against the creditor) on some other ground that than upon which it was disposed of in the ease of Sahu Ram Chandra V. Bhup Singh (1). At the same time, I am satisfied that the case now before us is elearly distinguishable from that of Ram Sarup v. Bharat Singh (2), so that what I have said above regarding that desision may be taken as a personal expression of affecting the ot opinion not result the present appeal. According to the Prasad's in Saraj age plaint month of June 1918, when this suit was instituted, was about 16 years. If so, he was born in or about the month of June A more reliable piece of evidence as to his age is to be found in the guardianship certificate re produced at page R. 15 of our printed book. According to this sertificate, Suraj Prasad was to attain the age of majority under the Guardians and Wards Ast (VIII of 1890), that is to say, he was to complete 2t years of age on the 5th of February 1925. Assuming piece of evidence to be correct, he was born in February 1904; in any case, he was not in existence when his father hypotherated the joint family property in favour of Hardeo Das on the 12th of June, 1901, in consideration for a loan of Rs. 2,000. If the suit were on the bond of Hardeo Das the appellant, Suraj Prasad, would not be entitled to sontest the necessity for the alienation in question. On this point it is aufficient to refer to the decision of this Lul v. Court in Ohuttun In the year 1901, therefore, Harleo Das was not dealing with Reoti Prasad as the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and a minor son, or as a trustee for the interests of that son. Reoti Prasad was at that time the sole owner of the property which he hypothecated to Hardeo Das along with his covenant to re-pay the loan. Under these circumstances, it seems to me clear that the question of legal necessity for the loan advanced by Hardeo Das cannot be raised in the present suit and must be assumed against the defendant appellant. Therefore, the debt due under this bond of the 12th June 1901, was an antecedent debt for the re-payment of which Reoti Prasad could lawfully charge the joint family property in his hands. This disposes of the sum of Rs. 3,900, which we hold was applied to the satisfaction of the debte due to Harden Das. As regards the sum of Rs. 4,100 the Court below has arrived at a clear finding regarding the manner in which this money was actually applied. The desision of the Court below, as printed in our paper book, is disfigured by one or two apparent misprints and omits to notice one item of Rs. 100 paid into the Treasury on assount of irrigation dues on the 6th of Jane 1906. Making the necessary correction, I find that the payments alleged to have been made out of this advance of Rs. 4,100 are the following:-Rs. 1,000 paid on the 22nd of August 1906, being the last instalment due upon a bond in favour of one Phul Chand executed on the 16th of February 1899. It is proved that Rs. 1,000 were in fact paid to discharge this liability, vide the receipt re-produced on page 11 R. of our printed book. There were a number of payments on account of Government dues (land revenue and irrigation does) aggregating Rs. 2,082.2.0 and there were two payments of Rs. 400 to a creditor named Nathu Ram and Rs. 600 to a creditor named Thakur Das. The whole sum of Rs. 4,100 is thus accounted for except a small item of about Rs. 18, which appears, on the face of it, less than one would have reasonably expected to see charged in connection with the expenses for the execution and registration of the bond in suit. With regard to these items the appellant challenges the findings of the Court below on the questions of fast. After giving our best consideration to the arguments urged upon us, we think it sufficient to say that we feel satisfied that the Court below was right. The payments on account of the Government demand are proved by unimpeachable evidence, as also is the payment of Rs. 1,000 to Phul Chand. The two payments to Nathu Ram and Thakar Das are proved by such oral evidence as one might reasonably expect and ascept in a case of this sort. With regard to the pay. ment to Phul Chand, the same question of law is raised as has been already discuss.

ed in connection with the mortgage in favour, of Hardeo Das. The reasons given for deciding in favour of the creditor apply even more strongly in respect of this sum of Rs. 1,000 due in respect of a debt contracted even earlier than that in favour of Hardeo Das. We hold, therefore, that the decision of the Court below was correct in law and in fact, and we dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J .- I agree. I think the judgment of the Sabordinate Judge is an expellent one in every respect ercept that it lays itself open to one small criticism. With regard to the 1901 transaction, I am quite satisfied on the evidence that there was legal necessity to support it sufficient to bind any minor sons who were living at the time. Where nothing is shown adverse to the character or mode of livelihood of a Hindu father, I do not think the Courts ought to be astate to find objections or highly artificial conclusions as to the absence of legal nesessity in transactions which took place long ago and which are thus necessarily difficult to establish in all their details by elear verbal proof in a Court of law. The history of this man's business dealings laid a sufficient ground, in my opinion, for establishing conclusively the existence of necessity for raising a loan in 1901 in the absence of some definite evidence that the loan was raised for purposes inconsistent with his trust as father and manager of the family. The learned Judge has used language which suggests that, in his views, the mare antesedency of this debt in 1931 was sufficient to support it. I do not think he meant that. I think if he had asked himself the question whether there was legal necessity, he would have answered it in the affirmative. And it is not correct. to say that mere antecedency is sufficient to support a charge made by a father upon family property for a debt. Tas learned Judge also found that the proof of the eash which was required at the time of the loan for family purposes and of the cash which was actually expanded, nearly amounted to the money borrowed. It appears from what my brother has pointed out that the nedt erem neve et beinnome deorg lentes what the loarned Judge himself thought, but, as far as I am concerned, I should not have beld that failure on the part of the plaintiff to prove every pie raised and expended for family necessity constituted a sufficient ground in law for interfering with the transaction even pro tanto. In all such transactions there must necessarily be some margin for what one may sall incidental expenses, and to my mind the task imposed on a creditor of proving in a transaction, at least twelve years old, and in this case going back seventeen years, in a sum so considerable as Rs. 8,000, the intended and actual destination of each rupee, is, humanly speaking, an impossible one and for Courts of justice in India to impose that duty upon a plaintiff as a matter of principle and, so to speak. to punish the creditor to the extent of every pie which he does not prove up to the hilt, is to invite the ereditor to commit and suborn perjury in the Trial Courts. The failure to prove a small margin in a large sum like Rs. 8,000 is amply covered by the old maxim De minimis non curat lex. I agree with the order proposed.

Mr. N. Sinha and Mr. Murari Frasad, for Mr. Ambika Prasad Upadhya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and Jalgobind.

Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.-This appeal arises out of. an action to recover possession of the disputed. property with mesne profits after setting. aside an ex parte decree and arction-sale held thereunder.

The suit of the plaintiff has been decreed by the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpore by his judgment, dated the 19th of March 1919. The defendant is the appellant before us. She had instituted a suit against the plaintiff. for resovery of read and embankment eess before the Munsif of Motibari and obtained an ex parte decree on the 19th of November 1921. This deeree was executed and the Brit in question was purchased by the defendant. The delivery of possession took place through the Court in May 1913.

The grounds urged in the plaint for setting aside the ex parte decree and the subsequent proceedings are that (1) the decree in question was obtained by means of fraud resorted to by the decree holder in suppressing the notice and summons and the process in the suit and the execution proceedings, thereby preventing the present plaintiff from the knowladge of the suit and the proceedings; (2) that the property worth Rs. 10,000 was thus parchased by the defendant at a grossly inadequate price of Rs. 162 8.0, and (3) that the plaintiff suffered a serious loss and injury, on account of the fraudulent action of the defendant: The defence was a denial of the charge of fraud and it was asserted that no fraud was committed in connection with the suit and the execution proceedings. It is also alleged. that the plaintiff's mother and guardian had full knowledge about the suit, and that the price of the property fetched at the auction-sale was not inadequate.

CHHAITRA KUMARI DEBI U. RADHAMOHAN SINGARI.

Court below held that the fast The stated by the plaintiff was proved that the ex parts desree in question was obtained by the defendant by means of fraud and that the decree obtained against the plaintiff was null and void inasmuch as no guardian ad litem was appointed on bahalf of the minor to protest his interest in the suit under Order XXXII of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court below also held that the price fetched was grossly inadequate inasmuch as the total collections of the disputed property will be about Rs. 197, whereas it was sold for Re, 162-8-0 only. The Court below has, therefore, deereed the plaintiff's sait directing possession to be delivered to the plaintiff with mesne profits. The defendant has, therefore, some to us in appeal.

Mr. Parneada Naraia Sinha on behalf of the appellant urges that the Court below has not recorded a sufficient finding of fraud in order to hold that the decree in question was vitiated by reason of frand committed by the defendant in obtaining the expirts deeree in question. Re further says that there is no evidence of such a fraud. The evidence in the ease consists of the plaintiff's mother and her Karpard z. They deny the service of summons or notice upon them and knowledge of the suit in which the defendant obtained the decree in question. On behalf of the defendant no evidence of service of the notice or summons in the case was addused. The evidence on the point was. therefore, one sided and the Court below has accepted that evidence. The finding of the Court below that no notice or summons was served upon the plaintiff and his mother must be assepted as unassail. able.

There is, however, a good deal of force in the contention of Mr. Purnendu Narain Sinha that this finding alone is not sufficient to infer in law a finding of fraud, and the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the aforesaid finding "constitutes fraud which vitiates the expirte decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff." It is concluded by authorities that the mere non-service of summons is no evidence of fraud. The summons might not have been served on account of the lackes of the Court peon or on account of other reasons. In order to charge a party with fraud in the suppression of summons it is essential to prove that the non service was the result of some active part taken by that party in not having the summons served and thereby keeping the opposite party from the knowledge of the suit. The point is so clear that now it hardly needs support of any authority. I, therefore, agree with the contention of Mr. Parnenda Narain Sinha, that the Court below has not resorded a sufficient finding to attribute fraud on the part of the defendant in obtaining the ex parte decree in question. If that were the only ground upon which the decree obtained by the defendant was attacked, then the plaintiff's suit would have been dismissed and the appeal would have been allowed; but the learned Subordinate Judge has some to a finding that the plaintiff in the suit in which an ex parte decree was passed against him was not represented at all. No guardian ad liten of the plaintiff was at all appointed by the Court. This finding of the Sabordinate Judge is borne out by the order sheet of the Original Sait No. 876 of 1912 (Exhibit 4). Oa the 9th of September 1912, the Court directed notice to issue on the minor defendant and the proposed gaardian ad liten and summons on the defendant fixing the 4th of Ostober 1912 for appointment of a guardian of the minor. After some adjournment on assount of the non-receipt of the service of summons the case was ultimately taken up on the 19th of November. On that date the Court resorded the following order: "This suit and suit o. 876 of 1912 tried together. Defendant absent. Service proved. Plaint. iff examined Dip Narain Lal. Suit desreed ez parte with costs."

It is thus elear that, although an order was passed by the Court to issue notice upon the proposed guardian, no order was passed appointing any guardian, nor did any guardian appear in the case on bahalf of the minor, and as the evidence stands no summons or notice was served upon the guardian or minor as is required by Order XXXI, rule 3, clause (1) Rule 3 of that Order makes it imperative upon the Court to appoint a person to be guardian for the suit on bahalf of a minor. Under role 4, clause (3) no person can be appointed a guardian for the suit without his consent. Therefore, according to the provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure, when there is a minor defendant in a suit it is incumbent upon the Court to appoint a guardian with his consent to act as a guardian in the suit on behalf of the minor.

Now, it has been held in a large number of cases that where the Court has by its action given its sanction for the appearance of a person as guardian, the absence of a formal order of appointment is not nesessarily fatal to the proceedings. In other words, a mere irregularity in the appointment of a guardian ad litem will not render the decree obtained against the minor null and void unless the interest of the minor has suffered by reason of such an irregularity. The leading decision upon the subject is that of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the ease of Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (1): Vide also Paresh Nath Mallik V. Hori Charan Dey (2), Nagendra Nath Bosu v. Parbati Charan (3), Surai Deo Narain Missro v. Sur eg Prasad Missra (4), Bum Array singh v. Sheonandan Singh (5) Keshawe Surendra Sahi v. Rani Decendrabala Dasi (6) and Ohhotter Singh v. Ter Singh (7). In most of these cases the guardian did act on behalf of the minor in the case and his interest, therefore, was protested. Consequently, in those cases it could not be said that the miner was not represented, though the representation was not formally sanctioned by the Court. In some of those cases it would be noticed that the Court itself permitted the guardian to set on behalf of the minor and the guardian was, therefore, asting with the full knowledge and approval of the Court; but here the case is of a different character. minor who mother of the The his guardian did not know of the suit. No notice or summons was served upon her. No order of the Court was passed appointing her as guardian. No consent, either express or implied, was given by her and at no stage of the case she entered appearance. Therefore, the suit was decreed against the minor without any guardian and the minor was not at all represented in the suit. He is, therefore, not at all bound by the decree or any proceeding in connection with that decree: Ranewar Pramonik v Torapa a Bhattacharjee (8) Khigwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Das (9), Krishna Chandra [Narendra Chandra Mondol] v. Jogendra Nar in Roy (10), S. dashiv Ram. chandra Datar v. Trimbak Keshav Vate (11), Eda tunnayya v. Jangala Kama Kotayya (12) Rampirst Prosad v. Babu Thakur Saran (13). The principle has been recognized in the well-known decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rashidun-nisa v. Muhammad lemail Khan (14). Therefore, the ex parte decree in question was not binding upon the plaintiff and was null and void. His interest in the property sould not, therefore, be affected by the sale in excention of the decree.

Mr. Pornendu Narain Sibba, however, contends that this point was not taken in the plaint for was any issue raise? and consequently no proper opportunity was given to the defendant to rebut it. It appears, however, that the order sheet of the case was filed and used as evidence on behalf of the plaintiff (marked Exhibit 4). Upon the face of that order cheet the plaintiff was not represented in the suit. It appears that on the date when the present case was taken up, that is, the 14th of March 1919, after the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant wanted time on the allegation that her witnesses had missed the train and sould not some that day. The Court granted adjournment on payment of Rs. 20 as costs. Mr. Kennedy, the defendant's Vakil, then intimated to the Court that his elient was not willing to pay costs. The petition for time was accordingly rejected and the case was deeided only upon the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. Therefore, the defendant had full opportunity to rebut the case made by the plaintiff in evidence. Therefore, there is not much substance in the entention of the appellant. In fact, no evidence is required and no evidence would be available to rebut the dosumentary evidence in the shape of the order sheet in the case. The Court has held upon evidence that no notice was served and there is no order of the Court appointing any guardian of the plaintiff. This is a stubborn fast and will not be upset by any amount of evidence. Therefore, we are not prepared to remand the case to enable the defendant to give evidense in the case. He had full opportunity and no further evidence is possible.

We also note that, even if the non-representation of the plaintiff in the original suit was due to any irregularity, we find that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a clear fluding upon evidence on the record that the property in suit was sold for a very inadequate price. The case of the plaintiff is that he is not bound to pay the embankment cass for which the exparte decree was obtained by the defendant. Therefore, there is no question that the plaintiff has been prejudiced by reason of the non-appointment of a guardian in the case.

For all these reasons, we uphold the decision of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT. November 1, 1921.

Trustee and persons in representative capacity— Delegation of powers—General or special power-ofattorney—Permanentlease by donee of power, validity of—Non-production of power—Admissibility of secondary evidence.

Fiduciary duties cannot be made the subject of delegation. Therefore, a person holding property in a representative capacity cannot delegate his powers by a general or special power-of-attorney, and a permanent lease granted by such donee of power is not valid. [p. 144, col. 1.]

If a proper case has not been established for the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of a written document, and objection has been taken to the fact that the document has not been produced, it is not permissible to go to other evidence for the purpose of indicating what the contents of the written document may prove to be if once it were examined. [p. 143, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and a decree of Mr. Justice Chitty and Mr. Justice Panton, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas at Alipur.

FACTS.—The enit was brought by the appellant, as Official Receiver, to recover certain property. The respondent resisted the action on the ground that the property was granted to them on a mokurari lease dated the 14th March 19.0, by Bhupendra Sri Ghosha, as Attorney of Protap Chandra Ghosha.

The Sabordinate Judge held that Bhupendra had authority to grant the lease and dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the High Court affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, holding that Bhupendra had authority to grant the lease and that Protap, not being a trustee of the property but in the position of a karta or manager of secular property, could empower Bhupendra to deal with the property and grant the lease. Such a lease is valid and binding on the appellant.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes, for the Appellant.—Protap was only a trustee. The lease was not granted by Protap but BONEBJI U. SITANATH DAS.

by Bhupendra under an alleged power of attorney. The power was not produced and there was no evidence that Bhupendra was the Attorney. Protap could not delegate his powers to deal with the property. Being a trustee, Protap himself could not grant a permanent lease. Secondary evidence to prove the contents of the power is not admissible.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents.—The lease was beneficial to the estate as both the Indian Courts had found the respondents took the lease in good faith and the consideration paid was found adequate. The lease was granted by Bhupendra as the Attorney of Protap who was the managing member of the family. There is evidence that Bhupendra had a general power-of-attorney from Protap.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Buckmaster.—On the 14th March 1910 a document was executed by Bhupendra Sri Ghosha, purporting to act on behalf and as Attorney of his father, Protap Chandra Ghosha, by which a garden at Tallah was granted to the respondents under a mokurari lease, at the annual rent of Rs. 125, and a premium of Rs. 3,000. The respondents on the execution of the lease, entered into and have since remained in possession of the property.

The question raised in this case is, whether the lease conveyed to the a any title at all. It is challenged in the following eirsumstances: The property in caestion originally belonged to Hara Chandra Ghose, who died in 1868. He was survived by his widow, four sons and two day thers. On the 7th May 1880 a trust de d was executed by all the interested persons, by which the property was placed n the hands of trustees for certain religious and charitable purposes. The two first trustees under the deed were the widow, Srimati Padmabati Dasi, and her eldest so , Sri Protap Chandra Ghosha. The deed so stained the statement that upon the death of the widow the eldest son, Protap, should be the sole trustee, and on his death the second son, Sri Sarat Chandra Chosha, should be the sole trustes, and so on. it also provided that during the absence of any trustee for over one year during his life, the person entitled to be the trustee immediately in succession to him should be appointed to the office of trustee for the time being. It is unnecessary to consider the exact terms of the deed or the nature of the trust for which the property was conveyed. For the present purpose it is sufficient to say that, until the deed was challenged by a family suit that was instituted in 1910, it was accepted as ereating a good trust, and the persons named were assumed to be exercising the duties of trustees. On the 16th April 1900 the widow died, and from that time Protap became, by the terms of the deed, the sole trustee. On the 31st December 1900 he left Calcutts, and he only returned twice afterwards, the first of the two visits being after the execution of the lease. The lease was, as has been stated, executed by Bhupendra Ghosha, and all the preliminary negotiations and transactions must have been earried out by him, or some one on his behalf, because the evidence of Protap, which has been taken at some considerable length, makes plain that he had no knowledge of the matter until after it had taken place. He was asked when he was told that the land had been sold or perpetually leased to somebody, and his answer was he did not know. Then he was asked: "When did you come to know?" and his reply was: "About the time when the High Court suit was commenced." The suit was instituted on the 31st May 1910 after the date of the execution. Later on, he is asked this: "Do you know who gave the lease?" and his answer is: "I did not know then. I same to afterwards that it was done in my name under some power-of-attorney." in re-examination he repeats this statement. and says: "I found my actual knowledge since I perused typewritten copy supplied to me by an outsider, which suggested many things, and made me There is no evidence to which their Lordships' attention has been directed in the long and tedious deposition which Protap was called upon to make which contradicts these statements, and consequently it must be accepted that when this document was executed he had neither negotiated its contents, nor was he aware of them. whole of the authority for the execution BONNERJI U. SITANATH DAS.

of that lease must be found in the powerof-attorney under which Bhapendra Ghosha purported to act, and the existence and extent of that authority is the chief question on this appeal.

In order, however, to see how this suit has arisen, it is necessary to go back a little in the family history. About the time of the execution of the lease, and possibly because of its execution, anxiety arose among the members of the family as to the way in which the affairs of the trust were being conducted, and in consequence a suit, to which reference has already been made, was instituted on the 31st May 1910, by Sarat against Protap, as trustee, slaim. ing to have the deed of trust deslared void, charging Protab with misconduct as trustee, and asking for accounts against him. In the plaint this lease was challenged, though not on the ground now under consideration. The beneficiaries were made parties to the suit, and a settlement of the disputes was ultimately effected; but one of the parties being an infant, it was necessary to obtain the consent of the Court to the proposed terms. This was secured by a decree on the 2nd August 1912, which declared that the general trusts of the deed were bad because the objects of the charity were far too indefinite, but the settlemnt of the litigation being approved by the learned Judge, his declaration was confined to the failure of the trusts, and to declaring that the properties that were the subject of the deed were charged merely with such necessary expenses were incurred 88 in the lifetime of the lady for the maintenance and ownership (?) of the Sradh mentioned in the third elause, and the service mentioned in the fourth appual The settlement released Protab from liability to account for moneys received from the lease, but it appointed the second trustee in the order, Sarat Chandra Ghosba, Receiver of the estate, and directions were reserved in these terms of settlement that he should be at liberty to take steps to rosover and set aside the perpetual lease or leases granted by Protap.

The poseedings out of which this appeal has arisen were assordingly instituted by Sarat. It is unfortunitely tras that the plaint is not expressed in plain terms, but it does most clearly set out allegations in paragraph 5 and paragraph 6, putting forward this lesse under which the defendants claim as a suggested or. alleged lease, and there is nothing in the plaint to show that the lease was accepted as having in fact been properly executed. Again, the particular matter in controversy was not exactly defined in the issues that were settled, but it is certainly covered by the third issue, which was in these terms: "Was the trastee or his am moshtar competent to grant the permanent lease in question, and is it binding on the plaint iff?." The case came on for trial before the Sabordinate Judge on the 14th July 1916 when he dismissed the sait. In the sourse of taking the depositions, attempts were made to give in evidence the contents of the power of attorney under which the deed had been executed, and objection was promptly taken that no such evidence was admissible because the document must be in writing, and verbal evidence as to its contents sculd not be given until some proper and sufficient explanation was offered as to the reason why the dosument itself was not before the Court. On mor than one osession, in the source of the evidence, similar attempts were made, and similar objections were taken, and in the end there was no evidence on which reliance could be placed as to what the actual terms of that document were, or whether in fact any such document was in existence or operative at the time when the lease was executed. The best evidence upon the point was that of Zatindra Muthik who was managing elerk to Boupendra in his profession of Solicitor. He is not himself a Solicitor, and is now a trader in fish. He says that he read the power-of attorney, and that it granted full power to execute lease, mortgage, etc., but he did not resollest the exact expressions. The power was a general power to sell, mort. gage, or lease,

This evidence was objected to, and is useless for the purpose of proving the contents of a written document. Their Lordships only refer to it for the purpose of eaying that had they assented the evidense, it would not be sufficient. If any power existed in Protag to delegate authority under the strust deed it would be BONNERJI U. BITANATH DAS.

quite clear that the power of attorney to be granted would have to be a special specially referable to power-of-attorney, dealing with the estate which was subject to the trust, and not a general power ofattorney, which may have been executed by Protap in favour of his son, entitling him to deal with the whole of his private property. No evidence whatever that it is properly admissible having been given of the power-of attorney it necessarily follows that there was no proof that the lease under which the defendants' claim had ever been properly executed at all and the defence failed.

The learned Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the suit, dealt with the matter in a few sentences. He seems to think that the elatement in the plaint of the suit that had been compromised was sufficient to lead to the inference that Bhupendra, the son, had full power to execut; the lease on Protap's behalf, and he says at page

198 of the record :-

"I may also point out here that Bhupendra Sri's authority to execute the lease on behalf of Protap Babu has not been challenged in the plaint, though the plaintiff knew, as the plaint in the High Court ease indicater, that such a lease was granted. Bhupendra Sri Babu was alive when this plaint was filed and this explains, why the plaintiff did not consider it expedient to challenge his power."

It may be pointed out that even though Bhupendra Sri Babu had died since the suit was instituted, that would not have prevented the parties whose duty it was to obtain production of the power of attorney from taking the necessary steps either to obtain a copy of the document or to prove that that copy could not be obtained. The point raised that the matter was not specifically mentioned in the plaint does not appear to their Lordships to be sound, because although it is true that the plaint is conched in uncertain language, it is nowhere intimated plaint that such a lease was properly executed, and it, therefore, became incumbent upon the defendants to prove the title under which they held. whatever may be said about what happened before the Subordinate Judge, the grounds of appeal to the High Court expressly suggested that the! Court below had | made a mistake in overlooking the fact that the alleged power-of-attorney had not been proved, so that the question was definitely raised, and the attention of the High Court directed to it. The High Court who confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. dealt with the question in these terms, at page 20 i of the record :-

There can be no doubt that Bhupendra Sri Ghosha beld an am-mothtarnama from his father. Unfortunately, neither side seems to have been at any pains to procure the production of the document or to give proper secondary evidence of its contents. if it could not be found. The evidence on the record, such as it is, indicates that am-mokhtarnama was registered at Bindbyachal, and that it granted full power to sell, mortgage and lease."

Their Lordships desire to point out that if a proper case has not been established for the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of a written document, and objection has been taken to the fact that the document has not been produced, it is not permissible to go to other evidence for the purpose of indicating what the contents of the written document may prove to be if once it were examined.

Their Lordships, therefore, are clearly of opinion that in this case the defence must break down through the inability of the defendants to prove the execution of the lease under which they claim by anybody having proper authority, and even if the evidence as to the existence and contents of the power of attorney were accepted, it would be inadequate for the reasons already given. Their Lordships are, however, impressed with what had been said by Mr. De Gruyther as to the defendants not being alive to this point being raised in the plaint, though they see no reason whatever for this inadvertence from the date when the notice of appeal was given to the High Court. Their Lordships, therefore, have considered what the position would be supposing such document had, in fact, been proved, and had been shown to be a special power purporting to authorise dealings with the trust estate, and they are of opinion that, even in that event, it could not have availed the defendants. The reason for this is plain. In whatever espacity Protap held the land in question, the capacity must have been a representative one. It was said that he was not in the strictest language a trustee; but be it so, his position was none. the less a representative one, and it being plain that he never negotiated nor considered. nor knew of the lease until after it had been executed, if what was done was done by virtue of a prower-of-attorney, it could only have been because the power had delegated the representative authority that he possessed to a third party. The duties of Protap, however they may be defined, were in their nature fiduciary, and fiduciary duties cannot be made the subject of delegation. If, therefore, the document had been before their Lordships it would have been impossible to have supported the contention that it conferred the power to negotiate and execute the document upon which the whole of the defendants' case rests.

Their Lordships desire to express their opinion that there is nothing to cause them to qualify the findings that have been found by both the Courts as to the defendants having acted honestly in the matter. acted honestly, but they acted with scant wisdom, and with a strange disregard of the eaution that it is essential should be observed in dealing with a person who has no authority to act on his own behalf.

For these reasons their Lordships think this appeal should be allowed, the suit should be decreed, an order made for possession of the land, an enquiry should be directed as to mesne profite, and the appellants should have the costs here and below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. Peari Lal Banerii, for the Appellant. Mr. Panna Lal, for the Raspondent.

JUDGMENT .- This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarb, passed in certain proceedings taken under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the purpose of obtaining restitution.

The fasts are as follows:- One Gobardhan Das died in the month of August 1900 leaving two widows, Musammat Rupo and Musammat Singhari.

The latter made a wagf of a certain portion of the property which had belonged to her busband, in favour of a temple, and appointed Nand Ram, the respondent in the present appeal, the trustee.

After the death of Musammat Singhari, a suit was brought against Nand Ram by the surviving widow, Musammat Rupo, and one Jiwa Ram, who, it was alleged, was her adopted son.

This suit was successful and a decree was passed in favour of Musammat Rupo and Jiwa Ram in the month of February 1910 and in execution of this decree Rupo and Jiwa Ram obtained possession of the property on the 4th of May 1910.

There was an appeal against this deerse to the High Court, and, ultimately, the decision of the First Court was set aside and the ease was remanded for decision on the merits.

After the remand the parties agreed to arbitration; and on the 21st of March 1912 the arbitrator delivered an award, upon which a decree was subsequently passed by the Subordinate Judge.

The effect of the award was to declare that a portion of the property, onse belonging to Gobardhan Das, had been effectively dedicated as wagf. The arbitrator also held that Jiwa Ram had been duly adopted by Musammat Rupo.

After this decree was passed Nand Ram on the 20th of April 1913 was put in possession of that portion of the proper'y which had been found to be validly dedicated to the temple.

Nand Mam then applied for the recovery of means profits from the 4th of May 1910 till the 20 h of April 1313.

A preliminary decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 22nd of December 1914 by which he awarded a sum of Rs. 2,624.5.5 to Nand Ram. This decree was against both Musammat Rupo and Jiwa Ram.

An appeal was filed in the Court of the District Judge. He upheld the decision of the F ret Court so far as the amount was concerned, but he passed an order discharging Jiwa Ram from liability.

Car .

A second appeal was brought to this Court, and in the result it was held that Musammat Rupo alone was liable for mesce profits from the 4th of May 1910 till the 21st of March 1912. It was further declared that Musammat Rupo and Jiwa Ram were jointly liable for means profits from the 22ad of March 1912 to the 20th of April 1:13.

The High Court directed an enquiry to be held in order that these liabilities might be assertained. In the order directing investigation nothing was said as to the Court in which the enquiry was to be held. Tae ease went down to the District Court and was passed on to the Court of the Sab. ordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has now concluded the enquiry and given a decree in which he declares Jiwa Ram and Musammat Rupo jointly liable for a sam of Rs. 708 3 2, while Musammat Rupo is deslared to be solely liable for the Rs. 1,691 3 0. It is to be mentioned here that Musammat Rapo died on the 28th of July 1918 while the enquiry in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was still pending.

Jiwa Ram now comes here in appeal, and three points have been raised and argued on his behalf. The first point taken is, that the order of the Subordinate Judge is ultra vives inasmuch as he had no jurisdiction to make the enquiry and pass the decree now complained against. It is pointed out that when the order of remand was made by this Court, the case ought to have been taken up by the District Judge against whose decision the appeal had been filed here.

This point has not been pressed, and we may say that, in any case, we should not be disposed to entertain it. It is purely a technical plea, and in view of the erroumstances of the case, and, in particular, having regard to the long period during which this dispute between the parties has remained unsettled, we should be very relustant to interfere on a ground like this. The learned Judge has conducted the enquiry very carefully and has discussed the merita of the case in full detail.

The next point taken is, that the order of the Subordinate Judge is bad for the following reasons:—

It appears that after Nand Ram made an application for restitution under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he made a default in appearance. The result of this was that an order was passed dismissing his elaim.

Subsequently, Nand Ram made an application for restoration. A date was fixed for the hearing of this application and, on that date, Nand Ram was again absent and the application for restoration was dismissed for default.

Nand Ram made a second application asking that the order of dismissal might be set aside, and, eventually, with the consent of the other side, an order was passed setting aside the order of dismissal and directing that the enquiry should proceed. In the course of those proceedings Jiwa Ram's Counsel informed the Court that he would not oppose the application for restoration, provided that he were given costs. His statement was that his client had been much harassed by the proceedings and was desirous of having the matter settled once for all. The learned Judge, in setting aside the order of dismissal, awarded costs to Jiwa Ram's Counsel, and thersupon the ease proceeded, and was terminated by the desree which is now, under appeal.

The argument for the appellant here is, that in proceedings taken under section 144 it was not competent for the learned Subordinate Judge to pass any order for restoration. It is argued that the terms of section 141 of the Oode of Civil Procedure, by which it is provided that the procedure laid down in the Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable.

JIWA BAM O. NAND RAM.

in all proseedings in any Court of reivil jurisdiction, do not apply to proceedings under section 144 of t e Code. The conten. tion is that an application for restitution made under this latter section is a proceeding in execution of decree and that, consequently, the provisions of section 141 do apply.

It has, indeed, been laid down by high authority that the provisions of section 141 do not apply to proceedings relating to the execution of a decree.

It appears to us, however, that proceedings under section 144 of the Code cappot deseribed an properly te proceedings in execution of a deeree. We have been referred to the judgment of the Madras High Court in Comosunderam Tillei v. Chokkalinga Fillai (1), in which it bas tern beld that preceedings under ceetien 144 are execution proceedings, but, with all respect, we are unable to agree with this.

A comparison of section 144 of the preeent Code and section 5:3 of the Code of 1882 seems to make the matter elear.

Under the old Code it was provided by the section just mentioned that when a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a deeree passed in appeal desires to obtain execution of the same, be was to apply to the Court which passed the deeree against which the appeal was preferred, and it was directed that such Court should proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits.

On the language of section 583 it seems fairly elear that the proseedir ge for obtaining restitution were, under the old Code, proceedings in excention of deeree.

The language of section 144, bowever, is very different, and we now find no mention regarding any application to be made for the purpose of executing the decree of the Appellate Court, nor do we find any direction laying down that such proceedings are to be regulated by the roles preseribed for the execution of deerces in suite.

The larguage of section 144 is very wide, and it is provided that, for the purposes of any orders irelading orders for the refund of ecets and for the payment of interest. damages, compensation and mesne profits which are properly consequential on the variation or reversal which has been made in respect of the first Court's deerse. It may well be doubted whether a Court, which was merely executing a decree, could be deemed to be invested with such extensive powers, for it seems to us that under section 144 a Court is enabled topas orders and to make erquiries which might be altogether beyond the scope of the Appellate Court's decree. Be that as it may, however, we are satisfied that, in view of the difference of the language used in the present section 144 and the former section 583, we are justified in soming to the sonslusion that proceedings under section 144 are not procredings in execution of decree. In this view we hold that the terms of section 141 do apply to such proceedings, and that, in the present ease, it was competent to the learned Subordinate Judge to set aside the order of dismissal for default and to restore the application.

The only other point which has been argued before us is with regard to the form of the lower Court's decree. We have already mentioned that Musammat Rupo died on the 28th of July 1918 while these proceedings were pending. It is said that after Rupo's death no formal steps were taken to make Musammat Rapo's legal representative a party to the record.

If there is any legal representative of Musammat Rupo, he can be no other than Jiwa Ram, and it is an admitted fact that at the time Musammat Rupo died, Jiwa Ram was a party to the record. In the circumstances, we are unable to hold that, because there was any omission to take formal steps to bave it deelared that Jiwa Ram was, for the purpose of these proceedings, the legal representative of Musammat Ropo, the order of the Court below was bad.

A further point is taken to which we must now refer. The decree prepared by the Subordinate Judge, on the 10th of July 1919, directs that Rs. 7:8.3.2 shall be paid by Musanmot Ropo and Jiwa Ram jointly, and that a further sum of Rs. 1,691.3 0 was payable by Muscmmat Rupo alone.

Obviourly, as the facts stood at the time when the decree was prepared, the form of the decree is wrong for, as we have pointed out, Musammat Rupo had died about a year balore.

It is further argued in the sireumstances if we hold Jiwa Ram to be the legal representative of Musammat Rupo, we ought also to modify the decree of the Court below so as to make it clear that Jiwa Ram is not personally responsible for the sum of Rs. 1,691.5.0 which the decree declares to be payable by Rupo. It is said that we ought to limit the liability of Jiwa Ram in respect of this sum to any assets of Musammat Rupo which have some to his hands.

At first sight, this argument appears to be a reasonable one but we have to examine the facts a little more closely. In the first place, it is now absolutely settled that Jiwa Ram was validly adopted by Musammat Rupo to ber husband Gobardhan Das-That was declared by the award of the arbitrators and the decree which passed thereon. If Jiwa Ram has been validly adopted by Gobardhan's widow, it follows that the title of the widow was altogether onsted, and Jiwa Ram takes the whole inheritance left by his adoptive father. Further, it is no longer disputed that in March 1910 when possession was taken after Musammat Rupo and Nand Ram had obtained a decree, this possession was delivered both to Jiwa Ram and Musammat Rupo. It follows, therefore, that Jiwa Ram's possession continued from the 4th of May 1910 till the 20th of April 1913 when Nand Ram was restored to possession of that portion of the property which was found to be waqf.

Such being the state of things, we do not see why the liability of Jiwa Ram qua this sum of Rs. 1,691-3.0 should be limited in the manner suggested. He is the adopted son of Gobardhan Das and is the owner of the estate. He represents the estate in its entirety; and in this view of the facts we think that in the present proceedings Jiwa Ram should a'so be made liable for the sum of Rs. 1,691-3 0 without any limitation of his liability. In other words, Jiwa Ram's liability to pay this sum is not dependant upon any assets which he has taken from Rupo, if indeed he has taken any assets from her at all.

The result, therefore, is that the appellant's costs to respondents including fees in this Court on the higher scale. We direct, however, that the decree be amended so as to make it clear that the total sum awarded is payable by Jiwa Ram, appellant, to the respondent, Nand Ram.

UDE RAM AND OTHERS-DEFENDANTS-

Appeal, second-Instalments-Discretion of Court.

Unless a very strong case is made out a High Court will not interfere, in second appeal, with the discretion exercised by the lower Court in fixing instalments, on the ground that the instalments fixed are too low, especially where a large portion of the amount decreed consists of interest. [p. 148, col. ?.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 22nd March 191:, varying that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 11th Ostober 1917.

Mr. Bihari Lal, for the Appellant.
Lala Amar Nath Mosgo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are few and simple. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 1,030 on the strength of a bond dated the 7th June 1911. The Trial Court found only Rs. 175 proved and gave a decree for Rs. 303, including Rs. 175 principal, and Rs. 123 interest. On appeal by the plaintiff the Appellate Court found the whole claim proved and gave a decree for the antire claim, namely, Rs. 1,030. This amount is made up of Rs. 600 principal and Rs. 430 interest. Having regard to the court thought that the defendants were entitled to have the desree made payable by instalments and made the following order:—

"I, therefore, ascept the appeal and give the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1,030 with costs payable by instalments of Rs. 25 every six months. The first instalment will be paid on the 1st of July 1918 and subsequent instalments every six months later."

The plaintiff has preferred appeal against the decree of the Appellate Court and has raised following two pleas in his memorandum of appeal, namely, (1) that the sound and proper discretion has not been exercised by the lower Appellate Court, because the decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff appellant for the sum of Rs. 1,030 and the instalments fixed are so low that the whole decretal amount cannot be satisfied for the period of 23 years to some, and (2) that if this Hon'ble Court is not inclined to interfere on the question instalments, then a stipulation should added to this effect that if the judgmentdebtor will not pay one instalment then the whole outstanding amount will, in default of one instalment, be enforced.

The question which we have to decide is, whether a case has been made out to justify an interference with the discretion exercised by the lower Appellate Court. On behalf of the respondents the case of Bishu Sekhar baneries v. Choudhry Mattab ud-Lin (1) is relied upon. In that case an instalment-decree was passed and in second appeal objection was taken questioning the discretion of the Court in passing such a decree, and a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court refused to entertain the objection and made the following remark:—

"We think that in second appeal the question of discretion cannot now be gone into. It is perhaps somewhat anomalous that the decree-holder should be kept out of his money for seven years, but, on the other hand, he has already recovered a substantial sum, nearly double the amount of his original debt, so that the hardship complained of is more apparent than real."

(1) 11 Ird, Car. 786, 15 C.IW. N. 1088.

In the case before us a large portion of the amount decreed consists of interest and it cannot be said that the lower Appellate Court had not exercised its discretion judieially. Although we are not prepared to go so far as to hold that, in second appeal, such a question sannot be entertained, we are of opinion that, unless a very strong case is made out, this Court ought not to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Appellate Court. An unreported case No. 1406 of 1918 (Ramji Das v. Gumani) decided on the 30th July 1918 by Mr. Jus ice Wilber force is relied on by the appellant, but the precise question raised before us does not appear to have been raised before the learned Judge, and consequently there is no decision on this point in the judgment. The decision in that ease, therefore, is no authority in support of the contention of the appellant.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

The name of the defendant was first entered as owner of the property in dispute, belonging to the plaintiff in 190, but the plaintiff first became awa e of it in 1918:

Held, that the right to sue for declaration accrued in 912 and that a suit brought in 1919 was well within time [p 14, col. 2.]

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

KAMLA PRASAD U. NATHUNI MARAYAN SINGH,

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Birjnath Vy18, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have heard the learned Counsel in support of this appeal and are of opinion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be maintained.

The only point on which the judgment of the Court below is impeashed is the ground of limitation. The contention for the defendant appellant is that the suit is time barred.

There can be no doubt that the proper Article applicable to the suit was Article 120 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. The suit was a suit for a declaration of title.

The only question which has to be considered is the date from which the plaintiff's right to sue accrued. The plaintiff, in paragraph 8 of his plaint, sets out the date on which his right to sue accrued as being the month of January 1918 and this suit was filed on the 11th of January, 1919.

On the other hand, the contention is that limitation began to run from the year 1901, corresponding to the year 1303 Fasli. The reason why this latter date is put forward is because it was in the village papers of that year that the name of the defendant was first entered as being owner of the property in dispute.

Both the Courts below are agreed in finding that the property in question is the property of the idol, who was the plaintiff in the suit. They both agreed, moreover, that the defendant Gopal Das got possession of this land not adversely but permissively. He was let into possession by one of the puraries of the temple who was, in fast, the manager of the land in dispute.

There can be no question, therefore, of any adverse possession on the part of the defendant appellant, Gopal Das. However, this is a matter with which we are not concerned here. The question is, what is the date from which it can be said that the plaintiff's right to bring a suit accraed? We cannot agree with the contention of the defendant appellant that the right to sue accraed in the year 1901-1902. The mere entry in the village papers would not of toolf give the plaintiff a cause of action, according to what has been set out made in the year 1309 Faeli was not brought to the notice of the plaintiff until the month of Japuary 1918, when the verification of the Settlement entries was going on in the district. It was then, according to the plaintiff's case, that he became aware for the first time that the name of the defendant was recorded in the village papers.

In our opinion no right to sue ean, on these facts, be deemed to have accrued to the plaintiff in the year 1309 Fasli. We think that the right to sue accrued in the year 1 18 and this suit was well within time. The plea of limitation fails.

The only other point which has been mentioned in argument is with regard to the lower Court's decree. It appears that the Court of first instance, although it declared the plaintiff's title, nevertheless passed an order for maintaining the defendant's possession as manager. The lower Court thought that this was a wrong order, inasmuch as the defendant did not profess to be in possession as manager but was setting up an adverse title. We agree with the learned Judge of the Court below that the order of the first Court maintaining the defendant's possession was not a proper one in the circumstances.

The result is that the appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs.

The head of a joint family cannot mortgage the joint family property without consultation with and consent of the other members, but where in a suit legal necessity is proved it is unnecessary to prove consent because in such a case this is implied.

Where a mortgagor mortgages a certain property as having a right to do so but in fact has no such right and subsequently title to a portion of the property comes to him he must make good his representation to the extent of the property which comes to his hands.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Arrab, (Shahabad).

JUDGMENT.

Courts, J.—This was a suit brought on a mortgage bond for Rs. 500 executed by Kamla Prasad, defendant No. 1, as the karta of the joint family and certificated guardian of his minor brothers. The suit was decreed in the Court of first instance on contest as against defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and ex parte against the other defendants; but on appeal to the District Judge this decree has been set aside and a decree has been passed ex parte as against the defendant No. 1.

The principal questions which arose in the suit were, whether there was any legal nesessity for the loan and whether the defendant No. 1 was the karta of the family. With regard to the question of the defendant No. 1 being the karta of the family there appears to be no doubt that this is so, but as regards legal necessity the learned District Judge has found that there was no proof of legal necessity except in regard to a sum of Rs, 160, and he says that if the bond had been otherwise a good bond as a mortgage of joint family property he would have passed a mortgage decree for Rs. 160 with interest at the bond rate against all the defendants: but he found that there is a defect in the bond inasmuch as Kamla Prasad executed it as karta and certificated guardian of his brothers. As the learned District Judge has said the law is that the head of a joint family cannot mortgage the joint family property without consultation with, and consent of, the other members, but where legal necessity is proved it is unnecessary to prove content, because this will be implied as in the present case. If Kamla Prasad had executed the bond as karta of the family the consent of the other members would have been assumed, but one of the other members, Lashmi Narayan, was of age at the time of the execution of the bond and Kamla Prasad executed the bond as certificated guardian of Lachmi Narayan; and, as the learned District Judge very justly remarks, this recital in the bond negatives all idea of concent of Lachmi Narayan, so that there is a defect in the bond. There can be no doubt that the view of the law which has been taken by the learned District Judge in the matter of the decree against the defendant No. 1 is the correct view. Kamla Prasad martgaged a certain property as having a right to do sc; he had in fact, however, no title but as title to a portion of the property has now come to him he must make good his representation to the extent of the property which has some to his hands. This is undoubtedly the correct view of the law and the learned District Judge has rightly passed an ex parts desree against this defendant.

I see no reason to interfere and would dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT .- This is a sait brought upon a promissory note of 1917 which is admittedly a renewal of a previous promissory note of 1914 which in itself was a renewal of a previous promissory note of 1911. The promissory-note in suit was made by one defendant only, namely, Babu Bam Baran Singh. The suit is brought against Babu Ram Baran Singh and also his brother, Baba Raja Ram Singh, upon the ground that the note was made by the defendant Babu Ram Baran Singh as head and manager of a joint Hindu family of which his so defendant, Babu Raja Ram Singh, was an adult member. The Kayastha Trading and Banking Corporation, Limited, were also made defendants as the original payees and endorsers in favour of the plaintiff. appears that both the brothers, Babu Ram Baran Singh and Baba Raja Rum Singh, were makers of the original promissory-note of 1911 of which the promissory note of 1914 was the first renewal. This fact may be of importance upon the question whether the note sued upon was in fast made for and on behalf of the joint family, of which the defendant Baba Bam Baran Singh was manager, for family purposes so as to bind the members of the family The suit has been dismissed by the Sabordinate Jadge on the ground that there is no sause of astion against the defeadant Baba Raja Ram Singh, for the reason that his name does not appear as a party to the promissory note in suit or as one of the makers thereof or, in other words, to quote the language of Lord Buskmaster in the report of the case desided by their Lordships of the Privy Council relied upon by the Court below, upon the ground that the name of Baba Raja Ram Singh was not disclosed. In arriving at that one. elusion, the Court below has relied entirely upon the judgment of their Lordships in the

Janki Das V. erry of Sadasuk Fershad (1) and, particularly, upon the principle there laid down as follows: -" [t is of the utmost importance that the name of a person or firm to be charged upon a negotiable dosument should be clearly stated on the face or on the back of the doenment, so that the responsibility is made plain and ean be instantly resognised as the dosument passes from hand to hand." In our opinion this principle has no application to the case of a joint Hindu family which it is sought to make liable through the signature of the managing member thereof, The position of the head of the joint Hindu family is not the same as that of an ordinary business agent and, according to the true view, a joint Hindu family being a legal person according to Hindu Law, lawfully represented by and acting through the managing member or head thereof, is included ordinarily in the term "a person". In other words, a promissory-note, assording to the definition contained in section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, is an instrument in writing containing an unean litional undertaking to pay a sertain sum of money signed by the maker and the question, in the event of the person in whose favour such document is given or into whose hands it may fall, in a case of an alleged joint Hindu family, is whether such a joint Hindu family, is in fact the maker or only a member thersof who happens to have signed the dosument. Assepting the principles laid down in the authority referred to, we are of opinion that they have no application to the case before us. We are content to adopt, without repeating at length the judgment of Mr. Justice Shephard in the eass of Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (2). The principle accepted by the majority of the Madras High Court in that desision has been inferentially assepted by the in the ease of Court Bombay High hrishnishet v. Boisnab Chandra De v. Ramdhon Dhor (4) and we are content to follow the view taken in these three decisions.

It is extremely difficult to see how any other view could be made to work consistently with the ordinary methods of business and with the established principles of law. If the view taken by the lower Court was sound, it would be necessary to require every person who was supposed to be a member of a joint Hindu family from whom it was desired to take a promissory-note, to sign a document, including, presumably, even infant children in some way through their guardians. would make it almost impossible, for all practical purposes, for a joint Hindu family to make payments or take credit by giving promissory note at all, which hardly be the intention of the Legislature and the Negotiable Instruments Ast. only other alternative would be to relegate the question of the liability of the joint family to the Execution Court, to decided there as a substantive issue of fact, even although a member of such family had been joined as defendant to the suit and a decree had been given in his favour exempting him from liability.

No doubt, from one point of view practical difficulties may be pointed out in commercial transactions upon the basis of this view being a correct one. All ore can say is that it seems to be an incidence of the difficulty of applying the legislative prcvisions of Western Law to the ancient ensioms and traditions of the law of the joint Hinda family; but the missbief of the latent ambiguity involved in the mere signature of the managing member of a firm circulated in the market, even although he may have signed as such managirg member for and on behalf of the joint family as a whole which he represents, would still remain, inasmuch as it would always be open to the other members of the family to raise the question whether the promissory note was in fact made for family purposes or as a breach of trast by the persons whose signatures appeared thereon for and on behalf of the joint family. The suit having been dismissed as against the defendant Babu Raja Ram

Singh as disclosing no cause of action, it must go back to be tried upon the merits. Insamueh as the point raised is a stantial and important one and this particular defendant raised it in his OWD behalf and obtained a deeree in his own favour, we think he must pay the costs of this appeal.

The learned Dietriet Judge on appeal decided against the plaintiff's claim and in my opinion rightly. The purchaser in execution of a rent decree purchases the holding itself and is entitled to say that he takes the holding free of ensumbrance, if, in fact, there is no encumbrance valid in law outstanding against it which it is necessary for him to annul. This holding is non transferable, The mortgage was a transfer and was, therefore, of no effect as against the holding or the person who purshases the holding in a rent execution. Such a mortgage cannot effectively ereate a lien in limitation of the interest of the original tenant. It would operate not by force of any title to the holding created thereby but by way of estoppel. In my opinion, therefore, the holding stands free of encumbrance and the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem.

JUDGMENT.—In this case plaintiffs sued to recover money from defendant on an unstamped bond executed in their bahi. The bahi was presented in Court with the plaint and a sopy of the bahi entry. The copy was compared by the Clerk of the Court with the bahi entry and was certified by him to be a true copy.

The plaintiffs then sarried off their baki, which shortly after was stolen, as they alleged.

The defendant alleged that the bahi entry which is found to have been a bond was a forgery and that being unstamped, it was inadmissible in evidence.

The Courts below have decreed for the plaintiff and the defendant has preferred this second appeal.

The Munsif and the Appellate Court have distinguished eases in which it was held that a lost unstamped document could not be proved on payment of the stamp and penalty from the present ease on the ground that, in these eases the document was lost prior to the institution of the suit, whereas in this ease the document was produced in Court. The learned District Judge writes: "It appears to me that its production suffices to render the document admissible in evidence, even though the penalty had not been paid at the time it was lost."

that a document needs only to be produced to be admissible in evidence; if that were correct, every document produced would be admissible. Section 35 of the Stamp Act prohibits the admission in evidence of any unstamped document and the proviso sets forth the conditions on which a defective document may be admitted, but it does not cover the case of a copy of a document and further enjoins that no document can be admitted till after payment of the duty and penalty.

A elerk cannot admit a document in evidence; that is a task reserved for the Court, and up to the date of the disappearance of the bahi no such order of admission had been passed by the Trial Court. Hence, I hold that there is no legal authority for admitting the copy of the bahi entry as secondary evidence on payment of duty and penalty at a time when the original was not before the Court.

The next question is, whether secondary evidence can be given of the baki entry, and here I must hold that, where the primary evidence is inadmissible, secondary evidence of that primary evidence can be in no better position, cf. Kallu v. Halki (1), for all that the secondary evidence could show was that the primary evidence was inadmissible, being unstamped. In this case it is admitted that the primary evidence was unstamped.

Section 65 of the Evidence Act states that any secondary evidence may be given that a document is lost, but that secondary evidence would include evidence that the primary evidence was unstamped and, therefore, could not be acted upor, cf. section 35 of the Stamp Act.

In this view I am confirmed by Sennandan v. Kollakiran (2) and Kopasan v. Shamu (3).

For these reasons, I must accept this appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit, but as the circumstances of the case are so peculiar, I direct that parties beer their own costs throughout.

Compromise - Minors - Procedure - Privy Council Appeal.

In Privy Council appeals where it is desired to bind persons under disability by a compromise, it is of the utmost importance that there should be clear expression of opinion by the proper court in India that such compromise is a beneficial one for those persons. [p 150, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMISTER.—Their Lordships are unable to entertain this petition and regret that a procedure should have been adopted by the High Court which will delay the ultimate judgment and increase the expense. In truth, their Lordships are not in a position to decide whether the terms.

of compromise which they are asked to sanction are beneficial to the parties who are under a disability, nor can Counsel who appeared before them give them the requisite assurance that they have been able to investigate all material matters, and that the Board can safely act in making the desired order. All such questions are essentially and necessarily the proper subject for consideration of the Courts in India, who are in a position to institute the enquiries, to ask the questions, and to obtain the information which must always be required before sanctioning proceedings on behalf of people who are unable to assent for themselves. In rare eases it may be possible that this sould be done here, and in their Lordships' desire to avoid the multiplication or prolongation of proseedings, they may occasionally assept the burden, as was done in the case of Bakinabai v. Shirinibai (1), but this is not the regular and usual course, and in this case they are unable to adopt it. In all cases where it is desired to bind persons under disability by a compromise, it is of the utmost importance that there should be a elear expression of opinion by the proper Court in India that such compromise is a beneficial one for those presons.

The petition must stand over until the proper certificate has been obtained from the High Court.

Hindu Law-Joint family-Debt incurred by manager for benefit of family, nature of-Contract Act (IX of 1872); s. 25-Promise by junior member to pay, whether enforceable-Promissory-note-Barred debt-Liability.

In the case of a joint Hindu family, the debts contracted by the managing member for the joint family are binding on the joint family, but in enforcing the debt the liability of the members of the family is not personal, the liability being limited to the extent of the joint family property in which they are interested. [p. 160, col ?.]

D. and his sons, F. and H, constituted a Hindu joint family: D. borrowed money from the plaintiff for the family: On 11th September 1207 a balance was struck and acknowledged by D. Dealings with the plaintiff went on and on 16th September 1910, during the absence of D., F. and his mother, in order to save the bar of limitation, signed an acknowledgment of the debt in the plaintiff's account book. The dealings with the plaintiff continued and on 14th September 1913 accounts were settled and F. and his mother, during the absence of D., signed a promise to pay the amount due. Plaintiff brought the present suit to recover on the said promise:

Held, that as the debt contracted by D. for the joint family was a debt due by the members of the family within the meaning of section 25 of the Contract Act, the promise signed by F. and his mother undertaking to pay the debt was binding on them, and they were liable. [p. 160, col. 1.]

When a promissory-note is executed in respect of transactions which have gone on for some years, and the items consist of advances which would be barred and of subsequent dealings, the settlement cannot be impeached as to the items which, but for the settlement, would be barred, so long as there is no fraud or mistake. [p. 161, col. 1.]

Second appeal preferred against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 473 of 1919, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Palghat, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1919 (Original Suit No. 369 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Palghat).

ments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance, and the material papers in the suit, and upon bearing the arguments of Mr. O. V. Anantakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Bastri, for the second and third Respondents, and of Mr. O. V. Mahadeva Aiyer, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3, and the fourth respondent not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 19th of angest 1921, the Court (Krishnan and Odgers, JJ.,) delivered the following

JUDGMENT. KRISHNAN, J.—The two asknowledgments made by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the account book, Exhibit B, are of no avail to save limitation against the joint family or against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, who were no parties to those asknowledgments. The District Judge has found on the evidence in this case that defendant No. 3, the father and managing member of the family, never ceased to be the manager, and never authorised aDy one to act for him to manage and never held out any one as acting for him. This is a finding of fact which, I think, we must accept in second appeal. It was, however, contended that, even apart from any authority given by the third defendant, his son, the first defendant, was entitled under the Hindu Law to set as the manager of the family in the absence of his father in Borma and elsewhere. For this position, reliance was placed on the ruling in Mudit Narayan Singh v. Ranglal Singh (1) and on the texts cited therein, particularly on that of Harita. The ruling itself is not applicable, as in that case it was found that the younger member had been put forward by his elders as the managing member. The text of Herita so far as it is relevant here (as translated by Setlur), says that if he (the manager) is remotely absent, the eldest son may manage the affairs of the family. See The words remotely Setlur, page 217 absent" are vague in their import, and I think they cannot be construed so as to scope the case of a bring within their manager who, though absent from his home, was in correspondence with the junior members and was controlling the management, as the District Judge finds was the case here. No reliance was placed on this text in the lower Courts, and, therefore, the question has not been properly threshed out on fact; it is, therefore, sufficient to say that plaintiff has not proved that the first defendant, the eldest son, had authority under the Hindu Law to bind the family by his acknowledgments.

The question still remains how far defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are liable on their promise to pay the amount due on 14th September 1913. I think they are liable. It is conceded the words used therein clearly amount to a promissory note, for they say "we have hereby promised on signing this to give on demand Ra. 1,577.4.5, the balance amount, with interest at Re. I per cent. from this day" and so on. Viewing this dosument as a promissory-note, the executants of it must be held to be liable on it unless they prove that there was no consideration for it. This question should not be confused with the other question how far it was a valid acknowledgment against the family; I have already held that it was not, as the signatories were not authorised agents of the family to asknowledge. Taking it as a promissory-note, does the evidence here establish that there was no consideration for it? The amount mentioned in it no doubt includes the sum of Rs. 1,0:4 5 6 and interest due by the father to the plaintiff on assount of his dealings on behalf of the family and asknowledged by him to be sorrest in Exhibit A on 16th September 19 7, or as much of it as has not been paid off. The dealings were subsequently earried on by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, professedly, no doubt, on behalf of the family and for themselves, for the account was changed into the names of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in the plaintiff's books. It is the result of these dealings, taken with previous debt that amounted to Rs. 1,577 and odd included in the promissory note. Out of that sum, it is clear that both the defendants were personally liable for the items on the debit side in the account after the 16th September 1907, when the father ceased to have dealings and they began the dealings; the credit items would be taken towards the old debt. The amount of it has not been ascertained, but it is apparently not very large. Though defendants Nos. 1 and 2 acted on behalf of the family in entering into those dealings, they would become personally liable for the amount, on the finding that the family was not liable as they had no power to act on its behalf. The bulk of the amount included in the promissory note was no doubt the old debt that the father incurred, with interest added to it as appears from the account. For that portion of the note first defendant was not amount, though originally personally liable and second defendant was not liable at all, the whole of it was admittedly binding on the family property including the first defendant's share in it; in other words, it was a debt realisable from first defendant's joint property. The note being executed thus for a sum partly realisable from his property and partly from his person, it seems to me there is full sonsideration for it so far as the let defendant is concerned. Even if we suppose the original family debt was not saved from limitation even as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by their asknowledgment of September 1910, the note would still be saved from being void against him under section 25 of the Contract Act, both because his personal liability for his own dealings as to which there is proper consideration remains unaffected by limitation and also because under section 25, clause (3), an agreement to pay a time barred det tie sufficient to constitute a contract. It was argued that the liability of a member of a joint family to have his joint property sold for a debt contracted by the manager for a joint family purpose and binding on the joint family property is not an obligation that can be described as a debt within the meaning of section 25. authority has been sited to support this argument. No doubt it was ruled in Norayana Ohettiar v. Feerappa Ohettiar (1), that a son was not "jointly bound" with his father within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Law of Singapore; but that is not the question here at all. The question here is whether a liability to have one's joint property sold for a sum due is not a debt within the meaning of section 25, slause (3). I am inclined to think it is.

The word 'debt" does not necessarily imply an obligation created by the debtor himself, as argued by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri; we have decree debts imposed by Courts, for example. Debt is defined as "a sum payable in respect of a liquidated money demand, recoverable by action." See Stroud's Judicial Dictionary on page 471, 2nd Edition, and the eases eited there, On this view there is no doubt that there was consideration for the promissory-note, and it is enforceable against the first defendant. It is then equally enforceable against the second defendant, the other executant of it, as it is not necessary in law that consideration should move to each executant separately to make the note binding on him or her. It is sufficient if there was consideration for the instrument as a whole, for it to be enforceable against all executants. Furthermore, in this case there was some consideration moving to the second defendant herself for the note, viz, the amount due by her on the joint dealings of herself and her son after 1907; and inade. quasy of consideration is not a ground for avoiding a contract; vide Explanation II of section 25 of the Contract Act.

I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the second appeal with costs as regards defendants Nos. 3 and 4, but allow the appeal and restore the Munsit's decree as regards defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

ODGERS, J .- This is a suit to recover money due on an account. The third defendant is the father of first and fourth defendants, and the manager of a Mitakshara joint Hindu family consisting of first and fourth defend. ants and bimself. The second defendant is bis wife, and mother of first and fourth defendants. The father, (third defendant), had idenred debts for family necessity to plaintiff. He served a period of over three years' imprisonment from 903 or 1:04. The dealings began in 1901. On 16th September 1:07, while third defendant was in jail, accounts were adjusted and balance struck by third defendant and plaintiff and acknowledged by the former (Exhibit A). Subsequently, third defendant was released from jail, but did not return to his family; it appears that he was living in Rangoon. On loth Septem. ber 1910, second defendant and her son, first defendant, who had just then

"Since the bar of limitation is approaching, etc."

Subsequently, on 14th September 1913, the same two persons executed a promissory-note to plaintiff in the following terms: "We have hereby, etc." Two questions have been argued, (1) Do the above operate as valid asknowledgments in order to save limitation against defendant No. 3 as manager of the family? (2) Do the above operate in any event against defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 1 personally?

As to (1), reliance is first placed on a text of Harita (Setlar, page 217), where it is said: "But if he (eldest member) be decay. ed, remotely absent or afflicted with disease, let the eldest son manage the affairs as he pleases." Also on Mudit Narayana Singh v. Ranglal Singh (1), where it was decided "that a younger member of a Mitakshara family may deal with family property for family necessitry, whenever he is put forward to the outside world by the elder members as the managing member." The ficding of the lower Appellate Court is that defendant No. 3 never ceased at any time to be manager, and this finding is based on a voluminous correspondence earried between the defendants with regard family affairs while defendant No. 3 was absent. It is difficult to see how third defendant's absence in Rangoon can justly be said to make him "remotely absent" in modern days with all the conveniences of modern communication. It is equally difficult to see how defendant No. I was ever put forward to the outside world as managing member. I agree with the District Judge that mere payment of rents by defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 is insufficient to show this.

Farther, in Patil Hari Premji v. Hakamchand (3), it is laid down that temporary absence of the father conferred no legal authority on the son, if not authorised by the father, but assuming to ast for him. The words in Exhibit B, "as per the instructions of the said Anantarama Patter (defendant No. 3) and ourselves" are insufficient to import either of these elements as they refer to the "amount expended by you (i.e., plaintiff) for our family necessities." It is further elear that, under no circumstances, could the wife, defendant No. 2, have any authority or power to act as manager so as to bind the joint family after her sop, defendant No. 1, had attained his majority.

I am, therefore, of opinion that neither defendant No. 1 nor defendant No. 2 had any power or authority from defendant No. 3 to ast as managers of the family, nor did defendant No. 3 ever cease to be the manager.

As to their personal liability, I must differ with reluctance from my learned brother. Reliance is placed on the fact that new items of eredit and debit appear in the accounts signed by defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2. The accounts settled by defendant No. 3 in 1907 was admittedly an account binding on the family for supplies for family purposes. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the new items of debit were of the same nature. In my opinion there was no extinction of the old debt and a novatio by which the plaintiff undertook to look to the credit of defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 1 alone. The assumt stood in the name of defendant No. 3 alone up to 1911, and plaintiff's case has always been that the debt is binding on the family. Defendant No. 2 was, as stated, not authorised either in law or in fact to bind the family; it seems, therefore, that there was no consideration for her signatures in Exhibit B, and the fact that the second signature was to a promissory-note would make no difference, considering the nature of the debt (which was not hers) and for which she was in no way personally liable, nor could she make herself so liable. As to defendant No. 1, is he a debtor within the meaning of sestions 19 and 21 of the Limitation Asi? If he had no authority to act as manager for his father, an I found above, he cannot be a duly authorised agent to sign for him as such [Of. Lachhmi Narain v. Daya Shankar (+)]. Farther, according to Narayana Chelliar v. Veerappa Ohettiar (2) a Hindu son is not jointly bound with his father to pay debts contractd by the father. For the reasons stated, the debts which defendant No. I bound himself to pay were the debts of the father contracted by the father.

The debts were not the debts of defendant No. 1. Further, the case does not fall within section 25 (3), Contract Act, as the son was not generally or specially authorised to sign for his father. For these reasons, I em of opinion that neither defendant No. 2 nor defendant No. 1 is personally liable.

On both the grounds raised in this second appeal, in my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

By THE COURT.—As we have differed in our opinion on the questions whether there was consideration in law for the promissory-note of date 14th September 1913 and executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and whether it is binding on those defendants, we refer those questions under section 98, Civil Procedure Code, clause (2), proviso, for the opinion of a third Judge. The case will thereafter be posted again before us.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 22nd September 1921, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 13th of October 1921, the Court (Kumaraswami Sastri, J.,) expressed the following

This second appeal comes before me owing to a difference of opinion between Krishnan and Odgers, JJ., as to whether there was consideration in law for the promissory note dated the 14th of September 1913, execut ed by the first and second defendants, and whether it is binding on those defendants.

The plaintiff is the brother of the second defendant. The second defendant is the mother of the first defendant. The third defendant is the father and the fourth defendant is another brother, who is a minor. It is admitted that defendant Nos. I to 4 are members of a joint Hindu family. There were dealings originally between the plaintiff tember 1907, when third defendant was in jail, there was a settlement of assounts at which a sum of Rs. 1,084.5.6 was found due by third defendant, and the third defend. ant affixed his signature to the duly stamped settlement askowledging the amount to be due. Dealings went on subsequently, the heading of the account being "O. V. Anantarama Pattar's (third defendant's) credit and debit account." In 1910, as the claim was about to be barred, the following entry was made in the account-book on the 16th September 1910. "Since the bar of limitation is approaching, the said amount which was expended by you as per the instructions of the said Anantarama Patter and ourselves for our family necesities and since the said Apantarama Pattar is absent from here, we hereby admit the said amount which we owe you as per this account." This is signed by the first and second defendants. The dealings continued. They were mostly entries of rescipts of paddy from the the land, and small sums were also entered on the debit side. On the 14th of September 1913 assounts were settled and a sum of Rs. 1,577-4-5 was found due and the following entry was signed in the plaintiff's assount-books by the first and second defendants." We have hereby promised, on signing this, to give on demand Rs. 1,577 4-5, the balance amount, with interest thereon at Rupee one per cent. from this date, due to you from us after adjusting the credit and debit account as per account executed by us on 16th September 1910, together with interest from 1st Kanni 1086 till date for the amount expended by you as per the instructions of my father Anantarama Pattar and ourselves for our family necessities." In the account book Exhibit O, the heading is: " Accounts concerning Anantarama Pattar, son of Venkatarama Pattar, wife Lakshmi alias Ammu Ammal, and son Visvanatha Pattar."

and the third defendant. On the loth of Sep.

Both the learned Judges who heard the second appeal are of opinion that, so far as the second acknowledgment of liability of the 16th of September 1910 is concerned, it does not save limitation as it was not proved that the first and second defendants had any authority to acknowledge the debt as the father was the managing member of the family. The question, however, remains as to the liability on the promissory-note, dated the 14th of September 19 3. Krishnan, J., was of opinion that it was open to the 1st defendant to promise to pay a barred debt and that there was consideration for the note. Odgers, J., was of opinion that the debt was not a debt of the first defendant but that of the father which had become barred and that there was no consideration for the note.

It is clear from the facts of the case that the defendants are members of an undivided family of which the father was the managing member. So far as the transactions are concerned, it is equally clear --- and it is not disputed before me -- that the debts were contracted for the benefit of the joint family and would be binding on the joint family properties. The first question is, whether in the case of a joint family, the debts contracted by the managing member for the joint family can be said to be debts due by the other members of the family within the meaning of section 25 of the Indian Contract Act, which runs as follows :- " An agreement made without consideration is void, unless..... it is a promise, made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorised in that behalf, to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits." So far as the liability of the members of a joint family for the debts contrasted by the managing members is conserned, I think it is clear that the debt is binding on them although in the enforcing of that debt they would not be personally liable. but only liable to the extent of the joint family properties in which they are interested. In Ohalamayya v. Varadayya (5) Sabramania Aiyar, J., after referring to eases where the other co-pareeners were parties to the contract or had agreed to be bound by it or had ratified it, observed : "When, however, such is not the case, but the contract is of a character such, as, under the law, to entitle the manager to enter into independently of the consent of the other members of the family, so as to bind them thereby, then it is clear that the scope of the manager's power is restricted to, and does not extend beyond the family pronarty." I may also refer to t'e feeisi in in Official Assignes of Mairis v. alani:ppa Ohetty (6) as to the liability of the members of a joint family. In such cases it is open to the ereditor to sue all the co-parceners, and each of the co-parceners, will be liable to pay the debt subject to the limitation that payment can be enforced only by having recourse to the joint family properties. A debt is none-the-less a debt because the remedies open to the creditor are circamscribed by the joint family assets can find no authority for the vew that the debt contemplated by section 25 of the Contract Act is a debt which can be enforced against the person and properties of the debtor. The test is, whether at the time the promise to pay is made the person making the promise could have been sued for the resovery of the debt but for the law of Limitation, however eireamseribed the remedies for the resovery of the debt in execution may be, owing to the personal law governing the debtor.

Reliance was placed by Mr. Venkstarama Sastri on Narayona Chettiar v. Veerappa Chettiar (2) where it was held that a son was not 'jointly bound' with his father to pay his debts within the meaning of clause (4), section 30 of the Bankruptey Ordi-S.raits Settlements The turned on Danee. question pious duty of the son to discharge his father's debts not illegal or immoral, and the learned Judges observed: "This liability as now developed is certainly not a joint liability, nor a joint and several liability understood in ordinarily Law; in fact, it is difficult to bring it under any particular legal eategory of the English Law." The facts of the present case are different. The debts were contracted for family necessity and benefit, and the claim is based not merely on the pions duty of the son to pay his father's debts not illegal or immoral, but on family necessity and benefit enjoyed by the members of the family.

KANSHI BAM U. SHABP DIN.

So far as the first defendant is concerned, I am of opinion that the note is binding on him. As regards the second defendant, his mother, it is argued that when she signed the promissory-note the whole of the sum of Rs. 1,230 found due at the settlement of 1910 was barred by limitation, and that as regards the subsequent items they consist of a few items of debit and moet. ly of items of credit from the income of the second defendant's lands, and that the credits are far in excess of the debits. This leaves her indebtedness prastically the same as that of the previous settlement, the increase being due to interest. I have already given my reasons for holding that the first defendant is liable, and it appears, both from the settlement of 1910 and 1913, that the second defendant was aware of the dealings and requested plaintiff to make the ad-The extent of the debits and eredits subsequent to the settlement of 1910 is immaterial. It is not necessary that eash of the executants of a promissory. note should ressive the consideration. When a promissory note is executed in respect of transactions which have gone on for some years and the items consist of advances which would be barred, and of subsequent dealings, I do not think the settlement ean be impeached as to the items which would but for the settlement be barred, so long as there is no fraud or mistake. The statement in the promissory note is that the loans were made at the request of the second defendant, and she has not ventured to give evidence. Having regard to the fast that she owns lands which were managed by the plaintiff, the probabilities are that her signature to the pronote and settlement was not taken as a mere matter of form, but that the plaintiff would not have made the advances but for her joining in the settlement. opinion that the note is binding on her.

In the result, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by Krishnan, J., that the note is binding on the first and second defendant.

This second appeal came on for hearing after the expression of the opinion of the Third Judge in pursuance of the Order of Reference of this Court, dated 19th August 1921, the Court delivered the following Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Temporary injunction, when to be granted—Balance of convenience.

The granting of a temporary injunction is a matter of discretion, albeit a judicial discretion. One of the principles the Court has to bear in mind is that it must first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties and then, on which side, in the event of success, the balance of incovenience will lie if the injunction does not issue The real point is not how the question should be decided at the hearing of the case, but whether there is a substantial question to be investigated and whether matters should not be preserved in status que until that question can be finally decided. [p 162, cols. 1 & 2.]

Defendant obtained a decree for possession of a house. The execution of that decree was resisted by the plaintiff who objected that the house belonged to him. His objection was dismissed and he filed a suit for a declaration of his title. He also prayed for the issue of a temporary injunction prohibiting the execution of the decree for possession pending the decision of the suit:

Held, that if the plaintiff was evicted from the house, the suit for declaration, as framed, would probably be thrown out and that, therefore, the balance of convenience was in favour of the plaintiff, and that the injunction prayed for should be granted.

JUDGMENT.—Kanebi Ram Ram Das obtained a decree for possession of a house by the ejectment of Nur Din who was defendant in the case. The decree was granted on 14th August 1919 and in dre ecurse the deeree bolders sought to obtain execution of their decree. One Sharif Din resisted execution and on 30th August 1920. the Executing Court directed the issue of a warrant for possession of the bruse in favour of Kanshi Ram-Ram Das. On 14th Sharif Din instituted a October 1920 euit against Karshi Ram-Ram Das for a declaration to the effect that he could not be evieted in excention of the decree pasted against Nor Din. On the same date he asked for the issue of a tomparary injunction prohibiting the execution of the deeree for possession pending the decision of the case. This temporary injunction was granted on 29th March 1921 on the ground that the object of the suit would be defeated if Sharif Din were evisted in the execution proceedings. Against the issue of this temporary injunction Karshi Ram-Ram Das have preferred this appeal through Mr. Hokam (band Mehra and I have beard Mr. Behari Lal for Sharif Lin. The grounds of appeal were drafted, or at any rate signed, by Mr. Lal Chand Mebra. Mr. Hckam Chand has studiouely refrained from urging any of them, although I specifically asked him to address me in their support. I can only conslude that he does not press them. He has urged that the order complained of is not based on any law and, further, that the decree had already been executed in part, Sharif Din being in actual possession of only two kothris in the house, as I understand the case. Sharif Din claims to be in poecession of the bonce in sait as owner. There is . then a dispute as to ownership, both sides elaiming that the house belongs to them. If, in exception of the decree against Nor Din, Sharif Din is evicted be would have to sue for possession and thus bis deelaratory suit would be defeated.

The cuenting of a temporary injunction is a matter of discretice, altest a judicial discretice. One of the principles the Court has to tear in mind is that it must first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties and then, on which side, in the event of success, the balance of inconvenience will lie if the injunction does not issue.

It was held in Israii v. Samset Ranman (1) that the real point is not how the question should be decided at the hearing of the case, but whother there is a substantial question to be investigated and whether matters should not be preserved in statu quo until that question can be finally decided. In the present case there appears to be enbetantial question to be investigated, vie., whether the plaintiff is the owner of the house in question. That the plaintiff is in possession of at least part of the house is practicelly admitted. If, in exeout on of the decree against Nor Din, Sharif Din is now evicted the present suit as framed would, in all probability, be thrown out The balance of inconvenience, therefore, would lie on Sharif Din if the injunction were not issued and this appears to have been the view of the Court below though somewhat inadequately expressed in the order. I cannot see that any case has been made out for interference and I accordingly dismiss this appeal. Coets in this Court will follow the event.

Rent-Construction-Shebait's powers-Long lapse of time Presumption of validity-Parties, duty of, to define exact terms of dispute.

A lease of 5½ acres of land was evidenced by a rent-note of 1×24, which provided for the payment of Rs. 40 a year as rent and if the rent was not paid, the lessee was to be at liberty to remove the structures which he might have placed upon the property. The lessee sub-let the property in 1872, 1883 and 1900 and the lessors never raised any objection:

Held, that the lease was a permanent lease which could only be terminated by non-payment of rent.

The disability of a shebait of a Hindu deity to make a permanent grant of endowed property is not absolute. [p. 165, col 2]

Although the manager of a temple property for the time being has no power to make a permanent alienation of the property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet, if there is a long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity, that is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power. [p. 165, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a lease made by a grantee of property for a deity is questioned after 1011 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, the assumption is, on the principle of securing as far as possible quiet possession to people who are in apparent lawful holding of an estate, that the grant was lawfully and not unlawfully made. [p. 165, col. 2; p. 166, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Bombay High Court, affirming that of the District Judge at Abmedabad, which reversed a decree of the Additional Sabordinate Judge at Ahmedabad.

FACTS.—The suit was instituted by the appellant to recover possession of sertain lands from the respondents as tenants from year to year. The respondents slaimed to hold under a permanent lease. The facts are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The Trial Judge decreed the claim. The District Judge dismissed the claim on the ground that the respondents held under a permanent lease. The High Court affirmed the decree of the District Judge holding that there was no question of law to be made the subject of a second appeal.

MAGNIRAM SITARAM C. KASTUBBHAI MANIBHAI.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships have some to a clear opinion upon the merits of this appeal, and as it relates to the possession of land, they will not reserve the expression of the advice that they will tender to His Majesty.

The appellant is seeking to obtain posses. sion of a piece of land some 51 acres in extent, that is situated near the Delhi Gate of the City of Ahmedabad. That the respondents are in possession by themselves or their tenants is not in dispute; it is indeed the foundation of the appellant's elaim for the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen were instituted by the appellant as plaintiff elaiming to recover possession of the property upon the ground that the only right of the respondents is as tenants from year to year, a tenancy which had been duly determined by notice, or, in the alternative, that the conduct of the respondents rendered it unnecessary that the appellant should take any further steps to secure its determination.

The land in question was granted on the 17th June 1756 to one Sultansingh Marajji for the deity of Shri Ranchhodji; in other words, the grant was a grant to a named person for a defined religious purpose.

On the 2nd February 1824 this land was dealt with by way of lease; the document recording the transaction takes the form of a recognition by the tenant of the rights that have been granted and its informality is largely responsible for this dispute. It states that it is a rent-note given to the wife of Sultansingh Marajji, the grantee, under the original grant; that the tenant has taken the field and well for making a garden, and that in respect thereof Rs. 40 a year is to be paid. There then follows an important provision. The money is to be paid, not to the lady who made the grant, but to the Sadho, who performed the worship at the temple of the deity, and the explanation of that is to be found in later clauses of the deed, by which it appears that one Bawa Kisan. das, who had undoubtedly some official capacity in connection with the temple. had borrowed money from the lessee, and that being amount of loan Rs. 95, the lease provides for its liquidation by the lessee retaining Re. 10 a year until the discharge took place. There is also a provision that if the rent is not paid, the lessee should be at liberty to remove the structures which he may have placed upon the property and the trees and seeds. Their Lordships think this means that, in the event of the rent not being paid, re-entry will be possible, and that if re-entry is attempted the structures which the permanent lessee has erected may be removed by him. There are no words whatever in the dooument that suggest any other right of reentry on the part of the lessors, nor is there anything in the actual language that gives much assistance in determining what the effect of the document might be. It has been argued that the object of taking the lease, which is said to be the making of a "Wadibag," renders some assistance, as the meaning of Wadibag is a garden, which it was intended to nee for the purpose of adding thereto a house, and that, in consequence, the grant was for building purposes. Their Lordships cannot, however, find anything that will give them any material assistance in this or any of the descriptive words. All that can be said is that there are two constructions, and no third, to which the document lends itself; the one that the tenancy recognised was a tenancy from year to year; the other that it was a permanent lease, which could only be terminated by non payment of rent. After this lesse had been granted, certain buildings were undoubtedly erected upon the land. What the nature of those buildings may be it is not easy to determine, and it appears that, whatever they were, they have been allowed to fall into disrepair. Their Lord. ships do not think that the respondents ean gain much assistance from inviting attention to the actual structures that exist upon the property as it stands now. Certainly, no case can be established that would stop the lessors from asserting their right to possession, if, under the terms of the document as construed by the circumstances known, that right exists, The evidence is unvarying to this effect—that from 1825 down to the time when this have been in dispute arose, the tenants possession of continued and undisturbed this land at the original rent, and that there is no case made of any act done or any document signed which suggests that during the whole of that period either one party or the other regarded the right of the respondents as anything short of permanent. There is, indeed, both in 1829 and in a reseipt for rent as late as 1906, the use of the word "Sadarmat," which has satisfied the learned Judges in the Court below that the tenure was intended to be permanent. It is a matter of extreme difficulty for their Lordships here to give with confidence desisions as to the exact meaning of words in a language with which they are unfamiliar, and they always place the greatest reliance upon the learned Judges in India for the purposes of affording them an exact and accurate interpretation of any word that may be in dispute. They do not, however, in this case, intend to rest their opinion upon the use of this particular word. It may have been accidental, it is certainly not conclusive.

Apart from any inference due to the use of this word, their Lordships think that the terms of the document which, as pointed cat by the learned District Judge, may not be satisfied if the tenarcy were one from year to year, coupled with the fact that notwithstanding the low rent, which was never changed, the property has been in fast dealt with by the lessees on three separate cassions, in 1872, in 1883, and in 1900, by being sub-leased for substantial periods of years at increased rente, a circumstance which it is not upreascuable to assume must bave come to the knowledge of the lessors at some time or another, and that no dispute has arisen as to their right to make such grants or to remain in occupation until the present time, is sufficient to justify them in saying that the memorandum signed on the 2nd February 1824 was intended to record a transaction by which a permanent right to ceeupy was conferred upon the respondent's predecessors-in title. With regard to the litigation that took place in 1893 for the purpose of partitioning the lessees' interest, it is only necessary to eay that having examined all the details which are most earefully investigated by Mr. Mobile, the Additional First Class Subordinate Judge, by whom this care was originally heard, their Lordships agree with him and the learned District Judge in appeal that nothing was then decided which bars the present litigation or prevents the defendants from asserting their rights.

It is, however, further nrged on behalf of the appellant that if such be the meaning of the document, effect cannot be given to it because the property dealt with was property devoted to religious purposes, so that the power of leasing would not extend beyond the granting of a lease for the life of the head of the religious charity, whoever it might be, for the time being. There is no doubt great force in that argument, but it is subject to two defects. The first is, that it certainly is not plain that the original lease in 1824 was made by anybody in the position of a shebait at all, because, the note ie given to the widow of the original grantee, and although it might have been fair to assume that the original grantee was intended to hold as a shebait, even if the widow could hold the office, it was not in virtue of that espacity that she granted the lease. Further, the disability of a shebait to make a permanent grant is not absolute.

In the case of Chockalingam Pillai v. Mayandi Ohettiar (8) it was pointed out that, although the manager for the time being had no power to make a permanent alieration of temple property in the absence of proved necessity for the alienation, yet the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity is a circumstance which enables the Court to assume that the original grant was made in exercise of that extended power. Their Lordships have no hesitation in applying that doetrine to the present case. If in fact the grant was made by a person who possessed the limited power of dealing under which a thebait holds lands devoted to the purposes of religious worship, yet none-the-less there is attached to the office in special and unusual sircumstances, the power of making a wider grant than one which enures only for his life. At the lapse of 100 years, when every party to the original transaction has passed away, and it becomes completely impossible to ascertain what were the circumstances which caused the original grant to be made, it is only following the policy which the Courts always adopt, of scouring as far as possible, quiet possession to people who are in apparent lawful holding of an estate, to assume that the grant was lawful y and not unlawfully made.

Their Lordshipe, therefore, bold that on both the grounds that have been mentioned this appeal must fail, and they have only to add that if in truth the real somplaint that the appellant desired to bring forward was a complaint based upon the limited power of the original granter, such a case ought to have been carefully stated in the original plaint, and certainly urged before the High Court as a stista tial reason why leave to appeal should have been granted. absence of this circumstance has not had any influence upon their Lordships' conclusion. They only refer to the matter for the purpose of attempting once more to call the attention of parties in India to the importance of defining at the earliest moment and in the simplest terms, the exact character and extent of the dispute which is going to be made the subject of litigation through the various Courts, and upon which this Tribunal ultimately advises.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with gosts.

JUDGMENT.-The appellants are proprietors and the respondents are ocsupancy tenants of the village of Barons. The respondents in 1908 obtained in the Chief Court a decree which permanently restrained the appellants from in erfering with the respondents' grezing rights in certain land in the village. No steps were taken in execution of the decree till 1919 when the decree holders applied for execution and were opposed on the ground that the applieation was time barred. The First Court, relying on Ram Saran v. Chatar Singh (1), held that there was no limitation for executing a decree for an injunction. The learned District Judge on appeal held that though it might not perhaps be technic. ally correct to say that there was no limita. tion, a Court could at any time take proceedings for contempt against a person disobeying an injunction. So the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal.

On behalf of the appellants it is urged in this Court that the Allahabed raling relied on by the lower Courts is not good law and my attention is invited to Such: Praud v. A nar Nath Rai (2). Tast jadgmest, however, was not decided on the question of limitation. As regards limitation the judgment merely points out that the Madras High Court has taken a somewhat different view to that of the Allahabad High Court, bat no opinion what. ever is expressed as to which of the two views is the correct one. The appellants' Counsel pextrefers me to Venkatachallam Chetty v. Veerappa Pillas (3). This ruling, Lowever, ssems to be in favour of the respondents, for it lays down that when a perpotual injune. tion has been granted, on each successive breach of it the deeree may be enforced by an application made within three years of such breach. In the present case the landlord has, as their Counsel admits before me, been sultivating ever since the decree of the Chief Court was passed in 1908. It seems to me obvious that enlitivation of land is an infringsment of the rights of grazing, and that every successive season in which the land has been suffivated has been the ossasion of a fresh breach of the injunction. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the lower Courts holding the application to be not barred by limitation is sorrest. I would note that the Allahabad raling relied on by the lower Courts has also been followed in a later ruling of the same Court, namely, Bhagwan Das v. Su'idei (4).

Limitation is the only point which has been urged before me in this appeal.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil revision from an order of Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appli-

Mr. Uma Shankar Baipai, for the Opposite

Party. JUDGMENT,-This is an application in revision against an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore rejecting an application to have a suit restored, which had been dismissed for non appearance on the part of the plaintiff when the suit was called on for hearing. The facts alleged by the plaintiff have not been controverted, either by affidavit of the oppossite party, or by anything placed on record by the presiding Judge himself. I am entitled, therefore, to assume that those facts are admitted. The in question was down for hearing on the 3rd of March 1921. The plaintiff was personally present in Court up to 5 P. M. At that hour the Court was still engaged in hearing some other suit. The plaintiff's Pleader same round to the Court room and some conversation took place between them, as a result of which both the plaintiff and his Pleader left the Court. The suit was subsequently salled on. I from the record that the defendant was present, although the plaintiff was not. and, after recording the defendant's denial of the claim, the Court dismissed the suit. When the plaintiff applied for restoration, setting forth the fasts above stated, the Court passed an order the effect of which is that the plaintiff was to blame for leaving the Court-room while he knew that the Court was still sitting, and on this ground alone the application for re-hearing was rejected. This Court has issued a rule binding on subordinate Courts which lava down that the ordinary hours for the attendance in the Court bailding of Judges presiding in Civil Courts for judicial work shall be from 10-30 a. m to 4 P. M. and these ELUMALAI CHETTY O. BALAKRISHNA MUDILIAR.

hours shall not be altered except under special canction granted by the High Court. No doubt, it was never intended by this rale to fetter the discretion of subordinate Courts to an unreasonable extent. For a Court to sit after 4 P. M. for the purpose of concluding the hearing of a particular ease, when the parties are agreed that their own convenience will be suited by the Court's doing so, would sertainly not be regarded as a breach of this rule. In the present instance, however, the hearing of a fresh suit was commenced after 5 P. M. No reason has been stated for the adoption of this sourse, nor is it suggested that the learned Judge intimated in any way to the litigants present in Court that, for some special reason, he felt it incumbent upon him to sit to an unusually late hour on the day in question. The som. mensement of the hearing of a fresh suit after 5 P. M. was not only a contravention of the rule which has already been quoted, but it involved a practice which, if persisted in, would prevent the due observance of other rules and directions issued by this Court. Such, for instance, as the directions contained in the orders of January 1921 regarding the presautions to be taken against the oscurrence of fire in Court buildings. It has been suggested that, in any event, this is not a proper ease for interference by this Court in revisior, inasmuch as the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes was within his jurisdiction in determining whether or not sufficient cause had been shown by the plaintiff for his absence suit was actually called on for hearing. The question, however, in my opinion, is very distinctly one for the consideration of this Court in the exercise of the powers of superintendence given it by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Ast. If proceedings such as those now before me are upheld by this Court, in the absence of any representation as to the existence of exceptional circumstances warranting the said procedure, the practical result will be that this Court must acquiesse in the open disregard of the very proper rules which it has issued for the purpose of regulating the business of subordinate Courts. Under the circumstances of the case, this suit should. in my upinion, have been re-admitted for hearing. I am even prepared to say that the learned Judge of the Court below did. in my opinion, ast in the exercise of his jurisdiction with material irregularity where, without any previous warning to the public, and, as I must presume, in the absence of any exceptional circumstances which could be pleaded as warranting such a course, he called on this particular suit for hearing after the hour of 5 P. M.

I allow this application and, reversing the order of the Court below, direct that the suit in question be restored to the pending file of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore and set down for hearing according to law. The costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 42 of 1919, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Trivellors, in Original Suit No. 924 of 1917.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 5th of November 1920, and the Court made the following ORDER-Following the roling in Muthiah Ohesty v. Kothandaramasıvami Naidu (1) on the point, we agree with the lower Appellate Court that evidence was admissible to prove the terms of the mortgage by deposit of title-deeds aliunde, in spite of the subsequent so-called simple mortgage, and that section 91 of the Evidence Act is no bar to the reception of the evidence. It is contended, however, that the assignment to the plaintiff did not vest the mortgage as there was no registered instrument. It is suggested that the transfer was a sale within section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. We do not think that that is clear. It may be that the transfer was for collection only, in which case the decision in Cunniah v. Goral Chettiar (2) would have to be corsidered. We must, therefore, call for a finding on this point. Fresh evidence is allowed. Two months are allowed for submission of findings and ten days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the judgment herein, the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed by their Lordships to submit a finding on the following issue:—

"Whther the transfer to the plaintiff was for collection only."

This second appeal came on for final bearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, on the 24th of March 1921, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNIN, J.—The first question that arises for our decision in this second appeal is, whether an indorsee for value of a negotiable instrument, the amount of which had been seenred by a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, can claim to enforce the mortgage in the absence of a registered instrument conveying the mortgage rights to him.

A somewhat similar question arose before the learned Chief Justice and my learned brother with reference to an indorsee for collection in Ounnigh v. Gopal Chettiar (2) and was answered in the indorsee's favour. That decision, however, is not conclusive in this case as here we have an indorsee for value and the judgment of my learned brother in that case was based entirely on the fast that the indorsement was for collection; and though the learned Obief Justice makes no such distinction, my learned brother did not apparently agree with his Lordship's views. Sitting with Hagher, J., the learned Chief Justice has again stated his view in Ferumal Ammal v. Perumal Naicker (3) that, though the rule is now that a mortgage right or debt eannot be transferred without a registered instrument under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is subject to the exception that "where the law still admits of the separate transfer of the mort. gage-debt as by the indorsement of a promissory note scenred by a deposit of title. deeds or by the attachment and sale in execu. tion of a mortgage-debt ..., section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act still operates to earry the security with it." We are, of course, not concerned with Coart sales of mortgage-dobts or their effect in this case; that will be governed by the special provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The observation regarding promiseory notes is elearly an obiter dictum, if I may say to with respect; and, though the opinion of the learned Chief Justice is entitled great weight, there is no decision binding on us and we must, therefore, consider question raised before us on its the merite.

It seems to me quite clear that a mortof immoveable property is itself immoveable property under the Transfer cf Property Act, whatever the form of the mortgage may be; and the transfer of owcership of such a right falls under section 54 and will require a registered instrument for the purpose: Vide Sakhiuddin Suha v. Sonaulleh Sarkar (4) and Ferumai Ammal v. Ferumal Naicher (3). It is true that the Chief Justice sitting on the original side as Wallis, J., (as he then was) held, relying on section 8 of the Act, that the transfer of a mortgage was the transfer of the debt with its attendan securities and that registration was, therefore, unnecessary for the transfer of a mortgage. Vide Dwarka Doss Govardana Doss v. Danakoti Ammal (5). There was some earth at of opinion on the point. See Subramaniam v. Perumal Reddi (5) on one side and the opinion of Bashyam Ayyangar, J., in Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (7) and the decision of Chamier, J., (as he then was) in Mutsiddi Lal v. Muha amad Banif (8) following it, on the other side. In this conflict of views the Legislature amended the Act in 1900 and excluded mortgage debts from the category of actionable claims. The object was plainly to remove mortgage debts from the scope of section & which speaks of "debt or other actionable claim," and to make it necessary to have a registered instrument for its transfer. It was on the application of sestion 8 that it was held that the transfer of a mortgage did not require registration and with the non-applicability of the sestion resulting from the amendment one would have thought that all doubts regarding the nessessivy of having a registered instrument for the transfer of a mortgage-right in all sases would have been removed. Batthe learned Chief Jastice thinks, as stated above, that though the role is now clear with reference to mortgage dobts in general there is still an exception in favour of mor gages by deposit of title deads where promissory. notes have also been taken for the mortgage amounts. With every respect for his Lord. ship's opinion, I find it diffisult to follow it. It is clear from his judgment in the case that he would have beld that a registered instrument would be necessary to convey the mortgage rights even in a case of a mortgage by deposit of title deads if no negotiable instrument had been taken for the mortgage amount. Does the taking of the negotiable instrument make any d fference on the point? I think not, as the mortgage debt is none theless a mortgage-debt because it happens to be also a promissory note debt. If it is a mortgage-debt, sestion S cannot apply to it and the whole argument based on the section fails.

The fast that the promissory note can be transferred by endorsement, it seems to me, does not make any real difference on the acestion before us. When the note amount is so transferred, it seems to me, it is not transferred as a secured debt at all. The Negotiable Instruments Act makes no provision with reference to securities. In my view it is only if a mortgage-debt is transferred as a secured debt that it will carry the securities with it on the principle embodied in section 8, and not otherwise. Even in the case of a mortgage where there is no promissory note it cannot, I think, be said that the law does not allow the mortgagee to transfer the debt as an unscoured or simple debt without a registered instrument if he thinks fit to do so. The sesurity is for his benefit and he can give it up if he likes; and the transferee will than get the right to the debt but not to the security. Thue, as regards transferability in law as an unssoured debt, a morigage debt for which a negotiable instrument has been taken does not seem to me to differ fundamentally from one where none such has been taken. In my view, in either case, if the debt is transferred by endorsement or otherwise, without the transferer taking care to transfer the mort. gage right by a registered instrument, the debt and the security will get disassociated and the security may possibly cease

If we are to hold that the security passes by the indorsement of the promissory notes in cases of mortgages by deposit of titledeeds where notes have been taken for the mortgage amounts we must hold the same view with reference to any kind of mortgage where the mortgages happens to have taken a promisiory note for the mor gage amoun'; for the argument will be just the same. We will also have to hold that not only the first indorese but every subsequent incorsee, including even blank indorsees, will obtain the mortgage rights by indorsement unless, of course, a different intention is manifest, This view, I think, will introduce a grave uncertainty into the registration of mortgages and render the records of Registration Offices unreliable in assertaining in whom the mortgage right subsists, for the time being. Such a view, therefore, does not commend itself to me. If I am right in thinking that section 8 does not apply to mortgage-debte, there is no scope for the application of the maxim generalis specialibus non derogant. Bat if it did apply, I am inclined to think it would make section 54 of the Act override section 8 rather than the other way; for section & refers to all kinds of securities whereas section 54, so far as it is relevant, refers only to a limited class of securities, cis., mortgage scourities. See Mutsaddi Lal v. Muhummad Hanif (8) above quoted.

No valid argument can be based on the alleged anomaly of holding that the transfer of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds requires registration when the creation of it does not; for that seems clearly to be the law at any rate where there is no promissory note involved.

After eareful consideration, I have come to the conclusion, though not without hesitation, on account of the opinion of the learned Chief Justice to the contrary, that the inderses of a negotiable instrument does not get any right to the mortgage by deposit of title-deeds in his inderser's favour by the mere inder ement of the note without a registered transfer of the mortgage-rights.

On this view, it is argued that the District Munsif had no surisdiction to try the cuit as his jurisdiction was based solely on the fact that some of the lands mortgaged were within his jurisdiction. It is contended that on the finding that the mortgage-rights did not pass to the plaintiff the Court lost jurisdiction. That is not so; jurisdiction has to be judged on the averments in the plaint, nuless indeed an avernment bas been fraudulen:ly made for the express purpose of giving juradiction. There is no such allegation here. Jurisdiction does not depend upon the relief the Court finds itself able to give after trial The jurisdiction of the Court in this case is, therefore, not affected by the view I am taking; but the decree, so for as it gives relief against the property mortgeged, must be set aside.

There will be a personal decree only against defendants Nos. I and 2 for the amount found due and interest at 6 per cent, from date of suit to date of payment. The rest of the suit is dismissed. The order as to costs in the First Court will stand but the parties will bear costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

Napier, J.—I agree. I had already prior to the hearing of the case before the learned Chief Justice expressed my opinion in an unreported case. I saw no reason to alter it during the argument in that case nor do I now.

Where in respect of a document privilege is claimed under section 124 of the Evidence Act, it is for the Court to decide whether or not the document is a communication made to a public officer in official confidence. If it decides that it was so made it has no authority to compel the public officer to produce it, inasmuch as the public officer himself is the sole judge as to whether its disclosure would or would not be in the public interests. Inasmuch as a person who desires his estate to be taken over by the Court of Wards cannot be compelled under law to make a disclosure of his debts, a statement by such a person, setting forth the financial position of his estate, sent to the Collector to enable him to decide whether or not the estate should be taken over, should be regarded as a communication made to him in official confidence and he is not obliged to disclose it by reason of section 124 of the Evidence Act. Where a mortgage-deed stipulates for the payment of interest annually on a certain date, and provides that, in default of such payment in any year on the date so fixed, the mortgagee would have power to recover the amount remaining due to him from the hypothecated property, and other property of the mortgagor by bringing a suit, the period of limitation for bringing such suit commences to run from the date of the first default. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on the basis of a mortgage alleged to have been executed by one Maulvi Muhammad Ali.

This document is said to have been excented on the 19th of April 1895 in favour of one Dwarks Prasad, the father of the present plaintiff.

It is proved that Maulvi Muhammad Ali died in the month of Ostober 1898. He left his widow, Musammat Muslima Bibi, two sons, Muhammad Hasan and Muhammad Zahur, and four daughters Musammat Kulsum, Musammat Makki, Musammat Fatima and Musammat Ruqiya.

In the month of April 1908 the estate belonging to Maulvi Muhammad Ali was taken over by the Court of Wards. It court of Wards. Some of the heirs of Mahammad Ali were of full age, at the time the application was made but two of the daughters, Musammat Fatima and Musammat Ruqiya, were still minors. Musammat Kulsum, one of the daughters whose names have been mentioned, declined to join in the application.

The result of all this was that the Court of Wards took over the property of all the heirs of Muhammad Ali except Musammat Kulsum.

After the notification was issued announcing the taking over of the property by the Court of Wards, a further notice was issued under section 16 of the old Court of Wards Act, (U.P. Act III of 1899) calling on all persons who had claims against the estate of Muhammad Ali to notify them to the Collector within six months from the date of notification.

It is apparent from the record in this case that Dwarks Prasad, who is now represented by his son, made no claim in respect of the mortgage debt now in suit, within the period prescribed by the notification just mentioned. There is on the record a certain petition which appears to have been presented by Dwarks Prasad to the Collector on the 27th of April 1910 in which he asserts that he had notified his claim to the Court of Wards. There is nothing, however, in this petition to show on what date this claim of his was brought to the notice of the Court of Wards.

The suit with which we are now concerned was instituted on the 16th of April 1917, and in the plaint it was stated that the original document of mortgage was not forthcoming and that, therefore, the plaintiff was pursuing his claim on a certified copy of the document.

In this suit the defendants impleaded were (1) the Collector of Jaunpur as Manager of the Court of Wards of the estate of Maulvi Muhammad Ali and (2) and (3) the sons of Maulyi Muhammad Ali, namely, Muhammad Hasan and Muham. mad Zabur. The other heirs of Muhammad Ali whose interests in the estate bave been taken charge of by the Court of Wards-that is to say, Musammat Maslima Bibi, the widow, and the three daughters, Musimmat Makki, Musammat Fatima and Musammat Ruqiya-were not joined as defendants in the Buit.

COLLECTOR OF JAUSPUR U. JAMNA PRABAD.

The written statement on behalf of the defendants put the plaintiff to the proof that the mortgage-bond was in fact executed and there was also raised a plea of limitation. The lower Court has decreed the slaim in part, holding that the suit was not time-barred.

The issue of limitation is the most important issue in this case and we must deal with that first. We have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the Court below on this issue is not correct and that the whole suit was barred.

A translation of the mortgage deed is to be found at pages 7 and 8 of the respondents' book. From this it appears that the mortgage-deed purports to have been executed on the 19th of Aprli 1895 to secure a loan of Rs. 2,000. Interest on the loan was at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem, so that on the principal sum the amount of interest payable every 12 months was Rs. 240.

It is agreed in the deed that the interest is to be payable on every Jeth Puranmashi and the document contained a further stipulation that if in any year the mortgagor failed to pay interest on the date so fixed, or if he failed to pay the principal amount, by the end of ten years (namely, the period of mortgage), the ereditor was to have power to recover the amount remaining due to him. together with interest, from the hypothesated and other moveable and immoveable properties of the mortgagor by bringing a suit or in any other way he might choose. The first question we have to consider, therefore, is on what date limitation began to run. The document, as we have said, was executed in the month of April 1895 and the month of Jeth usually falls in about June. The terms of the doenment leave us in some uncertainty as to the arrangement for the payment of that portion of the interest which assrued due between the 19th of April 1895 and the first month of Jeth which fell thereafter. It is clear, of course, that the interest amounts under the deed to Rs. 240 per annum. It is also slear that the parties agreed that this sum of Rs.240 should be payable every Jeth Puranmashi, but, obviously, the sum which was payable on the first Jeth Puranmashi after the date of execution of the instrument was very much Rs. 240. We are inclined to less than hold that the document means that interest was to be payable in every Jeth and that, consequently, there was an obligation on the mortgagor to pay in the morth of Jeth, which fell about June 1885, such interest as had accrued due by that time. Thereafter, there was to be payable at each Jeth Puranmashi a sum of Rs. 240 representing the interest of 12 months. In this view, it being admitted that no interest on the debt was ever paid, there was a default about the month of June 1895. In any case it is quite clear that there was default in the month of June 1895.

On the face of it, therefore, any suit on this mortgage was time barred at the time the present case was brought into Court. We are unable to distinguish this case from the case which was before the Full Bench in Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (1). That case has been followed in another case, namely, Pancham v. Ansar Rusain (2). According to those rulings limitation in the case of a document like this begins to run from the date of the first default. The plaintiff sought, however, to avoid the bar of limitation by putting forward a document which, according to his case, amounted to an asknowledgment which. under the terms of section 19 of the Limits. tion Act, saved the claim.

The document is marked Exhibit A on the record and we have now to state how it came into Court. It was not a document which was in the plaintiff's possession at the time the suit was brought, nor indeed was any acknowledgment pleaded in the plaint by way of saving the bar of limitation.

After the suit had been instituted an application was made on behalf of the plaintiff asking the Court to direct the Collector, as Manager of the Court of Wards, to produce a number of documents out of the Court of Wards file relating to the estate of Maulvi Mohammad Ali. In accordance with the summons which was sent to him, the Collector produced in Court certain documents, but he claimed privilege for them under the provisions of section 124 of the Evidence Act on the ground that the documents contained statements which were made to him in official confidence and that he objected to produce them on the ground that their disclosure would be prejudicial to the public interest.

The learned Subordinate Judge who was in charge of the suit at this time (not the Subordinate Judge who ultimately decided the case) overruled the plea of privilege raised by the Collector and held that the documents were admissible. One of these documents, as we have said, is the statement. Exhibit A.

We had better explain at this stage what Exhibit A is. It purports to be a statement in which are set out details of the property owned by the deceased Manlvi. We find particulars of the landed property which belonged to this gaptleman, and other details relating to debts which were owing from him. There is in the dicament a statement to the effect that the mortgage now in suit had been executed by Manivi Muhammad Ali in favour of D varka Prasad. At the foot of this document there is a signature which at least one witness in the ease has identified as the signature Muhammad Hasan, the eldest son of the deceased Muhammad Ali.

Tae Coart below, therefore, finding this statement and believing it to be signed by Muhammad Hasan, treated it as an asknowledgment of liability. A further question arose in this connection, namely, as to the date upon which this so called asknow. ledgment was made. There is no date apparent on the paper itself and certain other evidence bad to be relied upon for the purpose of showing that the acknowledg. ment was made within limitation, that is to say, made prior to the month of June 1938 at the very latest. Some evidence was forthcoming to show that certain information had been called for by the Collector before this estate was taken over by the Court of Wards, and the first notifieation appounding the taking over by the Court of Wards appeared in the Gazatte of the 10th April 1:08. It was, therefore, concluded that this per ioular statement, marked Exhibit A, had been prepared and sent to the Collector previous to that date.

In appeal here it has been argued that the document was inadmissible in evidence and that the Court below was wrong in overroling the plea which was put forward by the Collector under the provisions of section 124 of the Evidence Act.

After careful consideration of this argument, we think the appellant is entitled to succeed and that the opinion of the Sabordinate Julge in this matter was not correct.

In dealing with this plan the learned Subordinate Judge referred to two rulings, Venkitichella Chettiar v. Sampathu Chettiar (3) and Julobram Day v. Bulloram Day (4). On the strength of these rulings he held that statements made under process of law cannot be said to be made in official confidence within the meaning of that expression as used in session 124 of the Evidence Act.

It is quite clear on a proper construction of this section that it is for the Court to deside whether or not a particular document for which privilege is claimed is a communication made to a public officer in official confidence. If the Court decides that it was so made, then it has no authority to compel the public officer to produce it, for, according to the section, the public officer himself is the sole judge as to whether its disclosure would or would not be in the public interests.

The two cases upon which the learned Sabordinate Judge relied for his opinion dealt with returns made by persons under the Income Tax Act. In other words, they were declarations of income which were filed by parties for the purpose of enabling the officer concerned to assess the proper amount of income tax. It was laid down in the Madras case to which we have referred that "it would be difficult to say that documents produced or statements made under process of law could be said to be made in official confidence."

Assuming that this statement of the law is correct, we are of opinion that the proposition therein so widely laid down cannot be applied to the facts of the present case. There is nothing whatever to show that this statement contained in Exhibit A (assuming for the moment that it is proved to have been signed by Mahammad Hasan) was made "under process of law" In this connection we have been referred to the Court of Wards Manual containing rules which were in force under the old Ast, (Act III of

^{(2) 1} Ind. Cas. 70; 32 M. 62; 19 M. L. J. 263; 4 M. L. T. 317.

COLLECTOR OF JAUNPUR B. JAMNA PRESAD.

1899) at the time when this estate was taken over These rules were made under the provisions of the Act. Rule 4 of Part I of the Manual imposes upon the Collector the duty of referring to the Board of Revenue all applications made by proprietors who desire to have their estates taken over. Rule 12 lays down what the report of the Collector is to contain. Amongst other particulars, it is to set forth a statement of the financial position of the estate desired to be taken over, together with an estimate of the claims which are likely to be made on the estate. Rule 13 lays down that these statements are to be made in particular forms, namely, Forms 1, 2 and 3.

It is not to be denied that the statement, Exhibit A, upon which the plaint if relies, in the Court below, is one of these forms.

But we have not been referred either to any section of the Act or to any rule contained in this Manual by which a person who desires to have his estate taken over by the Court of. Wards, can be compelled to make a disclosure of his debts. There is no question of process of law in this case.

On the assumption, therefore, that the statement, Exhibit A, in this case was drawn up by the defendant, Muhammad Hasan, and signed by him, we are of opinion that it should be treated as a communication made to the Collector in official confidence. It is hardly to be supposed that a proprietor who is fir accially embarrassed and who desires the Court of Wards to take charge of his estate, intends that any statement of his indebtedness is to be communicated to a third party or to be made public property. Any statement se made is made solely with the purpose of giving information to the Court of Wards, on the strength of which the Court of Wards may decide whether or not the estate should be taken over. We hold, therefore, that this particular document for which the Court of Wards claimed privilege, was a communication made to the Collector in official confidence and he war, therefore, not obliged to disslose it in accordance with the law as laid down in section 124 of the Evidence Act. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, was wrong in compelling the Collector to hand over this dosument and was also wrong in using it as svidence in this care.

It follows from this that if this doesnment is excluded from consideration the suit must fail, for, admittedly, there is no other evidence upon which it would be possible to hold that the bar of limitation was removed.

It is not necessary for us to enter into other matters in which, it appears to us, the Court below has gone wrong. We may say, however, that the evidence on the resord does not satisfy us that this state. ment, attributed to Muhammad Hasan, was uade before the month of June 1908. The whole evidence on this point is quite indefinite and we are asked to make a series of presumptions which, in the circametanees, we cannot possibly make. A plaintiff who is prosecuting a suit which ie, on the fase of it, barred by limitation, and who is trying to bring it within limitation by proving an asknowledgment under section 19 which gives him a fresh period, must give cogent proof of his allegations and in the present ease we do not find that this requirement has been complied with. Another matter which we may mention here is, that the lower Court was obviously wrong in using this acknow. ledgment against any one but Muhammad Hasan himself; section 19 of the Limita. tion Act is clear on the point. Notwithstanding this, the learned Subordinate Judge has given a decree against all the heirs of Monlyi Muhammad Ali except his three daughters-Musammat Makai, Musam. mat Fatima and Musammat Rugiya.

We need not deal with any of the other matters which were argued before us. It is sufficient for us to say that the claim was time barred and the suit ought to have been dismissed. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the plaintiff's claim stand dismissed with costs in both Courts.

BHAGWANT ATMARAM—DECREE. HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182-Execution-Application for execution against two judgment-debtors one of whom already dead, whether saves limitation.

An application seeking execution against two judgment-debtors one of whom is already dead saves limitation both against the living judgment-debtor and the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtors though they were not brought on record on that date.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 19th January 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 110 of 1920.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. A. Mande, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- In Civil Suit No. 62 of 1909, on the file of the Subordinate Judge, Wardha, Bhagwant Atmaram obtained a decree against Hakamali and Hasanali on a compromise. The decree rons thus:- "Dafendant No. 1 do pay plaintiff Rs. 600 in full satisfaction of plaintiff's claim as under, i.e., Rs. 65, sosts on Poush Sndi 15 of 1319 Fasli and the balance of Rs. 600, by annual instalments of Rs. 50 per year commencing from Poush Sudi 15 Sambat 1320 Fasli. In case of default in three instalments the whole debt would become due at once and the defaulted kists will bear 1 per cent per month compound interest. In sase the debt is not paid in a lump sum when the whole should become due then it will bear 2 per cent. per month compound interest. In case the defendant No. 1 fails to pay the debt as mentioned above defendant No. 2, will be liable as surety." The first execution application was filed in March 1912 for the Rs. 65 costs, this was recovered. Another application was filed on 7th September 1914, it was dismissed after Rs. 100 had been resovered. Then an application was filed on 9th July 1917 against both judgment-debtors execution being sought against both. This was against the moveable property of both, but before that was filed, that is, about 10th

August 1916 Hakamali had died. The next application is the one in suit which, despite the appellant's contentions, has been allowed to proceed. The appellant is the surety. He contends here that, under the authority of Madho Prasad v. Kesho Prasad (1), the application of 9th July 1917 does not save limitation, because Hakamali was dead at the time and his representatives were not brought on record. The case depended upon has been dissented from in Bipin Behari Mitter v. Bibi Zohra (2), and the latter 0330 commands itself to me. Therefore, I must hold the application of 9th July 1917 does save limitation. In any case, it would have eaved limitation against the present appellant for he was a party to it and expcation against his property was sought therein.

It is next contended that as the desree does not state that, in the event of the first defendant's death, defendant No. 2 is liable he cannot be made so. There is no force in this contention. Under that decree if defendant No. 1 did not pay, the present appellant was liable The defendant No. 1 has not paid and, therefore, he is liable. Because the plaintiff could have obtained satisfaction by attaching the estate of the deceased Hakamali it does not follow in place of doing so he cannot proceed against the surety. I see no reason for interference. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

EMPEROR - OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1878), s. 439— Revision—Interference on facts-Reasonable doubt— -Acquittal.

The rule of the Allahabad High Court, not to interfere on facts found, by the lower Appellate Court, when sitting as a Court of Revision, on the Criminal Side, is not an absolute one and the Court will interfere where it is not satisfied as to "the propriety of the finding." [p 177, col 1.]

Where a High Court is not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. [p. 173, col. 2.]

Oriminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Farrukhabad.

Mr. O. Ross-Alston, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomion, (Assistant-Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT .- Sham Sunder, a sonar, was convicted of an offence under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code by a Magistrate of the First Class, and his appeal was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge of Farruktabad, He comes here in revision. The only ground taken is, that the judgment of the Appellate Court itself contains sufficient grounds for holding that there is a reasonable doubt in the case. The practice of this Court has long been not to interfere in criminal revision on facts found by the lower Appellate Court, but the rule is not an absolute one. The revision has been admitted by a very experienced Jadge of this Court and the record is before me, and I have to satisfy myself as to "the propriety of the finding."

To put it very briefly, the case for the prosecution was that Mul Chand, who keeps a medicine shop in the Bazar of Farrukhabad, was anxious to have some jewellery repaired for a seremony which was to take place on the 30th of November last at his house, and, therefore, sent for Sham Sunder, sonar, whose shop was not far off, and on his arrival made over to him three articles of jewellery, valued at about Rs. 800 or a little more, for repairs. The articles were to be returned the same evening. That evening the complainant sent his servant to get the articles. He came back and said that Sham Sunder could not be

Sham Sunder's shop and asked for return of the ornsments, whereupon Sham Sunder denied that he had received any ornaments or that he knew the complainant. That afternoon the complainant made his report at the Police Station. It is said that when the jewellery was handed at the complainant's shop to the accused, there were present five persons who saw the transaction. The story itself seems to me highly improbable. It would be very improbable if the scene were laid in Bond Street or Pissadilly, but it besomes even more improbable in the Bazar of an Indian city. The shop faces the street and passers by can see and hear what was going on. At that hour of the day, between 12 and 1, there must have been a large number of persons in the street. Now, it is strange that the following criticism can be made against the five persons who say they saw the occurrence. One is the complainant's servant, another is a eloce relation, the third is a member of his biradari, the fourth has proved bimself unworthy of sredit, and the fifth is a next door neighbour and a man of no weight. Now, the learned Magistrate who tried the case has frankly admitted that the accused's story is not less believable than the complainant's, After saying that he cannot conceive any explanation for the divergence between the complainant's statement and that of one of his witnesses, he goes on to say: "All I can say is that the discrepancies and weakness in the defence story are infinitely greater." Later on he adds: "Very strong evidence was required to prove the line taken up by the accused. By taking this line the burden of proof was shifted to his shoulders," and he convicted the accused. The learned Sessions Judge has written a very long judgment most of which, however, is taken up with repeating arguments on both sides. He, too, it seems to me, has adopted more or less the same line as the learned Magistrate. After pointing out that the accused had a good resord, and a priori it was very unlikely that he would damage his professional carreer in the way alleged by the complainant, he goes on to say that the temptation was not small and the assused might have been in immediate want of money. This is a mere assumption. There is no evidence of it. He soneludes his judgment by saying, "it seems EHIAM SUNDER & EMPEROR.

to me that the complainant's e'ory is the more probable of the two" and le dismissed the appeal. It seems to me that this is not quite a fair way of trying the case. It is scarcely too much to say that the burden of proof is never on the accused to prove his innecence, and before he can be called on for his deferee the Court must be satisfied that there is a strong case for him to meet. It is not right, in my opinion, to say that, because the story told by the defence is more improbable than the very improbable story told by the complainant that, therefore, the seensed should be convicted. believe the complainant when he says that when he demanded back the ornaments from the accused, the accused replied that he did not even know the complainant. It is proved that there were dealings, in the past between them. Apart from this, there is the initial improbability that the accused, if he tock the ornaments in the way be is said to have dore, when he must have known that at least five persons at the shop saw it and there might have been other independent persons in the street who might have seen it, would have the audacity the very next day to deny the whole thing. Now, examining the transaction a little more elosely, I find that, although the ornaments worth Rs. 80) were made over on the occasion, no receipt was taken and no writing of any kind was resorded. It is proved that when gold of much less value was given to the accused by the complainant a memorandum was made of it. The witness, Ram Sarup Agarwale, who might be called an independent witness, says that he was present on the cesasion, baving come tack from Delhi with some drugs which he had purchased for the complainant. Unfortunately, this is the witness whose statement is so discrepant to that of the complainant that the Magiatrate frankly says: " I cannot conceive any explanation for this divergence in their statements", and it is still more unfortunate that, although the complainant keeps bahr khotz, there is no entry in it about these drugs. All the other witnesses who profested to have seen the occurrence are very closely connected with the complainant. The only other witness who seems to me to be independent is Kali Charan and I was to a considerable extent impressed with what he said. He said that on the 50th of November. that is, the day after the goods were said to have been mode over to the serused, the complainant came to him and asked him to use his influence over the accused to get back the crraments. He is the clerk of a Vakil and prima facie there is no reason to disbelieve his story, but, at the same time, he had money dealing with the complainent and the actual state. nent which he makes is really very vague. Now, the ceession for the harding over of these ornaments to the accured is said to be a ceremony on the following day at the complainant's house. In fact, the ecmplainant's care is that he was very basy making arrangements for the next day for the seremony. On this point be is sompletely sontradicted by his own servalt, who says that the complainant and his brother remained the whole of that day at the shop. There is really no other evidence that the ceremony was to take place the very next day, and if the servant is to be believed it is improbable. It seems to me that the story of the defence, which may or may not be true, at any rate establishes this much that there had been previous dealings between the parties and that there was some cort of dispute b tween them. I am far from saying that the acsused has established his story, but that, in my opinion, does not prove that he was guilty. The complainant himself apparently owes money but this, again, I think is not very important. The accused had admittedly borne a good character previous. ly. He seems to have a fairly good business and has been up to this generally considered quite honest. The temptation, under the siroumstances, considering that micappropriation, if made, must inevitably teen defected because the goods were given to him most openly before many witnesses, does not seem to me sufficiently overpowering. Nemo repents turpiesimus fit. On the whole, I am not eatisfied beyond a ressonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. He is, in my opinion, entitled on that ground to an asquittal. I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the convicton and sentence of Sham Sander and direct that he be released.

JUDGMENT -In this case a complaint, under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code, was presented by one Kessomal at Mirpur The Sub-Divisional Magistrate Mathelo. did not transfer the case immediately to ang subordinate Magistrate nor did he examine the complainant under section 200. On the 9th June he wrote an order that he wanted to hold a preliminary enquiry and summoned the witnesses for hearing on the 21st June. On the 21st Jane he passed an order transferring the enquiry to the Subordinate Magistrate for enquiry and report. Both these appear to us to be irregular. The Magistrate is bound, under section 200, if he was going to take eognizance of the complaint, to examine the complainant. Further, it is not permissible to transfer a case for enquiry to a subordinate Magistrate. If the ease is transferred simply the Magistrate to whom it is transferred can proceed with the case either by issuing direct proeess or by holding a preliminary enquiry in his discretion. The Magistrate had no right to fetter discretion of the Second Class Magistrate in report of the case, "transferred" to him. The word "transfer" in the Magistrate's order of 21st Ostober 1920 must be intended to mean "sent" under section 202. The word "transfer" which has a special meaning, should not have been used. But the provisions of sestion 200 make it illegal for BREDHA C. EMPEROR.

A Court cannot take any proceedings against an accused person in his absence.

In a criminal case an accused person cannot be ordered to pay compensation to the complainant on an adjournment of the complaint against him occasioned by his failure to appear on the date fixed for the hearing.

Oriminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Agra.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused was not present on the date for which the hearing of the case had been adjourned. He sent in an application of illness through the Chaukidar Rikhai. The learned Magic-trate adjourned the case for a week and, instead of confecating his bail bound, awarded Rs. 25 as damages to the other side and adjourned the case on this condition. This case has been referred for the orders of this Court by the learned Sessions Judge ef Agra on the ground that such an order of fine, so to say, capact he legally passed against an assured

The cases of this Court which I have been able to find were cases in which compensations were allowed to the accused when an adjournment was asked for by the prosecution, but I have not seen any case in which an order of compensation against an accused person had been passed because he could not attend the Court owing to his illness. Court eannot take any proceedings against an assused person in his absence. is a reference under GHOSE, J.-This section 307 of the Code of Criminal Prosedure by the learned Sessions Judge of Pabna in a trial held by him, with the aid of a Jury, of nine persons named Taribulle, . Korban, Rahimuddi, Mahajan Mondal, Hajrat Ali Sheikh, Badu Mondal, Maju Sheikb, Amir Munshi, and Rajab Sheikb, charged with offences punishable under sections 147, 302 and 323, Indian Penal Ocde and of one of the said persons named Maju Sheikh also charged with an offence punishable under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code. The Jury were unanimously of opinion that three of the accused, namely, Taribulla, Mahajan Mondal and Badu Mondal were guilty under sections 147 and 325, read with section 149, Indian Penal. Code, but that the other assumed persons, were not guilty of any offence. The learned Sessions Judge, for the reasons stated by him in his letter of reference, was unable to accept the verdiet of the Jury and has submitted the case for the consideration of this Court. In his opinion, all the accused persons were guilty not only of an offence under section 147, but also of the graver offence punishable under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

The case for the prosecution, shortly stated, was as follows:—One Kumud Chandra Pathak, a Zemindar of village Saratia, within the jurisdiction of the Serajgung Police Station, in the District of Pabna, was murdered on the 25th May 1920, while returning home in the afternoon from Serajgung, where he had gone on business. The murder took place at a spot near the village Saratia. The deceased lived in Shibnathpur, a village about a mile off.

from Saratia. Between him and some of his tenants in Saratia, including the present accused, there had been, for some time past, a great deal of litigation, civil and criminal. The feeling between the parties was apparently so high that the deseased, whenever he had cossision to go to Serajguni, the way to which lay via Saratia, carried a gun with him. On the 25th May he went to Serajgunj in connection with some cases of his then pending in the Courts there against some of his Saratia tenants. He went in a four wheeled Buggy and was accompanied by his eyes, Korban, and an offiser of his named Krishna Sunder Nandi. He did not, however, on this ossasion earry his gun with him. The deseased, after transacting his business, left Serajgunj in the afternoon to return home. His offiser, Krishna Sunder, had to be left behind, because the cases for the day in which he had to give evidence had not then been takan up. The distance between Sibnathpur and Serajgunj is about six miles, About four miles from Serajgunj, on the road to Sibnath. pur, is a place called Sealkhole Hat. At this place, the deceased picked up one Meher, a tenant of his, to escort him safe beyond Saratia. He then proceeded on his journey and, it is alleged, as soon as he reached the assused, Taribulla's house, one Moheruddi, who was standing near the entrance with a dao in his hand, hastily drew up, seized the reins and stopped the Buggy. Others same up and Kumud Chandra was at first struck with a bimboo. He got down from the Baggy and tried to ran away. Bat his assailants overtook him and literally hasked him to pieses and after putting his dead body in the Buggy started the horse off. The present accused are alleged to have been among the men who attached and murdered Kumud Chandra Pathak and they were cent up for trial under the sections referred to

The first information of the occurrence was lodged at about 6 30 p. M., on the 25th May by one Hemanta Kumar Chakravorty, a neighbour and tenant of the deceased, at the Serajganj Police Station. Hemanta had been informed of the occurrence by Meher and beyond the fact that it was stated in the first information that the men of Saratia had attacked Komud Chandra and murdered him, no details were given and no names were mentioned. The investigation commenced on the same evening and it appears that the Sab Inspector, Abdul Kader Khan, reached the place of occurrence at about 9 30 P. M. The latter arranged to send the dead body to Sarajganj and sent for Zurban and Meher. He resorded their statements and thereafter deputed his constables to arrest the persons who had been named by Kurban and Meher. The persons, when arrested, denied having committed the crime and stated that they had been implicated out of enmity. Various searches, full details of which are given in the deposition of the Sub-Inspector, were then carried out with the result stated above.

The case against the accused depended on satisfactory proof of identification and to this end a large number of witnesses have been examined by the prosecution. Five of them. namely, Korban, syes, Gomer Bawa, Meher Sheikh, Ismail Sheikh and Sadulla Sheikh are described as eye-witnesses. The syee. Korban, describes how, when his master reashed Taribulla's Bari, one Moheruddi Sheikh drew up and held the horse by the Rabim Bux and reins, how others, including οŧ gaven. the accused Taribullah, Mahajan, persons, namely Hajrat Ali, Badu Mondal, Maju (Majber) Amir Munshi, and Rajab Sheikh, same up from the Bari of Taribulla with lathic in their hands, how Kumud Chandra was strack by Rabim with a lathi, how Mo. beruddi struck the deseased on the neek with a dao, how the deceased fell and how be (Korban) and Meher thereafter ran to the west. In eross examination the witness states that he noticed from a distance of about 20 cubits that Moheruddi was standing in front of the Bari of Taribulla, and that he entertained no suspecions then. After the deceased had been struck by Moheruddi, he ran away and on looking back, after he had run about 3 pakhis, he saw that a number of persons had surrounded the deceased and that some of them were striking with lathis and some with dage. He did not notice which of them were strik. ing with lathis and which with daos, Later, he met the Chonkidar Loharam, and the constables who had been sent to the place of occurrance by the Sub-Inspector. but he did not mention either to the

EMPEROR D. TABIBULLAH SHAIKH.

Chonkidar or to the constables the names of the deceased's assailants. His explanation is that neither the Chonkidar for the constables asked him anything on this point. He says, later, that the constables did ask him who had killed his master, but he kept silent, the reason being that he thought he had better mention the names to the Sub-Inspector.

The witness Gomor Bewa identified the accused Korban (Kurman) as being one of the party of ten or twelve persons who were running away from the gari, when she arrived, Kumud had then been killed and his dead body had been placed on the gari. In cross-examination she states that she came to know Kurman's name by enquiry. She also states: "I know the other people besides Korman, who ran away, from a long time." She is apparently a very old woman and her eye sight is defective.

The witness Meher Sheikh described how he was asked by the deceased to escort him safe beyond Saratia, and how Moheruddi, who had been standing at the entrance to the Bari of Taribulla, came up and saught the reins of the horse. He and Korben (the syee) tried to snatch away the reins from Moheruddi but just then Mojber and Rabim Bux rushed up from the Bari Taribulla, Rabim Bux struck the deceased with a lathi. A number of men thereafter surrounded the deceased, he Taribulla, Hazrat Ali, Badu identified Mandal, Mojber, Amir Munshi and Rajab Sheikh as having been among the deceased's assailants. He ran as fast as he could towards the west, i.e., towards Sibnathpur, and informed the people of the village, including Hemants, about what had hap pened. In cross examination he states that the constables asked him who had killed the deseased. He said that the Saratia reople had killed him. The constables did not ask him about their names and he did not mention any names. It is also in evidence that, besides the constables, he met a number of people but he did not tell ary one who bad murdered Kumrd Chandra.

The winess Ismail Sheikh states that he was passing by the road that runs by the south of Tariballa's Bari and that he saw the deceased surrounded by 13 or 16 men. He recognised three of them only, namely, Moheruddi, Rahim Bux and Mayej.

The witness Sadulla states that when he was proceeding to his khet he heard a shout from the witness Korban to the effect that his master was being killed. He looked about and saw four men raise the bedy of the deceased up on the gari and a number of men, about 15 or 16, run away towards the Bari of Taribulla. Three of the four men referred to above were Moheruddi, Rahim Bux and Mojher. In cross examination he states that he saw the dead body being raised from a distance of three or four pathic and that he had at the time a backet of mangoes on his head.

Pausing here for a moment, it may be pointed out that, according to Hemants, (P. W. No. 21) Meher did not tell him the names of the assailants when he informed him that the men of Saratia had killed the deceased. Krishna Sandar Nandi. (P. W. No. 20) met Meher on the morining of the 16th May but the latter did tell him which of the men of Saratia had killed the deceased or that he had seen the murder being committed. It appears from the evidence of Tarapada Das (P. W. No. 17) that no witnesses were examined on the night of the 25th May and, according to the witness Korban, the examination of witnesses by the Sub-Inspector began at dawn of the 26th May, and it was being continued when the Inspector (P. W. No. 34) arrived at about 9 30 A. M. There had andoubtedly been a great deal of litigation, as is apparent from the vast mass of documentary evideres which have been put We do not attach much importance to the compromise supposed to bave been brought about by the witness Matinr Rabaman, But the considerations to which we have drawn attention, ramely, the omission to mention names at the earliest moment are important when one has to weigh the evidence of identification in circumstances disclosed in the evidence of the witnesses mentioned above. In our opinion the conclusion may not unfairly be drawn that the evidence thus far reviewed is not sufficient to incuse us to hold that the ease against the assured has been clearly proved. Let us now see if the remaining evidence on record can be relied upon. The witness Umaruddi (P. W. No. 9) is aimitteil. ly on terms of somity with som of the assneed persons. Besides, having regard to sereco edt lo emit sut tacea escebive edt rence, the evidence of resognition faraished by this witness does not command itself to us. The witness Elahi Bax states that be did not resognise those who ran across the jute khet but rerognised those who ran over the bota. In cross-examination he states that Hemanta Chakravorty enquired of him, among others, who had killed the deceased and that he did not tell him anything. It is also in evidence that he did not tell the Chonkidar Lobaram what he had seen.

The witness Jonab Ali identifies Rahimuddi and Mahajan Mondal as being among the men who were running away. admit, however, in cross-examination that although immediately after the marder, men same in from all sides and assembled round the dead body and enquiries were being made as to who had killed the deceased. he did not name any body. The witness Khedu identifies Bahimuddi as baing among the men who were running away; bat he did not identify Rahimuddi in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and no satisfactory explanation is forthcoming as to why he did not.

It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the evidence of the other witnesses, but it may be observed here that the medical evidence is not consistent with the theory that there were lathi blows on the decess-That the deceased was most craelly and brutally done to death, there eannot be the elightest doubt, but the evidence on record as against the ascused, taken as a whole, leaves room for doubt as to whether their complicity in the crime has been proved. In these sireumetaness, we must accept the opinion of the Jury as regards the six accused whom they found not guilty. We assordingly direct that their bail bonds be eancelled and they be discharged.

As regards the accused who were found quilty by the Jury under sections 147 and 323, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, it has been contended on their behalf that the learned Sessions Judge's charge to the Jury is vitiated by many and serious misdirections therein. Our attention has been drawn to a number of points and we will proseed to examine a few of then bearing on the question of misdirection. The accused Bedu Mandal and Bajab Ali pleaded alibi. The learned Sessions Judge correctly told the Jury that the onus was upon the two assused to prove this plea and that it was for the Jury to say whether they had susseeded in establishing this plea. But the learned Sassions Judge went on to add that if the Jury were of opinion that the two assused had failed to establish this ples, then there would arise a presump. tion against them as to their complicity in the crime. We think in laying down this, the learned Sessions Judge was clearly wrong and that there is no authority for the statement that such a presumption would arise in the event mentioned above. Then, again, the learned Sessions Judga speaks of the witness Gomor Bewa being under some obligation to the accused Tariballa. We have examined the evidence of Gumor Bewa for ourselves and we are satisfied that there is no evidence on record in support of the statement that Gomor Bewa was under any obligation to the assused, Taribulla. Farther the learned Sassions Judge should not, in our opinion, have expressed himself to the effect that had the case against the accused been a got up one, the evidence would have been of a different character and free from the defects to which he had drawn the attention of the Jury. nor was he entitled to say in a general manner of the contentions on behalf of the defence that there was nothing in the evidence to support or even to lend a semblance of support to them. The sum. ming up might, with advantage, have been more dispassionate and the evidence against need eved tdgim beenees lenbivibni put in a less dogmatical manner. For instance, the loarned Sassians Judga bas "no doubt about the complisity of Taribulla in the matter"; "as to Taribulla's presence at the congresses there eapnot possibly be any doubt"; "his refusal to diselese the names of the offenders shows that he was not an honest or disinterested person wholly unconnected with the affair"; "the fast that Amir Manshi was seen returning from the Hat at dusk would not in the least detract from the truth of the prosecution atory as to his partisipation in the erime," ets., etc. The learned Sessions Judge was no doubt entitled to express his own opinion on the evidence adduced before him, but the opinions to which we have called attention were expresend in such a manner that it is impossible to eay that grounds for legitimate complaint do not exist. The Julge presid. ing at a trial by Jury must always be eareful that he does not usurp the functions of the Advosate and that the evidence in the case is presented to the Jury in as dispassionate and impartial a manner is expected of the presiding officer. are constrained to observe that the charge in the present case falls short of this stand. ard.

With regard to the three assused whom the Jury proposed to convict under section 147 and section 326 read section iŧ might have been necessary direct a re-trial; but, having carefully considered the entire evidence, we think that to direct a re-trial would serve no useful purpose, and we, therefore, acquit those three also and direct that they be now set at liberty and that their bail-bonds te discharged.

Advocate), for the Urown.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application in revision against a conviction under section 60 of the U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910). I might say at once that, in my opinion, (subject to such authorities as may have been decided to the contrary which are binding upon me in particular illustrations), as a general rule, a conviction under a section, which provides a penalty for a variety of acts done in contravention of the Statute, is bad for duplicity where the section contains a variety of inscnsistent alternatives. take one simple example, in my opinion, to convict a man simply of an offerce under section 60 (a) would be bad for duplicity, because it might mean a conviction either for importing or for exporting, and it is impossible for a man to do both in the same act. Importing is defined by section 3 of the Act as bringing into the United Provinces, and exporting is defined as taking cut of the United Provinces, and it is a physical impossibility for anybody to do these two things by the same act. I say nothing to discourage the view that a person who exports from onteide the United Provinces to a werehouse inside the United Provinces of which be is really the proprietor or temporary possessor, even under a false name, is, in fact, committing an offence under the act of importing into the United Prcvincer, although he is also the person who exported from outside. It is perfectly possible for me to send an article for myself from the High Court at Allahabad to my Chambers in London, and if I did so with a dutiable article without declaration, I should be guilty of importing into England. But it is necessary that the ecnviction should state the act of which the assumed is found guilty and the particular breach of the act established against him by his not so found. I, therefore, think that the conviction by the Magistrate in the first Court was bad, on the face of it.

AHMAD C. EMPEROR.

To book liquor from Jaipur does not conetitute an offense defined in any of the alternatives under sestion 6), and the Magistrate has carefully avoiled considering the alternative, which he thought was complied with. Oa this occasion I think the learned Sessions Judge has fallen, in substance, into the same trap. The sentence in which he upholds the conviction runs as follow :- "The contention that the offence was committed at Jaipur, if anywhere, is unsound, for the importation was made to Mattra." That is a contradiction in terms. You cannot import to a place unless you are the person taking delivery inside the area in respect of which the word 'import' is used. That is to say, to import to Muttra means that you are the person taking the goods in the United Provinces at Muttra or from some other place in the United Provinces to Muttra. Of course, a person who sends goods from a Nativa State is not doing anything of the kind. It matters nothing that the actual application before me is against the order of the learned Sessions Judge. It is quite elear that, on the facts found, he ought to have quashed the original conviction, but I, in order to make the matter clear beyond doubt, amend the application so as to include an application against the original conviction which I direct to be quashed. I order the resognizance of Manshi Lal to be discharged.

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 26th June 1919, confirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Lyallpur, dated the 2nd June 1919.

JUDGMENT,-The learned Sessions Judge finds that the complainant's party had no right to seize the sattle of the accused after the cattle had left the field. and that the assused were, consequently, entitled to the right of private defence of property. But the learned Judge holds that the accused exceeded their right of private defense. Now, on these findings it cannot be held that all the accused constituted an unlawful assembly, and the only person who can be convicted is the one who actually inflicted the mortal wound on Mian Khan and thus exceeded his right of private defence. tide Mihan Singh v. Emperor (1). The evidenes shows that that person was Abmi.

In view of the findings of the lower Appellate Court referred to above, I am constrained to hold that no person other than Ahmi can be held to be guilty. I accordingly accept the application for revision and acquitall the petitioner, except Ahmi, whose conviction is altered to one under section 325, Indian Penal Code. - Public nuisance-Property, how to be dealt with

- Enquiry obligatory-Magistrate, duty of.

No man can be permitted to deal with his property in such a way as to cause public nuisance to others.

In cases of public nuisance an enquiry is obligatory and the Magistrate cannot make his conditional order absolute without taking such evidence as the parties may adduce as in a summons case.

Application against an order of the Distriet Magistrate, Fyzabad, dated the 30th September 1:21, confirming order of the Magistrate, First Class, Fyzabad, dated 25th August 1921.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Mahendra Deo Varma, for the Applicant.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Opposite Party. JUDGMENT.—The applicant has been ordered to remove a Band or dam, constructed by him to obstruct the flow of water of a channel or stream, which flows from the east and rune through the villages Muhammadpur and Makaiya. The complainant is the Zemindar of the village Muhammadpur. The applicant is one of the co sharers of the village Makuiya. The allegation of the complainant was that the dim had been nowly constructed in August last and had the effect of flooding the fields situated adjacent to the upper part of the channel or stream and injuring the standing there. He applied for the abatement of the nuisanse. The applicant opposed the complaint and alleged that the dam existed from some time. He did not state when it was constructed. He a's) caid that it caused no nuisanse to the complainant or to any other person, oultivating the land adjacent to the channel. The Trying Magistrate directed one of the Subordinate Magistrates, namely, the Tabsil. dar of Tando, to make an enquiry. His report was that the dam had been newly constructed and that its effect was that the land on the west cide of the channel was flooded for miles and the crops standing thereon had suffered.

It is not desied that the dam was constructed by the applicant on his own land; bat, as pointed out in Emperor v. Bharon Pathak (1) and Jagan Nat's v. Ohandrika Prasad (2), no man ean be permitted to deal with his property in such a way as to eause public nuisanse to others. The matter, therefore, merited enquiry. The report of the Subordinate Magistrate was adverse to the applicant; but it was open to the applicant to show that the dan was old and that no injury or naisansa was caused by it. It does not appear scuborq of berefto tranielques ent redtedw any evidence to show that the obstruction was new or whether any opportunity was given to the applicant at the time to prove that it was not sc.

Section 137 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that if the opposite party appears and shows cause against the order. the Magistrate shall take evidence in the matter as in a summons-case. The learned Magistrate failed to determine whether the dam was new or old. He considered it suffisient for his purposes to say, on the strength of the report of the Sabordinate Magistrate, that there had been an obstrustion and that the crops were being damaged. That was not, however, sufficient. He does not say that no evidense was offered. In Srinat's Roy v. Ainaddi Halter (3) it was held that an enquiry in such a case was obligatory. Maha Diji Salashiv Tilak, In the matter of the petition of (+) and Hingu v. E aperor (5) it was similarly held that a Magistrate eannot make his conditional order absolute without taking such evidence as the parties might addans as in a sum mons. ease. The application is accordingly allowed and the order of the 25th August 1921 set acide. Murder-Production of ornaments belonging to dezeased person-Presumption-Circumstantial evidence - Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 172 (2)-Police diaries, use of.

The fact that shortly after a murder a person is found to be in possession of ornaments belonging to the murdered person, creates a very grave suspicion that he was concerned in the murder. Lp. 190, col. 2

Appeal from order of the Sessions Gujranwala, dated 24th the Judge. Angust 1921.

Dr. Gokai Chand Narang, for the Appellant. Dewan Khilanda Ram, R. S., (Public Prosecutor), for the Respondent.

JUDGMEN'T .- Sundar Singh has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Guiranwals of the murder of Musammat Kesro in the Town of Gujrauwala on or about the 2nd or 3rd of April 1921, and has been sentenced to death. He has appealed to this Court through Dr. Narang, Advocate, and the Public Prosecutor has appeared to argue the case on behalf of the Crown. The case is also before us for confirmation of the sentence under section 374. Oriminal Procedure Code.

Sundar Singh belongs to the village of Wanianwala, three or four miles from Guiranwala, where Musammat Kesro lived. Musammet Ram Piyari, P. W. No. 2, is the daughter of Musammat Keero, and is married to Guranditte, P. W. No. 12, of Mansurwali, She was married about three years ago. but Musammat Kesro liked her to live near her, and Guranditta accordingly bought her a house near that of Musummat Keero in Guiranwala. In the month of Ohet last Musammat Ram Piyari was staying at Gojranwala, but in consequence of a posteard, Exhibit P. N., page 4 of the rarerbock, sent to him by Muammat Keero. he came to Gujranwala on the 2nd of April and took his wife away with him to his own village. On the evening of the 4th April the report, Exhibit P. B. page 2 of the paper-book, was made at the Sadr Police Station, Gujranwala, by Fagir Chand, P. W. No. 27, a neighbour of Musammat Keero, in which it was stated that she was a woman of bad character and of quarrelsome nature, that her house had not been looked from outside for the last two days and that since the previous day going into or the had not been seen soming! cut; of the house, In order that she might not implicate some of the residents of mohalla in case any property was stolen he thought it advisable to make a report at the Police Station. Upon this Qizi Murad Ali, Sub-Inspector Police, P. W. No. 4, went to the spot along with others and going into Musammat Kesro's bouse found her lying dead in one of the rooms with wounds on her head and blood lying about. A rambi and a toki were found lying near the body, and there were signs as if the floor had been dug up in one place. On the morning of the 5th of April Musammat Hukam Davi, a neighbour of Musammat Kesrc, P. W. No. 16, told the Sab-Inspector that on Saturday, the day on which Musammot Ram Piyari had left Gujranwala, she saw Sundar Singh, appellant, sitting with the deceased at about sunset. Sundar Singh was ascordingly sent for and on the 9th of April he was brought to Gujranwala by Miran Bakheb, constable, P. W. No. 20. He found him near his village. The evidence of the constables, if any, who previously went to the appellant's village and failed to find him, has not been brought on to the record. Oa the Sth of April the kurta and chaddar worn by Sundar Singh were removed from bis percon, as the Sub-Inspector considered that there were suspicious stairs on them. These were sent to the Imperial Serologist in Calcutta, whose report, page 9 of the paper book, shows that some minute blood. stains were found on the kurts, but they were so small that their origin could not be determined, and that the chalder was not blood stained. During the investigation which followed, most of the witnesses for the prosecution were examined, but Sub-Inspector did not consider the evidence sufficient to warrant the formal arrest of the appellant. On the 29th of May Wir Singh and Mangal Singh, who are said to have some connection with the appellant but who have not been prodused as witnesses either by the prosecution or the defence, appeared in Gujranwala, and are said to have offered a bribe of Rs. 960 to the Sub Inspector to induce him to let Sundar Singh go. The Bub. Inspector refused to accept this bribe and threatened to bring a case against Mangal Singh and Wir Singh. Upon this they are said to have taken counsel with Sundar

Singh who after one or two hours agreed to produce the ornaments of the murdered woman, which he said were buried at his well. The Police, along with Chaudhri Mul Raj, Mehtab Singh, Maula Bakhah and Bata Singh, P. W. Nos. 21-24, then took Sundar Singh to his village, Sundar Singh is said to have led them to his well and to have had some bhusa removed from a khota there and to have told the Police to dig up the ground corner. This was done and three gold ornaments, Exhibits P.1-P.3, are to have been found buried there. There is ample evidence, which is not seriously contested by Counsel for the defence, to show that these ornaments did belong to Musammat Keero. This evidence consists of the statement of Harnam Singh, P. W. No. 9, the goldsmith, who made them, together with entries in his bahi and in a copy book, Exhibit P.4, belonging to the deceased. Their weights actually correspond to the weights entered in these books and they have also been identified by Musammit Rim Pigari and her husband.

The evidence against the appellant is purely circumstantial. At page 35 of the paper book in his judgment the learned Sessions Judge says that he finds Sundar Singh guilty, because it is proved against him.

(1) that he was with the deceased on the evening before the murder;

(2) that his mistress Musammat Santi found blood stains on his shirt and loin sloth on the night, which was presumably the night of the murder, and that he washed the blood stained slothes next morning;

(3) that there were spots on his shirt when he appeared before the Police and that these spots were found by the Imperial Serologist to be remnants of blood:

stains ;

(4) that the toka with which the desessed had been assassinated was found to be his, and

(5) that he produced certain ornaments which belonged to the deseased.

There is ample evidence on the record of Garanditta, the deceased's son in law, amongst others, which shows that Musame mat Keero was a woman of bad character and that she had numerous lovers who used to visit her, including Sundar Singh, the appellant, Sundar Singh, it is said, used to visit her every 10 or 12 days. The evidence of Musammat Ram Pigari shows that he visited her two or three days before the 2nd of April, on which she left with her hasband for his village. Musammat Ram Pigari has stated Sundar Singh made an improper proposal to herself, but that she refused to have anything to do with him, and told her mother what he had said. Her mother was annoyed with him on this assount There does and reproached him. not to have been appear, however, any serious quarrel between Musammat Keero and Sundar Singh, though it is possible that he may have resented what she said to him. Musammat Hukam Davi, P. W. No. 16, has given elear evidence to the effect that she saw Sundar Singh in the house of the deceased on the evening of Saturday the 2nd of April. The Civil Surgeon, Captain Deeke, examined the dead body some time on the 5th of April and has deposed that at least 48 bours had elapsed between the time of death and his examination of the body. It, therefore, appears probable that the murder was committed either on the night between the 2nd and 3rd of April or some time on the 3rd of April. Nearer than this it is impossible to fix the time of death. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the appellant was with the deceased on the evening before the murder, but whether the murder was committed during the night or on the following day it is impossible to say.

With regard to the second point relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge we have the evidence of Musammat Santi, P. W. No. 10. This woman has a history of her own, as stated by the Sessions Judge in his judgment, page 35, line 21 of the paper-book. She is certainly not a woman of good character, because she admitted that she was with shild in consequence of intercourse with Harnam Singh, the nephew of her husband, After the death of her busband Labhu she lived some time with Teja Singh and subsequently with Sundar Singh without marry. ing either of them. The learned Sessions Judge has relied upon her identification of the toka found near the dead body of Musammast Keero as belonging to Sander

Singh. Her evidence on this point is that Sundar Singh used to shop fodder with this toka, but she said that it was never brought to the house but always remained at Sandar Singh's well. She also stated that the only occasion on which she went to the well was on the day after Sundar Singh had returned with his clothes blood stained. In other words, she meant to say that she saw the toka at the well on some day after the murder had been committed, but before the appellant had been arrested. This is quite impossible because the toka was found in the house of the deceased when the Police went there on the evening of the 4th of April. Musammat Santi may have purposely introduced confusion into her evidence about. this toka. But we must take her evidence. as it stands and, under the eirenmatances, it is obviously impossible to rely upon her identification of this toka. It also appears from her statement made before the Committing Magistrate, with which she was confronted in the Sessions Court, that she staying with Musammat Ram admitted Piyari in Gujranwala while the case was under investigation. She tried to deny this at the trial, which again shows that she is not a very reliable witness. On the whole, we think it would be extremely unsafe to rely upon her evidence or any portion of it.

As to the third point relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge, we no doubt have the report of the Imperial Serologist which shows that the appellant's shirt was bloodstained, but the blood stains were extremely small, so small that it was impossible to determine their origin. A Zemindar often gets blood-stains on his clothes and the presence of these minute blood stains is quite unimportant.

The fourth point relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge, namely, the identification of the toka has been already dealt with. Musammat Santi's evidence about it is quite unreliable and two other witnesses, P. W. Nos. 5 and 6, who were produced to identify it failed to do so.

We now some to the fifth point, namely, that the appellant produced certain ornaments belonging to the deceased. In this connection, first of all, we have the evidence of the Sab Inspector and the P.W. Nos. 21.24 as to the offer of bribe by Wir Singh and Manga Singh to the Sab-Inspector in Musammat

BUNDAR SINGH C. EMPEROR.

Ram Piyari's house in Gujranwala on the 29th of May. P. W. No. 21 Chaudhri Mul Raj, is a Police Zaildar. Mehtab Singh, P. W. No. 22, is a Sufedposh, Maala Bakbab P. W. No. 23, is a leather merebant, and Buta Singh, P. W. No. 24, is a Zvildar. We find it impossible to reject the evidence of there men that a bribe was offered in the way described. Dr. Narang says that his instructions are that the money was brought to Gujranwala in order that Counsel might be engaged for the defence of Sundar Singh. Wir Singh and Mangal Singh, however, did not some forward to testify to this and there is no evidence at all in support of the story. We hold that the bribe was offered, but this does not lead to any inference that Sundar Singh has committed the murder. He had been in the custody of the Police, though not formally arrested, since the 2th of April, and it may well be that Wir Singh and Mangal Singh offered the money in order to get him out of their elutebes. The fact, however, that the bribe was offered to the Sub-Inspector gave bim a lever, by which be could bring pressure to bear upon Sundar Singh. We, therefore, believe the evidence that Wir Singh and Mangal Singh, the appellant, and perhaps Mul Raj laid their heads together, and that it was decided that certain ornaments should be produced with the object of satisfying the Sub Inspector. P. W. Nos. 21, 22 and 23 say that after Sundar Singh and others had talked together, Sundar Singh eaid that he would produce the property, if no proceedings were taken against Mangal Singh and Wir Singh. Buta Singh, P. W. No. 24, on the other hand, says—see page 28, line 2s of the paper-book they talked saide for a long time, that ir, for about an hour. Then Chaudhri Mul Raj same and whispered something into the ear of the Sub-Inspector. Then two tumiums were brought and we all drove off in the tumtums. We were not told where to we were going and for what purpose. I erquired from the Thansdar where we had to go. He said he had to go to the well of the sconced. So we went to his well." There is thus a discrepancy between the statement of Buta Singh and those of the other witnesses as to what was said before they set off to the appellant's well. When they got to the well the appellant is said to have searched the persons of the Sab. Inspector and of the Police constable, who then went into the kotha and dug the place pointed out by Sandar Singh, from which three gold ornaments of the deseased were found. Dr. Narang has argued that if the appellant admitted his possession of the ornaments and voluntarily took the Police to the kotha where they were hidden and himself pointed out the exact spot, it is rather surious that he should have insisted on searching the persons of the Sab-Inspector and the constable before they went in to dig up the ornaments. He also urges that it is unusual for a Sub-Inspector himself to dig up property from the place pointed out by an accused person. We are disposed to agree with Connsel on both these points. We do not understand why the appellant should have been so anxious to search the Police Officers before they went in to dig the ornaments out of the hiding place where they had been concealed, and which the appellant had himself pointed out. At the same time, we are not disposed to reject altogether the evidence of the witnesses, who appear to us to be reliable persons. Maula Bakbab, P. W. No. 23, is no doubt an undischarged insolvent, but there is nothing against P. W. Nos. 21, 22 and 24, except that they are persons who usually sesist the Police in investigations, Now, there can be no doubt that if a person is found shortly after a murder in possession of ornaments belonging to the murdered person, a very grave suspicion must rest upon him that he was concerned in the murder. When, as in this case, the ornaments were not produced until nearly two months after the morder the suspicion is not nearly so strong, especially as during most of that period appellant was detained by the Police and in his absence some one else could have placed the ornaments where they were found. The second, third and fourth points relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge are not established, in our opinion, as we have already shown. There remains, therefore, the fact that Sundar Singh was one of the lovers of Musammat Kesro that he had some cause to be annoyed with her, and that he was seen in her house on the evening of the 2nd of April, probably within 24 hours of the time when We also have the she was murdered.

IMPIROR C. BURHALSIFG.

evidence about his production of the orraments belonging to the dead women some eight weeks later. Dr. Narang urges that, even if it be true that these ornaments were in the possession of the appellant and that he gave information which led to their production, still these facts are not incompatible with his innecence. In Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 'th Edition, Chapter VI, rule 4, at page 311, is as

"In order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innucence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable bypothesis than that of his guilt. This is said to be the fundamental rule, and to be experimentum crucis, by which the relevancy and effect of circumstantial evi-

Dr. Narang argues that it is quite possible that Sundar Singh etole these ornaments two or three days before the murder and that up till the time of her death Musammat Kesro did not discover that they were missing. She had many lovers and even if she had dissovered their loss Sundar Singh might very well have thought that she could not fasten the theft upon him because any one of her lovers might have robbed her. We think there is some force in these erguments. It is certainly not a wholly unreasonable theory. We have carefully considered all the evidence upon the rescid and even assuming the first and fifth points relied upon by the Sessions Judge as established we are not satisfied that they are incompatible with the innocence of the acoused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. There is certainly a very strong suspicion against him, but we do not think it sould be safe, under the eircum. stances, to convict him.

Before we close this judgment we wish to point out to the learned Sessions Judge that he appears to have used the Police diaries in an improper manner. In his judgment, see page 34, line 37 of the paper-book, he says in regard to Musammat Ram Piyari's evidence, "I have tested her evidence by comparing it with the Police file and it is undoubtedly true on the following point." This shows that the Isarned Sessions Judge believes the evidence of Musammat Ram Piyari, beesuse it agrees with several entries in the Police zimnis. Section 172, sub-section (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that any Criminal Court may send for the Police disries of a care under inquiry or trial in such Court, and may use such diaries, not as evidence in the sage, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial The learned Sessions Judge has in this sase undoubtedly used the simnis as evidence, which was not a proper use to make of them. For the reasons already given, we accept the appeal and, setting aside the conviction and sentence passed on Sundar Singh, we sequit him, and direct that he may be released from sustody.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), ss. 123, $97—Detention in prison—Failure to give security—Subsequent sentence, whether can be ordered to run after expiry of period of detention

An order detaining a person in prison under section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, until he gives security is not a sentence of imprisonment and, therefore, section 397 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not authorise a Magistrate to direct that a subsequent sentence should take effect on the expiry of the previous detention, [p. 192, col. 1.]

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Kennedy, J. U.—In this case the First Class Magistrate of Nausbahro ordered one Sakhalsing to give security for good behaviour. On his failing to do so, he directed him to be detained in rigorous imprisonment for twelve months under section 123 unless he furnished security. Suchalsing did not furnish security but, on the contrary,

excaped from sustody and ran away. He was ultimately arrested and was tried for escaping from lawful sustody and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, the Magistrate directing that the sentence of three months should take effect on the expiry of the period for which accused was detained under Chapter VIII, vie., 12 months or till he, within that time, furnished security.

The Magistrate, on further consideration, found this order to be irregular and has now referred the matter here. It appears on the authority of the cases cited from this Court, as also in Bombay and other High Courts of India, that the order detain. ing a person who has failed to furnish security under Chapter VIII is not a sentence of imprisonment and, therefore, section 397 Procedure Code does of tha Criminal Magistrate to direct not authorise 8 that the subsequent sentence should take effect on the expiry of the previous detention under Chapter VIII. The Allababad High Court, it is true, has held a contrary view, viz., that such detention was a substantative sentence of imprisonment, it is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to this case, as we are bound by the rulings of our own Court, which are in accordance with the Bombay High Court ralings, and, therefore, this order of the First Class Magistrate is, as he himself points out, wrong. We, therefore, set aside so much of the order as directs that the sentence under section 225B of three months' rigorous imprisonment should take effect on expiry of the period that the accused is detained under section 123, Criminal Code, and direct that the Procedure sentence should take effect from the date of judgment.

MADGAONKAR, A. J. C.—I concur. In Emperor v. Pandhi (1) this Court held that a person committed to a prison or detained in prison under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure until he gives security is not undergoing a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of section 397 of that Code, and the view, though opposed to the decicion of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Tula Khan (2), is in accordance with the view of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Pishnu Balkrishna Ram (3) of the Madras High Court in Joghi Kannigan v. Emperor (4) and of the Panjab High Court in Queen-Empress v. Diwan Ohand (5). J. P.

Unlawful assembly—Leader of gang, liability of.

A conviction under section 147 of the Penal Code of the leader of a gang whose common object is to assault passers by, is not illegal.

Oriminal application from conviction and sentence passed by the Asting Second Presidency Magistrate, Bombay,

Mr. A. D. Janai, for the Assused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We do not see any reason to interfere with the decision of the learned Magistrate. The accused was convicted of rioting under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. On the evidence, it is clear that there was an unlawful assembly and, on the evidence, the Magistrate was satisfied that the accused was the leader of the gang whose common object was to assault the passers by. Hindu Law-Will-Devise to widow-Construction

"Full proprietary rights"-Estate taken by widow

Alienation-Validity-"Malik," meaning of-Words in Will, construction of.

A Hindu governed by the Mithila School of Hindu Law made a Will by which he directed that, after his death, his widows shall be heirs to all his immoveable properties and shall, in every way, exercis: full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties:

Held, that the widows took an absolute estate with full powers of alienation. [p. 193, col. 1.]

It is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will, which was adopted by a

Court in another case. [p. 195, col. 2.]

The term "malik", when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donec is intended to hold, means an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alieuation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. [p. 147, col. 2.]

The meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it is related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning [p. 197, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree and judgment of the Patna High Court, reported as 39 Ind. Car., 755, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Jadge, Darbhanga.

FAUTS .- The respondents, as the reversioners of one Bacheha Chowdhury, sued for a deslaration that certain alienations made. by the first appellant, widow of Bashcha Chowdbury, are inoperative beyond her life. The subject matter of the alienations was partly inherited by the first appellant from her husband and partly her own asquisitions. of savings from income of her husband's property. The appallants pleaded under the Will of Bachcha Chowdhury, the first appellent acquired absolute estate which she could validly alienate. The Trial Jadge and the High Court, on appeal, held that the widows took merely a Hindu widow's estate and decread the respondent's suit. Hence this appeal.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and Sen, for the Appellants. - Under the Will, the widow acquired an absolute estate. There is nothing in the context to out down the offect of the expressions used. The fact that the devisee is the widow is immaterial. Sura: mani v. Rabi Nath Opha (1), Fatch Chand v. Rup Chand (2), Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (3), Amarendra Nath Boss v. Shuralhany Dasi (4), Surss Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (5). Under the Mithila School of Hinda Law, the widows in any ease have absolute estate in the moveables. The Will also gave the devisees power. of alienation during life and this is suffisient to dispose of the present dispute.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondents. - The Will gives the widow rights as "heirs"; they annot take more than a widow's estate.

If it was intended that they should have greater powers, it would have been expressed without any ambiguity. The use of the word "malikiyat" as meaning "malik," is not conclusive. Moulvie Maho ned Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (3), Shib Lakshan Bhasat v. Srimati Tarangini Dasi (6), Janki v. Bhairon (7).

JUDGMENT.

Sig John Edge.—The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 13th August 1912 in the Court of the Sabordinate Judge of Darbhanga, in Behar, by the plaintiffs, who are the presumptive reversioners of Bachcha Chowdhury, deceased, who in his lifetime was a landholder in and a resident of Mouzah Subhankarpur, in Tirboot. Bachcha Chowdhury died in 1865. The principal defendant is Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who is the surviving widow of Bachcha Chowdhury. His other widow was Musammat Subast Chowdhurain;

ebe died befere suit. Bachoba Chowdbury died presested of considerable moveable and immoveable properties, which, on his death, came into the possession of his widows. Part of Bacheba Chowdbury's immoveable property was ancestral, and the remainder of it had been purchased by him.

Musammat Subast, shortly before she died, excented, on the 12th February 1887, an instrument by which she bequeathed her half-share in the property to Musammat Sasiman.

The suit relates to the nature of the title of Musammat Sasiman to the immoveable properties of which her husband, Bacheha Chowdhury, had died possessed, and to the nature of her title to other immoveable properties which she and Musammat Sabaet. or one of them, acquired by purchase, it being alleged by the reversioners that those immoveable properties which were acquired by the Musammats were purchased by them with moneys saved from the usufrust of the immoveable properties of which Bachcha Chowdhury had died possessed. The object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that Musummat Sasiman neither had nor has any power to alienate any of the immoveable properties. Her right, if any, to alienate, except for necessity, depends upon the nature of her title. Musammat Seeiman and some of the other defendants are appellants here. The plaintiffs and others of the defendants are the respondents.

The Hindu family to which Bacheha Chowdhury had belonged was governed by the law of the Mithila behool of Hindu Law. Bacheba Chowdhury had separated from that family. The suit and this appeal depend upon the true construction of a testamentary document which, although deseribed as an atainama (deed of gift), must be regarded as a Hindu Will, which Bachcha Chowdhury made on the 5th of June 1864. On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that the Musammats took no greater interest in the immoveable property which had belonged to Bacheba Chowdhury in his lifetime than that allowed by the law of the Mithila to the widow of a separated and childless husband. On behalf of Musammat Sasiman and those elaiming under her it is coontended that she and Musammat Subast tok in that property under the Will a full, absolute, and heritable interest as proprietors, with full rights of alienation, and not merely the interest of Hindu widows under the law of the Mithila. If her contention as to the construction of the Will is correct, this suit must fail, and should be dismissed, and it would not be necessary to consider whether the immoveable properties which were purchased by the Musammats, or either of them, were purchased with moneys derived by them after their busband's death from the usufruct of the immoveable properties which were left by him.

According to the official translation of the Will of the 5th June 1864 (15th Jeth, 1217, F.S.), Bacheba Chowdhury stated that:-

"I am Bacheha Chowdbury, resident of Mouza tubbankarpur, Pargana Hati, Zila Tirboot, "

He then mentioned lands, some of which were ancestral lands, and others of which be had purchased, and stated, as was the fact, that,-

The ancestral and purchased properties are held and possessed by me, without partieipation or interference on the part of any person"- and proceeded,-"I, the declarant, have no issue; I have, to obtain bliss in the next world, caused to be sunk several ponds, and have constructed a temple of Sri Murli Manchar Ji within the compound of my own house, at a considerable cost; I often remain ill, although at present I am well, still on account of having no shild, and placing no certainty in life, I intend to go on pilgrimage to Kashi and other places. Therefore, I, the declarant, of my own accord and free will, in order to avoid future disputes and to perpetuate my name, gave all the mouses in entirety or in part, both aneestral and purchased, thika properties, and all goods, and assets, articles of copper and silver, elephant, oxen, she buffaloes, and all other properties, to both my first and second wives, Musammat Subast Chowdhurain and Musammat Sasiman Chowdhurain, who after my death will be heirs to all the moveable and immoveable properties. It is desired that the said Musammats by holding possession and ossupation of all the moveable and immoveable properties should pay the Government revenue thereof, and they should collect rant of, BASIMAN CHOWDHURAIN D. SHIB NARAYAN CHOWDHURY.

and keep watch over, the mouses either in entirety or in part and scattered lands, orehard, oxen, and elephant, etc., and they should give alms and charities. The said Musammats after my death, shall have, in every way, full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties, and they should, under the deed executed by me, pay, annually, Rs. 360 to Musammat Lachhmi Chowdhurain, widow of my brother, Dalar Chowdhury, until her death for her maintenance, and by this deed the said Musammats should get their names resorded in the Government sherists in the cloumns of proprietors. To this, I the declarant, neither have nor shall have, any objection. I have, therefore, given into writing these few words by way of a deed of atainama so that they may be of use when required."

Their Lordships have quoted from the translation which was made of the Will by the official translator in India, but it is admitted on babalf of the parties to this appeal that the vernasular word which has been translated as "gave" should have been translated as "give."

The important words in the Will which, in the official translation have been rendered as giving to the Musammats after the testtator's death "in every way, full power and all propertietary rights," are in the vernaealar Kuli o Kuh haqug malkiyat har hal akhtear Mosammat mazkuran ko hasil hai, and were understood by the Trial Judge as a declaration by the testator of the rights which the Musammats would have in the properties by inheritance after his death, and not as giving them any greater right in the properties, or implying that they should have any greater right, such as a right of alienation, except for necessity. The Trial Judge, by his decree of the 9th April 1914, made a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs as reversioners. From that decree Musammat Sasiman appealed to the High Court,

The appeal to the High Court was heard by Chapman and Ros, Ji., and was dismissed by the desree of that Court on the 23rd February 1917. The leading judg. ment in the High Court was delivered by Ros, J., with which Chapman, J., consurred, Mr. Justice Ros was of opinion that in pue reespect the official translation of the

Will of the 5th June 1864, was not quite accurate, In his judgment he said,-

"A more assurate translation of clause beginning the said Musammats after my death' would be-'And in respect of all the moveables and immoveables after my death all and complete rights, the power of a landbolder in every eireumstance, acernes to the said Musammats.' The Urdu words which I have translated accrnes' are 'hasil hai.' The Urda word which I have translated 'of a landholder' is 'mali. kiyat.' There is no such word in the language. Either the long a is a mistake or the word is a manufactured word, The point has been pressed at some length in the argument. It is not, to my mind, 'Milkiat' or 'Malikiat' would material. equally imply something appertaining to a malik! The word 'malik' means literally one who holds milk or land. The translation, with the amendments which I suggest, represents the terms of the dead."

There does not appear to their Lordships to by any material difference in that respect between the official translation and that suggested by Mr. Justice Roe. In their Lordships' view they mean the same thing. But if they materially differ, their Lordships hold that they must accept the official translation as correct. translation was incorrect, there was ample opportunity to have it judicially corrected in the High Court after evidence as to its correctness or incorrectness had been taken and recorded in the Court in which the correctness of the official translation was shallenged. The Judicial Committee has no means of enquiring into the correstness of an official translation of a docament in a vernacular language of India, except by sending the case back to the Court with a direction to make such enquiry. It is not necessary to adopt that course in this case.

The following desisions, which it has been contended should guide their Lordships in construing this Will, have been eited in argument at the Bar. Lordships may observe that it is always dangerous to construe the words of one Will by the construction of more or less similar words in a different Will, which was adopted by a Court in another case. Their Lordships will briefly refer to the BASIMAN CHOWDRURAIN C. SHIB NARAYAN CHOWDRURY.

Hooda v. Shewukram (3), which came on appeal from the High Court of Calcutte, and related to the construction of a testamentary document executed by Roy Hurnarain, a Hindu of Behar, the Board held that.—

"In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family; and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate."

The Board, having regard to those considerations, and to the document as a whole, all the expressions of which should be taken together, beld that Harnarain, in using the expression "except Musammat Rance Dhun Kowar aforesaid, none other is or shall be my beir or malik." intended that Rance Dhun Kowar should take in his property 'a life-interest immediately suceeeding him, without that interest being shared by her daughters or by any other person," but that she should not take an absolute estate which she should have power to dispose of absolutely. The Board so decided, although it held that there were expressions in the document which, if they stood alone, showed that Hurnarain intend. ed to make an absolute gift to Rance Dhun Kowar. She was the widow of Hurnarain's deceased con, by whom she had had two daughters, who were living at the date of the document, and were named in it.

In 1875, in Kollany Keer v. Luchmee Pershad (c), which depended on the construction of a Hindu Will, and came to the High Court at Calentta on appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sarun, in the Patra Division of Bengal, and related to the title to immove able property, Romesh Chunder Mitter, J., in his judgment, from which the other

Judge who heard the appeal, Glover, J. did not discept, held.

"Therefore, the primary matter for our consideration is the language of the Will, or the words in which it is expressed. As far as the words go, I think it is plain that the testator intended to make an absolute gift of his property in favour of his widow and his daugher. He says that, after his death, they shall be (maliks), and his entire estate shall devolve upon them."

Mr. Justice Mitter considered that there being nothing to show a contrary intention, the words which were used gave an absolute estate, and not merely the estate of a Hindu female, to the testator's widow and daughter.

In 1281, Sir Richard Garth, C. J., and Conningham, J., in Punchoo Money Dosses v. Troplucko Mchiney Dosses (9), which was an appeal from a decree of Wilkinson, J., in a suit on the original jurisdiction side of the High Court at Calentte, and related to a Hindu Will, held that the description in the Will of a devisee, a woman, as malik, did not recessarily import an intention of the testator that by his Will an absolute or proprietary interest should pass to her.

In 1897, in Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Rey (10), which was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta, which had reversed a decree of the District Court of Hooghly in a suit which related to Hindu Will, the Board held that the words of gitt in the Will to the effect that the dones "become owner (malik) of all my estate and properties" conferred an heritable and alienable cetate in the absence of a context indicating a different meaning.

In 1907, in Suramani v. Rabi Nath Oha (1), in an appeal from a decree of the High Court at allahabad, which had affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, in a suit which related to a deed of gift or testamentary instrument, by which a Hindu gave to his first and second wives and daughter in law, respectively, certain immoveable property, reserving to himself a a life interest, but directing that after his death they shall be "malik na khud ikhtiyar (owners with proprietary rights)," the Board said, -

"This case of Lilit Mohun Singh Roy v. Ohuk un Lal Roy (10) seems to adopt and apply the same view of the word 'molik' as was taken in the Calcutta case in 24 W. R., above sited [Kollany Reer v. Luchmee Pershad (8), with the result that in order to out down the full proprietary rights that the word imports, something must be found in the context to qualify it. Nothing has been found in the context here or the surrounding eircomstances, or is relied upon by the respondents, but the fact that the dones (Surajmani) is a weman and a widow, which was expresely decided in the last mentioned easa not to suffice. while there is nothing in the context surrounding facts to displace the presump. tion of absolute ownership implied in the word 'malik,' the context does seem presumption strengthen the that intention was that 'malik' should bear its proper technical meaning."

In Musammat Sura mani v. Rabi Nath Oha, (1) the Subordinate Judge of Gorakbpur, who tried the suit, had held that turajmani took a Hindu widow's estate, and was incompetent to alienate it, and the High Court on the appeal held,—

"That under the Hindu Law, as interpreted up to the present, in the ease of immoveable property given or devised by a husband to his wife, the wife has no power to alienate, unless the power of alienation is conferred upon her in express terms. The learned Vakil for the appellants (Surajmani and others) contended that the words of the document we have to consider, and that we have sited above, did expressly convey such power, or at any rate that from them the intention of the executant to confer a power of alienation was evident. We cannot so hold."

In 1909, in Amarendra Nath Boss v. Shurashany Diei (4) Mookerjee, J., held that the expression "malik like myself" in a Hinda Will, as describing the position which the donee would occupy, was an indication that the testator intended the donee to take an absolute interest in the property devised, but that the word "malik" by itself would not indicate that more than a limited interest was intended to be conferred.

In 1916, in Fatch Chand v. Rup Chand (2), in an appeal from a deeree of the High Court at Allahabad, which had varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sabaranpur, in a suit which related to the title to immoveable property, the Board held that the words in a Hinda Will: "I have bequeathed Manza Khudda to Musammat Gomi . . after my death she shall be owner in possession (mulik o qubit) of the entire property in Manza Khudda aforesaid," conferred full ownership upon the devisee, there being in the Will, in the opinion of the Board, nothing from which a contrary intention of the testator should be inferred.

It appears from some of the decisions to which their Lordships have referred and from the jadgment of the Board in Bhaidas Shiedas v. Bai Gulab (11), that the term "malik," when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended hold, has been held apt to describe owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is someting in the context or in the surrounding sireamstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred, but the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it is related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning, and their Lordships can find nothing in the quoted desisions contrary to this view.

Mr. Justice Chapman, in his consurring judgment in this suit, said: "As regards the word 'malik,' I trust that a word in such common everyday use in this part of the country (Behar) will not be converted by the desisions into a technical term of conveyancing.' At least outside the Presidency Towns of Calcutte, Madrae, and Bombay, the art of conveyancing is but little understood in India, and the drafting of documents, including Wills, is generally of a very simple and inartificial character. See the observations of the Board in Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (12) and in Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambita Pershad Singh (13).

In the present case the term "malik" does not occur in the Will, but the word 'malkiyat," which has been rendered in the official translation as "all proprietary rights," does, and Mr. Justice Roe, who did not accept the official translation as literally quite accurate, considered that a mistake in the spelling of the word had been made, or that the word was a manufactured word. His opinion was that, whether the intended word was "milkyat" or "malikiyat," it meant the same thing—that is, the power of a landholder, and he stated that "malik" means, literally, one who holds land. Their Lordships cannot construe the words of the Will giving to the Musammats, as the testator's heirs, all his moveable and immoveable properties, as interpreted by the declaration that after his death they "shall have, in every way, full power and all proprietary rights over all the moveable and immoveable properties," as meaning anything less than that they should hold in his properties full and complete rights as proprietors, including full rights of alienation, and that was, their Lordships infer, what the testator intended.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, and the suit should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an application for an order that the execution of the decree, dated the 22nd of March 1921, be stayed until the final determination of the appeal, upon the appellants furnishing such security to the satisfaction of the Registrar and within such time as the Court may be pleased to direct.

The case was tried by my learned brother Mr. Justice Rankin, who, on the 22nd of March 1921, gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 41,131 (Rs. 41,000?). It was alleged by the appellants, though denied by the plaintiff, that negotiations with regard to settlement took place. They, however, same to nothing and the plaintiff applied in the ordinary course to the Master for execution of the decree.

Thereupon, on the 14th of April 1921, nearly a month after the judgment had been given by Mr. Justice Rankin, the appellants applied to Mr. Justice Greaves for stay of execution of the decree, pending the final determination of the intended appeal, and obtained an interim stay of the said execu.

tion; and then, after hearing the parties on the 22nd of April 1921, my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves, made an order directing that upon the appellants paying in each ten thousand rupees by the 25th of April and another sum of ten thousand rapees within a week after, and the sum of rupees twently-one thousand within a month from that date the execution of the desree should be stayed. It was provided that the plaintiff would be at liberty to withdraw the sums, so to be deposited, on the plaint. iffs farnishing security, and that in default of payment of any one instalment the decres would be executed for the balance undeposited. The defendant-appellants deposited the two same of Rs. 10,000 but failed to deposit the sum of Rs. 21,000 within the month specified by the order. The defendant-appellants now apply to this Court for stay of the execution of the decree until the hearing of the appeal. When asked by the Court, the learned Counsel, for the plaintiff refused to consent to security being deposited by the appellants with the Regis. trar instead of eash, and he objected, for reasons which he stated, to any further time being granted. I do not say that this Court has no jurisdiction to stay execution of the decree if it fit. But in the eirenmetances of this ease, my learned brother and I are not prepared to stay the execution of this decree without the consent of the plaintiff. It is to be noticed that the plaintiff has obtained judgment for Rs. 41,000. The defendants have already obtained a concession by reason of the learned Judge's order that execution should be stayed upon terms which the learned Judge thought right and proper. Those terms have not been earried out. I know of no facts which should induce this Court to make an order extending the time or varying the order which the learned Judge made. It was urged by the learned Advosate-General, on behalf of the appellante, that in these days it is diffisult for people engaged in commerce to raise ready money. It seems to me that there are two considerations in respect of that. The first is that, if that allegation be true, it affords. an additional reason why the plaintiff should not be kept out of his money any longer. He has obtained a decree, and, for all I know, it may be just as important to the plaint.

iff, who is engaged in trade, to obtain each in respect of the amount found to be due to him as it is for the defendants not to pay the ready money. Secondly, the appellante in their petition stated that their firm's stock in trade, consisting mostly of jute in various places, would exceed a sum of rupees two lass, If that be true, then I do not understand why the defendant appellants should not be able to raise, on the security of their two lass of rapees worth of jute, a sum of Rs. 21,000 in order to comply with the order of the learned Judge. It is to be noticed that there is no ground for suggesting that any substantial loss would result to the appellants, who are now applying for stay of execution, unless the order were made, because the learned Judge had provided for that by the direction that if the plaintiff should take the money, which was to be deposited by the defendants with the Registrar, out of Court, then the plaintiff was to provide security in respect thereof.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this application must be dismissed with costs.

Before parting with this case I desire to make one or two observations of a general nature. It seems to me that the procedure which was adopted in this case was not the correct procedure. As I have already said during the argument. I have spoken to my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves about the practice on the Original Side. inasmuch as it was stated by learned Counsel during the argument that the application for stay of execution in this case had to be made to Mr. Justice Greaves because he was taking all applications on the Original Side. Mr. Justice Greaves assures me that that is not so, and I desire it to be under. stood that, in future, if a party, against whom judgment has been given on the Original Side desires to obtain a stay of execution, pending an intended appeal, and desires in the first instance to apply on the Original Side, he must apply to the Judge who desided the ease. It is obvious that that is the right course to alopt, because the Judge who has decided the case would know all about it; he would have all the fasts in his mind and would be in a position to say whether, in that MADLU SUDAN SAHA CHAUDHURI U. DESENDRA MATH BARK-R.

particular case, execution cught to be stayed, If the application is made to another Judge, eitting in Chambers, it must be obvious that much time will be wasted by putting before the learned Judge all the material facts of the case on the one side and on the other, and, it must further be obvious, that he cannot be in such a good position to judge whether execution should be stayed as the learned Judge who tried the case. The Order in the Civil Procedure Code, Order XIII, rule 5 (2), to my mind slearly contemplates that that sourse should be adopted, because it provides: "Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree bcfore the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may on sufficient cause being shown order the execution to be stayed."

The practice which obtains in England is, that if a party against whom judgment has been given, desires to obtain a stay of execution pending an intended appeal, he applies in the first instance to the Judge who tried the case except under special circumstances.

Further, the application must be made without unreasonable delay; that is provided by clause (b) of sub rule (3) of Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, viz, that the application has been made without unreasonable delay." Apart from the rule, it must be obvious that that is a wise and escential direction, the application should be made to the learned Judge who tried the case at a time when he still has the material facts in his mind. In the present case the judgment was delivered on the 22nd of March by Mr. Justice Rankin, but the application for stay of execution was not made until the 14th of April to Mr. Justice Greaves.

In future the practice which I have indicated as to an application for stay of execution on the Original Side pending an intended appeal (I limit my remarks to such an application) should be followed, viz, that the application for stay must ordinarily be made to the Judge who tried the case, and the application must be made without nurseson able delay. It may be that in an exceptional case and for special reasons it will be necessary to apply to a Judge other than the Judge who tried the case, but

ordinate Judge, Second Clase, Ferozepore, dated the 18th April 1916.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant. Mr. S. K. Mukerii, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiffs in this care Banking are the National Company, Amritsar, and the principal defendant is Bhai Chanda Singh, a Pleader of Ferozepore. The second defendant, namely, the National Insurance and Banking Company, is only a proforma defendant. Bhai Chanda Singh applied to defendant No. 2 for a loar, and a reference to his application shows that in the column showing what security was offered, Bhai Chanda Singh stated the security as "personal scentity on a hundi payable after three monthe." The application was referred by the Manager of the National Insurance and Banking Company to the local Directors who sanctioned the loan, and, accordingly, the Bank paid the defendant Re. 2,200 less Rs. 44 deducted as interest in advance for three months. This payment was made on the 25th August 1913 and Bhai Chanda Singh thumb-marked the Bank Memorandum (see Exhibit P. 3). The same day Bhai Chanda Singh executed a hundi promissing to pay the Bank the sum of Rs. 2,200 after ninety days. The National Insurance and Banking Company subsequently assigned their elaim to the National Banking Company, Amrilear, who at first sued on the hundi, but finding that this suit would fail by reason of the hundi being insufficiently stamped, the plaintiffs put in an amended plaint in which they claimed simply to recover the money advanced with interest. The lower Courts having decreed the claim. Bhai Chanda Singh appeals to this Court, and on his behalf various pleas have been raised. We do not propose to deal with all those pleas as we opinion that the appeal can be decided merely with reference to one plea, which is as follows :--

On behalf of the appellant it is urged that the loan transaction was incorporated in the hundi, that the hundi is the only legal basis of the suit; that the hundi it elf is inadmissible for want of sufficient stamp, and that other evidence of the transaction is barred under section 91 of the Evidence Act. The learned District Judge holds that there was a separate transaction independent of CHANDA SINGS U. AMRITGAR BANKING COMPANY.

the execution of the hundi, and that the contract was not embodied at once in the hundi. The judgment proceeds: "Mohan Lal the Munshi of defendant, states that a vousher was only signed when the money was advanced and that no hundi was executed as no hundi paper was available. Ram Lal, another Munshi of the defendant, went on! and obtained stamp-paper and then sent the hundi to the ereditor. There was thus a transaction altogether separable from the execution of the hundi." We are quite prepared to accept the learned Judge's findings as to facts, but, taking the facts to be as stated by him, are unable to find that there was more than one contract between the parties. On the facts as found by the learned District Judge it was simply a case of a loan being grant. ed on the security of a hundi; the execution of the hundi being, however, postponed for certain reasons till a short time after the money had actually been paid to The original plaint defendant. recites that the defendant took the money and wrote a hundi. The amended plaint states that the defendant took the money on a voucher and promised to give a hundi and wrote and sent the hundi the same day. The voucher or memorandum itself contains no promise to pay and the defendant's application for a loan in which, as already stated, he spoke of a hundi as the security to be offered for the loan, leaves no doubt whatever that the agreement between the parties from the beginning was that the money should be advanced on the security of a hundi. In fact, the learned District Judge does not find otherwise. All that he says is that the contract was not embodied at once in the hundi and that thus there was a separate transaction independent of the execution of the hundi. Taking it as correct that the money was first paid and the hundi executed later on in the day, we are still unable to hold that there were two contracts and that the money was not advanced on the security of the hundi.

On behalf of the respondents it has been argued before us that the hundi was subsequently offered merely as a collaterel security. Now, had the case been that the money had been first advanced on the defendant's personal responsibility and that a subsequent demand for better security had been made and the hundi then executed, doubt there would have been two different contracts between the parties, but as it is, we are quite unable to hold that there were any separate cantracts. We have been referred to Sheo Das v. Kanhaya Lal (1). There it was laid down that though, in certain cases, where a negotiable instrument, taken on assount of a pre existing debt, is inadmissible in evidence, the creditor may sue for the original consideration, yet, when the original cause of action is the instrument itself, and does not exist independently of it, the plaintiff cannot sue except upon the instrument. A similar ruling is Bakshi Ram Labhaya v. Kakaram (2), which lays down that whether there is a cause of action independent of the instrument upon which independent evidence may be given. depends upon the question whether plaintiff ean allege any contract as the basis of his suit which is not the contract reduced to the form of a document. See also Ganga Rom v. Amir Chand (3). A different view has no doubt been held in an Allababad decision published as Baij Nath Das v. Salig Ram (4), but in Civil Appeal No. 2865 of 1916 a Division Bench of this Court has refused to follow the Allahabad roling, and has adhered to the rulings of this Court, already referred to, and we have no hesitation in doing the same. There was in the present case no cause of action independent of the hundi, for it is clear that the mocey, even though advanced a short time before the actual execution of the hundi, was advanced on the security of the hundi and that the agreement between the parties was that the loan should be made in consideration of the hundi. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs have no sause of action independent of the hundi and as the hundi evidence inadmissible in section 91 of the Evidence Act forbids secondary evidence, the plaintiffs must fail.

We accept the appeal and, reversing the decisions of the lower Courts, we dismiss

versus

LACHMESHWAR PRASAD AND OTARRS-PLAINTIPPS-RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage-Bale-deed executed subsequently in favour of mortgagee, effect of, on mortgage.

On 18th June 1908, G. S. executed a mortgage-deed in respect of five items of property in favour of L. P., and on the 25th August 1914 he executed a sale-deed in respect of this property in favour of B.P., the father of L. P., both living together as members of a joint family, and left in deposit with BP a sum sufficient to discharge the mortgage-debt. Previous to the sale-deed, however, on the 20th August 1914, three items of property comprised in the foregoing deeds were sold in execution of a simple money-decree against G. S., the purchasers purchasing the equity of redemption subject to the mortgage of 18th June 1908, L. P. brought the present suit on that mortgage:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable as the mortgage-deed of 18th June 1903 had been completely discharged by the execution of the sale-deed of 25th August 1914. [p. 204, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Pilibhit.

Mr. N. O. Vaish, for the Appellant. Mesers, Harnandan Frasad and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by the respondent, Lachmeshwar Prasad, on a mortgage deed of the 18th of June 1908. The defendants were Gokaran Singh, the mortgagor under the said deed, Bhola Singh and Lachman Prasad, impleaded as subsequent purchasers of a portion of the mortgaged property. The deed in question was for a sum of Rs. 7,000, interest to run at 15 per cent. per annum, compoundable with eix monthly rests. Five items of property were bypothecated. In the third paragraph of the plaint it is stated that Bhairon Prasad, father of the plaintiff and a member of the same joint family, had subsequently acquired the equity of redemption in respect of two out of the five items of property. The plaintiff admits that the integrity of the mortgage had thereby been broken up. so that he is only entitled to claim proportionate amount of the mortgage-money against a proportionale amount of the security. He then submits an account showing that the sum due under the mortgage deed amounted on the date of the suit to Rs. 17,000. Thie, by a sum in proportion based upon a valuation of the five items of mortgaged property, he proceeds to apportion follows:-

Rs. 11,820.4.0 chargeable on the two items of property of which his father has become the purchaser.

Re, 5,179-12-0 chargeable against the three remaining items of property, which have, as a matter of fact, been purchased by the second and third defendants under circumstances to be presently noted.

Inasmuch as the market value of these properties is now less than the sum due from them under the mertgage, the plaintiff limits his claim to a sum of Rs. 4,000. The suit was contested by the third defendant, Lachman Pracad, who is the appellant now in this Court. The original mertgagor had no longer any further interest in the matter and apparently the other transferee, Bhola Singh, did not eccaider the property purshased by him of sufficient value to make it worth his while to contest the suit. Lashman Prasad pleaded, in effect, that the mortgage deed of the 18th of June 1908 had been completely discharged under the terms of a subsequent sale-deed of the 25th of August 1914. He made sundry allegations of bad faith against the plaintiff, or the plaintiff's father, and raised various affecting the merits questions which bave dispute not been gore The question main into. the pleadings, and the only one with which we are concerned here, is whether mortgage deed in suit was or was not discharged by a sale-deed of the 25th of August 1914. We have had to consider LACHMAN PRAS.D D. L.C. MESHWAR PRASAD.

the terms of that sale-deed earefully. It was by Gokaran Singh, the original mortgagor, in favour of Bhairon Prasad, who is described in the plaint as the father of the plaintiff, living jointly with him. The property consisted of all the five items envered by the mortgage-deed of June the 18th, 1908, and certain other properties besides. The consideration was stated at Rs. 30,000. Of this only Rs. 950 were actually paid to the vendor. A sum of Rs. 3,566 was left in the hands of the vendee Bhairon Prasad in full satisfaction of a decree held by him against the vandor Gokaran Singh. There remained a large item of Rs. 25,483, in respect of which it is stated that it is left in deposit with the vendes to discharge three previous mortgage bonds. One is this bond of June the 18th, 1905, which it is now sought to put in suit, and the other two are bonds in favour of Jagdamba Prasad, own brother of Bhairon Prasad. It so happened that at or about the time when this sale. deed was executed, certain properties bylonging to Gokaran Singh were under attachment in execution of simple money decrees. The austion-sale astually took place on the 20th of August 1914 five days prior to the execution of this saledeed. At this austion-sale three of the items of property comprised both in the mortgage-feed of June the 18th, 1908, and in the sale deed of August the 25th. 1914, were purchased by certain austion. purchasers, including the defendant appellant Lachman Prasad. These persons, no donbt, bid for and purchased the equity of redemption subject to the mortgage of June the 18th, 1908, which no one suggests to have been discharged before the 10th of August 1914, the date of the austion-sale. As the first Court has rightly remarked, Luchman Prasad, defendant, will be somewhat fortunate if the result of this litigation is to leave him in possession of the item or items of property purchased by him, without his having to contribute any portion of the mortgage debt. The question, however, is whether the present suit as brought is maintainable. The Trial Court held that the mortgage deed of June the 18th, 1908, had been completely discharged ly the execution of the sais-deed of August the 25th, 1914, so that no suit could be maintained upon its basis. The learned District Judge in appeal has reversed this finding. He puts the point somewhat suriously; that is to say, be records a finding that the sale deed of the 25th of August 1914 does not bar the present suit. We can only understand him to have found that the mortgage in suit was not discharged, or, at any rate, was not completely discharged, by the aforesaid sale deed. On this finding the lower Ap. pellate Court has remanded the suit to the Court of first instance in order that a variety of other issues raised by the plead. ings may be gone into. The appeal before us being against the order of remand, we have simply to determine the question on which the two Courts below have differed. It is to he noise at ones that, for the purposes of argument, we have to treat the plaintiff Luchmeshwar Prasad and his father Bhairon Prasad as virtually one and the same person. This is, in substance, the position taken up by the plaintiff himself in the third paragraph of the plaint, to which we have referred, and the question has been disoursed on this basis in both the Coarts below. If Lashmeshwar Prayad, the mort. gagee under the deed of June the 18th, 1908, were a person totally unsonnected with Bhairon Prasad, the vendes under the deed of August the 25th, 1914, it is obvious that other considerations would necessarily arise. Under existing circumstances, when Bhairon Prasad covenanted to retain in his own hands out of the total purchase money of Rs. 30,000 a sum estimated as sufficient to pay off the mortgage of Jane the 18th, 1905, in favour of his own son, it seems to us that the Trial Court was right in holding that the said mortgage was thereby paid off and extinguished. No question would have arisen whatspever, had it not been for the fast that the equity of redemption with regard to the less important items of the mortgaged property had been put up for sile foar days before the execution of the sale-dead of August the 25th, 1914. To this extent no dont Biairon Prasad failed to reneire the fall consideration for which he had stipulated in return for the Rs. 30,000 sat forth as the parchase money under the sale deed, The conlingency was contemplated by the deed itself and a remedy

BHAGWAN BARBSE SINGH U. MANRIJI KUNWAR. provided in the event of its turning out that the vendor was unable to convey a good title in respect of the whole of the property purporting to be sold. Bhairon Prasad has elected not to avail himself of this remedy but to set up the claim that, in consequence of this partial failure of consideration, he himself has only partially discharged the debt due under the mortgage of June the 18th, 1903, and is entitled to maintain a suit for the balance. In argument before us cases have been quoted, such as that of Har Chandi Lal v. Sheorai Singh (1) and Ram Kishan Das v. Fakir Chana (2), in which questions arose as to the extinguishing of a prior mortgage on the execution of a subsequent mortgage. The former of the two sases was, on the face of it, a very peculiar The decision eventually arrived at was that the later covenant of mortgage which was pleaded as baving discharged an earlier mortgage, was wholly void and inoperative so far as that earlier mortgage was concerned, because the contract had been entered into with a person who bad no consern whatever in the mortgage property and no right to deal with the same. It seems to us that the case is altogether a different one from that now before us. In our opinion the Trial Court took the right view. Bhairon Prasad dicsharged the mortgage of the 18th of June 1:03, when he accepted the sale-deed of the 25th of August, 1914 in his own favour. There was a partial failure of sonsideration under that deed and for this an appropiate remedy was provided. The fact that Bhairon Prasad has passed over that remedy and has thought it more profitable to elaim to set up the mortgage of June the 18th, 1908, with its heavy rate of interest, cannot now affect the question whether the mortgage was or was not discharged by the execution of the sale deed.

We, therefore, set aside the order under appeal and restore the decree of the first

Mr. Rudra Datt Sinha, for the Appellant. Mr. Ghulam Husain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two Courts below have found against the plaintiff on the question of law that his suit for declaration in the Civil Court was time barred under the provisions of Article 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. He failed to sjeet the defendant from a certain area of land in the Revenue Court where it was held that the defendant had rights in the land higher than those of a tenant. The final decision in the litigation was passed on the 10th of January 1913 by the Board of Revenue and the present cuit by the plaintiff

for a declaration that the defendant had no under-proprietary rights in the land was instituted on the 6th of June 1919. On these facts the plaintiff's suit was clearly time barred. He pleaded that it was within limitation on the ground that the right to sue accrued to him on 7th of June 1913 when an application of his to the Board of Revenue for a review of the judgment, dated 10th of January 1913, was dismissed. The real question at issue is one of fact whether by that application the matter in dispute between him and the defendant was re opened in the Revenue Courts or not. A review of judgment is not an ordinary process and does not of necessity ra-open questions already decided between the parties to a suit in which judgment was pronounced. matter in issue is only re-opened when the application for review is ascepted. In that respect an application for review differs from a petition in appeal. A petition in appeal of necessity re-opens in a Court of higher jurisdiction matters decided by a Court of lower jurisdiction, An application for review. on the other hand, does not of necessity by the mere fact of its being filed, re-open questions settled between the parties by the same Court. The question whether an application for review will give a fresh starting time for limitation or not cannot be decided in the abstract but must depend on the facts of every case. If the application for review is not assepted and the Court refuses to re open the matter no fresh starting point will be obtained by the applicant for the purposes of limitation. The order of the Senior Member of the Board of the 7th of Jone 1913 on the application for the review of the Board's judgment was "I desline to re-open the ease." Obviously, then, the application for review did not lead to a re-opening of the questions at issue between the parties. The decision of the 10th of January 1913 was the one which decided the points in issue between the parties and was not in any way affected by the application for review. That date started the period of limitation against the plaintiff and he did not obtain any privilege subsequently of starting the period of limitation from a later date. The decision of a Judge of this Court in Bans Gopal v. Shaheada Basdeo Singh (1) was

JUDGMENT.—This very ancient appeal has come up before us to day after having been in the Court for $4\frac{1}{2}$ years.

The matter involved is a very simple one and the decision of the appeal need not occupy us very long.

The appellants here were plaintiffs in the Court below and the suit they brought was for redemption of a mortgage executed on the 25th of May 1907. That mortgage was executed by two persons, Babu Nandan Pat and his brother's wife, Musammat Janki.

It is admitted that the plaintiffs in the present suit are subsequent mortgagees of the same property holding from the same mortgagors, and it was in their character as subsequent mortgagees that they elaimed their right to redeem this mortgage.

Assording to the deed executed on the 25th of May 1907 a loan of Rs. 13,350 was advanced to the mortgagors by nine persons. The share of each of these joint mortgagees in the mortgage money is set out in a schedule attached to the deed. The security which the mortgagors offered for the loan was a share in a village which amounted to three appas ten pies and out of this share specific portions were made security in favour of each of the nine mortgagees whose names are mentioned in the deed.

It was expressly provided in the mortgage-deed that when the mortgagors came to redeem, the mortgage-money should be paid in a lump sum and all redemption proceedings should be taken at onee.

The learned Subordinate Judge in this ease has some to the conclusion that the soit as framed was not maintainable. His view of the transaction dated the 25th of May 1907 is, that it amounts to nine separate mortgages and that one suit for the redemption of all these mcrtgages is not maintainable.

On the face of it, this decision is clearly erroneous. There was a loan advanced by nine separate mortgagees in specific shares, and we know of no impediment in law to the redemption of such a mortgage by one suit framed in the manner in which the present suit was framed. The decree of the Court below sannot stand and must be reversed.

We allow the appeal, set aside the deeree of the Court below and send back the case to the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur for decision on the merits. It is to be hoped that, after all this enormous delay, this case will be brought there to a speedy conclusion.

The decree of the Court below is so obviously wrong that whatever the result in that Court may be, the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to have their costs here, including fees of the higher scale.

A suit for recovery of arrears of kattubadi is a suit of a small cause nature, and where it is under Rs. £00 in value no second appeal lies.

Where a Small Cause Court suit is tried on the Original Side and decreed and on appeal the decree is confirmed no equity arises in the defendant's favour to have the appellate decree set aside in revision by a High Court and get the case re-tried in a less formal manner as a Small Cause Court suit.

JUDGMENT.—This suit to recover arrears of Kattubadi of less than Rs. 500 in amount is of a small cause nature and no second appeal lies. See Mullapudi Balakrishnayya v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rau (3).

The appellants' Vakil asks us to hold that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit on the Original Side seeing that under section 33, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), he is deemed to be a different Court from the same Court exercising small cause jurisdiction and suggests that we should interfere in revision and send the suit back for re trial on the Small Cause Side.

In this case, unlikes the cases dealt with in Kollipara Sectaraty v. Kankipaty Subbaya Da lateinghi (1)and ٧. Lhachar Hamir Mon (2), there was no reversal of the first Court's decree in appeal, and, therefore, no equity arises in the defendant's favour, to have the lower Appellate Court's decree set aside and get the case re-tried by the same Original Court in a less formal manner than it has already tried We must deeline to interfere in the manner suggested, seeing that the defendant has not been prejudiced by the course adopted by the District Munsif.

Where by mistake the plaint in a suit for redemption wrongly describes the property as being situated in one village, whereas it is really situated in another, the Court should, on an application being made, allow the plaint to be amended, as such amendment would in no way alter the plaintiff's cause of action which was the non-payment of the mortgage-money, and the mere fact of a misdescription of the property, would not alter that cause of action. [p. 209, col. 1.]

Mr. N. O. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT .- In our opinion this appeal plaintiff appellant muet succeed. The brought the suit on the basis of a mortgage, but by a misdescription in the plaint he put the share bypothecated as being situated in the village Jogia, although it was really situated in the village Udaipur. defendants are the mortgagors and descendants. The mortgagor did not defend the claim but his descendants raised the usual pleas that the bond was without consideration and was excented without any legal necessity. They also contested the factum of execution by the mortgagor. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court on the finding that no legal necessity for the transfer had been made out. On appeal, however, a fresh complication arose. After the plaintiff appellant's argument was heard the case was adjourned at the respondents' instance for a few days. In the meanwhile, it was discovered that, although the property which was really mortgaged was situated in Udaipur, the plaintiff in fact described it as being situated in Jogia. What really bappered was that the money berrowed under the bypothesation bond in suit was for the purpose of purchasing a certain share in Jogia for the benefit of the joint family, and perhaps that is how the confusion arcre. Anyhow, the plaintiff applied to the lower Appellate Court for amendment by substituting the name of the correct village in place of the wrong one. The learned Judge, relying on the cases of Balkaran Upodhya v. Gaya Din Balwar (1), and Muhammad Sadiq v. Abdul Mejid (2), has disallowed the application and has dismissed the appeal. We think the Judge of the Court below was not justified in disallowing the application for amendment. Amendments of elerical mistakes have been allowed even in second appeals and this was eminently a case in which the plaintiff should not have been punished by dismissal of his suit simply because the Pleader's clark who wrote the plaint had committed a clerical error. The mortgage in suit was filed along with the plaint and showed quite clearly what the property really mortgaged was. Under these eircumstances, the amendment prayed for should have been allowed. This amendment would be in no way altering the cause of action of the plaintiff. The cause of action was the non payment of the mortgage and the mere fact that a misdessription of the property srept into the plaint does not alter the cause of action. We think the Court below was wrong in thinking that it had no power to allow the amendment. We allow the application for amendment of the plaint, dated the 5th of February 1920. We allow the appeal, set saide the decrees of the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of Grat inetance through the lower Appellate Court with directions to restore it to its original number and try and dispose of it assording to law. The defendants respondents will be entitled to their costs of this litigation up to date and the appellant will pay bis own costs of this appeal. The remaining costs incurred by the appellant will be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT.-This is an application by an Attorney under rule 59, Chapter XXXVIII. of the High Court Roles, for an order against his olient for payment of the sums amounting to Rs. 531-14 0 allowed on taxa. tion of four bills of costs in respect of non-contentious business. It appears that the Attorney also acted for the client in several other proceedings, being certain execution eases in one of which a considerable sum of money was recovered by the Attorney and was put into his hand on behalf of his elient. Differeness of opinion arose between the parties as to whather the particular or active lien of a Solicitor in respect of the sum of money es resieved was available for his costs in all or in only one of the execution matters, but by an order obtained from Mr. Justies Buskland the Attorney has susseed. ed in having it declared that his partienlar or active lien extends to all these contentious proceedings, had elapsed eines the completion of the work comprised in each of the four bills of easts. The order of Mr. Jastice Brokland, as I construe it, merely directed that these bills of sosts should be taxed and that any moneys over and above the amount which in any event would be sufficient to satisfy the Attorney's slaim should be re-paid by the Attorney to the elient at once. It in no way decided bills of sosts were in whether these fast due from the elient to the Attorney or not, but it did deelare that to the extent to which these bills, when taxed, were due and payable the Attorney should have a right to a set off. In addition to the particular or active lien which an Attorney has upon monies which have been recovered in a suit, the Attorney has a general or rassive or retaining lien upon all moveables, deeds, documents, and so forth that come into his hands unless they come for a specific purpose which would be inconsistent with the right of retainer; but Mr. Justice Backland in this case has deficitely decided, as appears more clearly from his judgment than from the form of the order, that with regard to the four bills of easts in question, the Attorney has not got the right to exercise any lien.

Now, the law on the subject, so far as it is necessary to state it, stands thus. By section 28 of the Limitation Act of 1908 it is provided that 'on the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished"; but in the case of a personal action for a debt limitation merely bers the plaintiff from having the particular remedy by way of suit and does not extinguish the debt. Thue, if the Attorney has any form of lien upon property in respect of his bills of costs he can exercise that lien not withstanding that, by the terms of the Limitation Act, he could not bring a suit. The next proposition of law which is of some importance is this, that so far as the position of a defendant asserting a right of set off is concerned, the limita. tion bar does apply to him. It applies to him as if he were bringing an independent suit of his own, the only difference being that, where he is defending bimself by way of set off, if his elaim was not barred at the time of the issue of the plaint, he may prosecute a ret-off even although the time may have elapsed before his filing, say, a written statement elaiming the set-off. But with that exception as to the terminus ad quem of the period of time, it is the law in India as well as in England that limitation applies to a set-off. Now, in this ease, the question of passive lien or right of retainer having been disposed of by Justice Buckland's judgment and the right of set-off being subject to the principle of limitation, it is or may be a matter of real importance whether, under rule 59. I can make an order against the client for payment.

On the affidavits, which are very short, there is, in essential matters, no substantial dispute, the contention expends itself upon things which matter little now. The retainer, the fact that the work was done, and the proper charges therefor are all beyond dispute.

As regards one of the bills, an objection is mentioned in the Attorney's own affidavit. It refers to the bill for Rs. 287 in the matter of the Landors cetate. It. was not apparently taken before Mr. Justice Backland but is one of the objections mentioned or aired before the Taxing Officer. The objection is, that by the terms of the letter of retainer in this particular matter the Attorney was to look for his costs not to his client the prospective mortgagee, but to the prospective borrower or mortgagor. If any real case of this sort was disclosed, I should except this particular bill from my order, but on the terms of the latter it is as plain as possible that there is no foundation for the contention that the Attorney was to act upon the footing that his elient should not be liable for costs as distinct from the usual arrangement that the mortgagor shall pay the mortgagee's costs incidental to the loan. The letter has been set out in the Attorney's affidavit. The affidavit in answer says merely this- "I am advised that the contention of the Raja that the bill of costs re Landora estate is not payable by him is valid." I have no facts at all before me upon which I can be satisfied that there is in this matter any bong file or substantial dispute as to the existence or non-existence of a spasial bargain treen the Attorney and the slient, where do I find it stated that on such and such a date a verbal bargain was made to that effec; nowhere do I find in the affidavit of the respondent a case whose seriousness or bona fides can be investigat. ed to the effect that this Attorney was to act for the lender but was to look entirely to the borrower for these coats. There is no doubt, moreover, that the transaction fell through and neither the letter nor any. thing else in evidence discloses any at all for so extraordinary a bargain as that the Attorney should do work for a lender upon the terms that, even if the losn went off, the lender should not be answerable for his own costs. There is, in my opinion, no matter for enquiry; no matter which needs to be elusidated in a suit; the jurisdiction of the Court under the rale is not ousted by a mere statement from the lip; outwards disclosing a willingness on the part of the cilent to sontend something for which he can indicate no concrete case.

The bills of sosts were taxed and the Attorney retained a certain amount and refunded the surplus stating at the time to the elient that when the Jourt reassembled after the vacation he make an application for the purpose determining whether he was entitled pay himself out of the moneys so retained, The first objection with which the Attor ney is met is that he cannot get an order for payment under rule 59 basause he has already been paid. In my opinion there is no substance in that objection more particularly having regard to the fact that by his letters the Attorney has retained the moneys earefully setting out that he will apply to subordinate his right. How little substance there is in that objection may, I think, be clearly seen by considering it from the point of view of the client. The client claims that the money is his, that there is no debt, and that nothing the Attorney ean do will entitle him to appropriate that fund. Claiming that, he cannot be heard to say that an order for payment eannot be made against him because the Attorney has already been paid.

I some now to the question which arises by reason of the lapse of time between the completion of the work and the reseipt by the Attorney of the money. It is alleged by the Attorney in his affidavit that from time to time he had made out his bills of costs in respect of the various cases and matters including the four bills now in question and that he had made them over to his elient for examination. "I had also from time time asked Raja Narendra Lal Khan to pay me the said costs including those mentioned in the second paragraph and the said Raja Narendra Lal Khan had on several occasions personally requested me that I should wait until his dues should be realised in the said execu. tion cases and should take my costs out of the monies so realised, and in compliance with such request I did not take any steps to enforce payment of my said easts." The answer to that and the only answer. in the affidavit of Ramrati Mukherjee, the agent of the client, is,-"I admit that the said Babu Hirendra Nath Dutt made over certain untaxed bill; but have no knowledge that the said Raja Narendra Lal Khan personally requested him to wait for pay-, ment until his dues in the execution case be realised or that the said Raja suggested that the costs of the said Baba Hirendra. nath Dutt should be deducted from the costs when realised." In that state of affairs, there is no denial, no statement even, that the elient had informed the deponent that the statement of the Attorney, upon oath was untrue. I feel, therefore, both entitled and obliged to set upon the footing of its truth.

The first question which arises, therefore, is, whether upon uncontradicted matter there is not an answer to any objection based upon limitation. In my opinion the evidence of the Attorney is good and sufficient evidence of a verbal promise on the part of the client, a promise given for consideration to pay the Attorney when money was recovered in the execution cases. This view agrees with a principle whose illustrations are well known. "A promise to guarantee a debt if the creditor will give time to the principal debtor is in the first instance an offer. It becomes a binding promise when the condition of giving a specified time or a reasonable time has been performed" (Pollock on Contracts, 7th Edition, page 202). I see no answer upon the present evidence to this contention, but Mr. Pagh has contended that, if there is any spesial bargain of the sort, rule 59 cannot be applied. In my opinion, unless the special bargain is a matter of dispute, the rule is in no way inapplicable. It says nothing about the Attorney's retainer or about an original or subsequent bargain. The test ir, whether there are in the end only questions quiring to be elasidated in a suit. If not, the only other condition is that the application shall be one for payment of the amount of a taxed bill of costs.

On this view, it is unnecessary for me to consider the somewhat difficult questions that have been discussed upon the assumption that if the Attorney were to bring a suit for the recovery of this money, he would be debarred by the Limitation Act, but I will deal shortly, as an alternative method of disposing of this application, with the question on that footing.

It has been held by authority in this Court, following authority in the Bombay Court, that under the rule in question neither Article 84 nor Article 181 of the Limitation Act applies. Article 84 dces not apply, because the proceeding is not a suit. Article 121 does not apply, as Mr. Pagh for the respondent is constrained by the dseisions to admit, because this applieation is not an application contemplated by the Civil Procedure Code. The result is that rule 59 is technically free from any Statute of Limitation. This matter having been drawn to the attention of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in this Court, in the ease of Lakhimoni Dassi v. Dicijendra Nath Mukher ee (1), that learned Judge makes this observation:

"If there is no special rule of limitation, discretion has to be executed in allowing such applications which are of a summary nature. The rule itself provides for an alternative relief, viz, relief by suit, and cuch a suit can only be instituted within the time allowed under Article 84 of the Limitation Act and it, therefore, seems to me that in exercising discretion with regard to such applications, when a question of lapse of time is raised, it should be considered whether the time allowed by Article 84 ought not to be the time limit."

I observe that the learned Judge there used very guarded language and as his observation is only obiter this unnatural. 1 do not feel quite certain whether the inclination of his opinion was that the time limit should be imposed in all cases by an analogy drawn from Article 84 or that in every case it was a question to be considered as a matter of discretion upon the special facts. In any case, Mr. Pugh for the respondent contends that any discretion, in order to be sound, must be so restricted and controlled by analogy from the Limitation Act; and he adds the further contention that, save on this sondition, rule 59 of Chapter XXXVIII of the Rules of this Court is ultra vires. It appears that the substance of the Rule was introduced into this Court in 1905 from the rules of the Bombay Court which have contained this provision for over 40 years. It must be admitted also that Mr. Pogh has against him on both the contentions just mentioned the case of Wadia, Gandhy & Co. v. Furshotam Sivis (2), and a very considerable body of jadicial opinion therein cited. As to the rule being ultra vires I think it is either valid or invalid as it stands: it is not conditionally valid or conditionally invalid. I think it impossible to hold that, because the Limitation Act sets a limit only to suits and applications contemplated by the Civil Procedure Code and has provided none for other applications, therefore the High Court's power under its Charter to make rules to regulate proceedings can be exercised by providing special forms of opportunities of making applieations to the Court. There is nothing in the case of Chunilal Jethabhai v. Dhayabhai Amulakh (3), which warrants and countenances this contention. It was concerned with an appeal as to which specific provision had been made by the Limitation Ast.

The contention that under rule 59 any discretion, in order to be right, must be exercised only within the limits set by analogy from Artisle 84 is, I think, much more serious. One naturally assumes that the intention of the rule was not to enlarge the rights of any parties but to enable a more summary remedy to be given in cases which did not require the more elaborate procedure of a suit. bas, however, to be observed that when this rule was borrowed from Bombay, decisions in Bombay had for a considerable time been to the effect that the Limitation Act did not narrow what the Court under this rule ought to do. The case already sited, and the cases therein relied on, show that the Bombay High Court under this rule, have made orders either without enquiring into the question of limitation though raised, or in spite of the knowledge that limitation would have barred a suit. Farther, and apart from these cases, in the ease of Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (4), a Division Bench of this Court dealt with an application which could be regarded either as made under a rule of the Court which was technically free from any statutory limitation or as made under section 558 of the old Code which attracted Article 168 of the Limitation Act. The application was allowed though the matter was purely discretionary in nature and although under the Code it would have been barred. I do not think it open to me on the authorities to lay down an abstract or a priori rule to the effect that it is necessarily wrong to exereise this discretion in a case where a suit sould not susseed; any such rule must be laid down, if at all, by a higher tribunal. I think my discretion is to be exercised in the present state of the authorities upon the well known lines and in the well-established manner on the partionlar facts of each case. The Limitation Act", as was said in a case already cited [Chunilal Jethabhai v. Dahyabhai Amulakh (3)], "being an Act of a restrictive character must be strictly construed."

what I have said already that there is a special state of fasts strikingly in favour of the applicant. On an application such as this, I think it makes all the difference when a question of lapse of time is raised whether the Court is dealing with a position in which the facts are not really in controversy or with a matter as to which real and substantial dispute upon the facts is shown. If, upon examination, it appears that a real dispute exists as to facts, then not only would a suit be a safer form of remedy for other reasons but the principle of limitation is itself a highly desirable safeguard. Here, however, that is not so, and a very strong appeal to have the Court's discretion exercised in his favour is made by an Attorney who can show without serious challenge such a scurse of conduct on his client's part as I have here to deal with. The Statutes of Limitation, still less the principle of limitation, are not intended as an aid to unecnecionable conduct though necessarily in securing other ends they afford scope for this. In this case, I can see no other end to be secured, because I think the more summary remedy can be given safely upon unchallenged facts. The debt subsists; its justice is unimpeachable; the appeal to the analogy of Article 84 is on the unchallenged evidence of the Attorney made in circumstances which render it not merely shabby but discreditable. In that state of affairs, if it be a matter of discretion, I answer that if I have the power I have the will. I must be shown that statutory provision or resognised judicial principle forbids, J. voush judicial discretion tcaaso extending by analogy a restrictive Statute in sacrifice of the marits of the oase.

The application succeeds with costs.

The provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act do not apply so as to govern or affect the rights of a land-holder against his tenant enforceable by means of any suit or proceeding under the Agra Tenancy Act, nor do they bar a proceeding in execution of a decree before a Revenue Court against a tenant who subsequent to the decree is adjudicated an insolvent. The paincipal respondent, the plaintiff in the suit, is a landholder who on various dates between the 7th of March and the 29th of March 1911 had obtained from a Revenue Court decrees for arrears of rent against the aforesaid Chatar Singh. After the latter had been adjudicated an insolvent, this decree-holder applied to the Insolvency Court, estensibly under the provisions of section 60 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, No. 111 of 1907, for the leave of the Court to institute the present suit. The object of this suit is to challenge the validity of two deeds of transfer, dated the 10th of July 1.08 and the 16th of May 1910, respectively, whereby Chatar Singh more than two years prior to his insolvency, had purport. ed to transfer immoveable property in favour of his wife and his minor son. The suit was resisted upon various grounds, but the particular point which has been principally argued before us was not taken in either of the Courts below, and the reason for this becomes obvious erough as we consider that point in detail. There were objections taken to the form of the suit and a plea of limitation was raised, but both the Courts balow have decided in favour of the plaintiff in respect of legal objections, as well as on the merits, and have granted him the decree for which he sought. Now, the desision of the lower Appellate Court in this case is dated December the 19th 1918. On the 4th of March 1921 a Full Bench of this Court pronounced its deeision in the case of Kalka Dos v. Gaj u Singh (i) in which the whole question of the relations between the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, constituted under the Local Tenancy Act, No. If of 1901, on the one hand, and the Courts acting urder the Provincial Incolverey Ast, No. III of 1907. was reconsidered and determined. There had been a previous decision of this Court, Raghubir Singh v. Ram Chandar (2), according to which a land-holder could not institute a suit for arrears of rent ander the provisions of the Tenancy Act against a tenant who had been adjudicated an insolvent. This was the precise point dealt with hy the Judges of this Court in the Full Banch on:e. They overrule the older decision and held that the Provincial Insolveney Act dil not apply at all so as to g vern or affect the rights of a land holder against his tenant, enforcible by means of any suit or proceeding under the Local Tenancy Act.

In the second appeal now before us the main argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellants has been based upon the principles laid down in this Fall Bench decision. It seemed to us obviously necessary to allow the point to be raised and argued. The question is one of jurisdiction, and it could not well have been raised in the Courts below in view of the state of the law as deelared by this Court prior to the Fall Bench decision of March the 4th, 1921. We are not prepared to dissent from or to eritieise the decision of the Fall Bench in Kalka Das v. Gaziu Singh (1). Assepting the law to be what is therein stated, it becomes beyond question that if the Provineial Insolveney Ast would not bar suit by a land holder against his tenant brought before a Revenue Court under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, neither sould it bar a prosseding in execution of a decree before such Court. The whole of the present action, therefore, has been misconceived. The proper remedy of the plaintiff-respondent was, in the first place, to take out execution of his decrees in the Revenue Court as against any property which he alleged to be the property of his judgment-debtor. present appellants, or either of them, had resisted the seizure of any such property on the ground that it belonged to them in virtue of a transfer made prior to the insolveney, a question would have been raised which the Execution Court could dealt with, in the first instance, and in respect of which either party aggricved by the desision of the Execution Court would have a right to seek a detarmination by means of a regular suit. The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought with the leave of the Court for the benefit, not of the plaintiff respondent alone, but of the Receiver and of the entire body of ereditors, For the reasons stated, it seems clear to us that the suit was entirely misconssived and not maintainable at all in its present form. We must, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decress of both the Courts below and direct that the suit be dismissed in its entirety. We order assordingly, but, under the siroumstances of the ease, we think it only just to direct that both parties bear their own costs in all three Courts.

Walsh, J.—I entirely agree, but having regard to the exceptional circumstances of the case and the miscarriage which appears to have resulted up to the present moment, I propose to say a few words with reference to the course which, it seems to me, is still open in law to remedy the misshief, and which, on the materials before us one ean of sourse say no more, I should be prepared to take if I were a Revenue Officer approached by the plaintiff for the appropriate remedy in spite of the serious lapse of time. Section 14 (2) of the Limitation bet provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the same party for the same relief, shall be excluded where such proseeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other sause of a like nature is unable to entertain it. On the facts as found in the lower Courts, the wife and the son in this case are in truth the same party as the insolvent and this Court is unable to entertain the suit by reason of jurisdiction. As the law stands, it is quite elear that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, strictly so called, and of the Insolvency Court, res. pestively, on the one hand, and of the Revenue Court, on the other, are mutually exelusive. A decree-holder, who is the landlord of an agricultural tenancy to which the Agra Tenancy Act applies, is not a ereditor under the Provincial Insolveney Act in respect of his rent or desree. His deeree is not a provable debt. Those statements are the corollaries of the Fall Bench decision referred to by mg brother which was passed in March 1921.

Bat in this case the insolvent, who is the father of the minor transferes and the husband of the female transferes interests are attacked by this suit, was adjudisated insolvent in May 1913. On that date the decision which has been overruled, namely, Raghubir Singh v. Ram Chandar (2), which had been decided in Ostober 1911, stared the plaintiff in the face, and any member of the legal profession who had been consulted by the plaintiff,-having regard to the plaint in this suit and the difficulties of procedure one may fairly assume that the plaintiff was earefully advised, -calling himself a lawyer and paying any respect to the decisions of this Court, was bound to treat PARVATHI AMMAL C. BLAYAPERUMAL KONAR.

the law as set forth by that decision. The decision was as clear and emphatic upon the point as it was possible for a decision to be. It pointed out, erroneously as it now appears, that the Provincial Insclvency Aet prohibited any suit being brought against a person who is declared an insolvent. It went on to declare that a landlord was not a secured creditor, and that he was in exactly the same position as any other creditor and that he could only see's his remedy from the Insolvency Court. subject to any possible existing remedy by way of distress which the Insolvency Court might permit. Under those circumstances, an attempt by the present plaintiff to execute his decrees, or to have applied to the Revenue Court to act in the face of that decision. would have looked very much like an abuse of the process of the Court. He took, and in my opinion rightly took, the only step open to him under the circumstances. He applied to the Insolvency Court, which this Court had told him was the only Court which could entertain his slaim, and obtained the leave of the Insolvency Court to bring the very suit which we are now compelled to hold was misconseived. He framed a plaint with scrupplous care and accuracy and claimed reliefs earofully prepared according to the then Judge-made law, and for myself I do not besitate to say that if the decision in 1911 of this Court had not been overruled. that suit would have been, if established in fact, clearly maintainable. The result of the suit, so far se it went, was to establish a gross fraud in fast committed by the incolvent and his family upon the plaintiff and the other creditore, and to obtain from two Courts a decision in the plaintiff's favour which, it cannot be too often repeated, was justified by the then existing state of the decisions. It was only after the appeal which we are row disposing of was filed. that the Full Bench desision declared the law afresh and destroyed the whole founds. upon which the plaintiff's suit hed been based. It seems to me not only conscnent with justice, but appropriate to the intention of section 14, sub section (2) of the Limitation Act, if ever a care was appropriate to the terms of that ecotion, that the Revenue Court should corsider whe. ther under these cireumstances the plaintiff should not be allowed to seek a remedy of which he had been deprived by the decision of this Court.

ELAYAPERUMAL KONAR-RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1820), s. 7 (3)

"Will," meaning of—Court, power of, to appoint guardian of minor.

Inasmuch as the word 'Will' in section 7 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act occurs in intimate collocation with the words "or other instruments" it must be interpreted as meaning a written Will. [p. 217, col. 1]

An appointment of a testamentary guardian stands in the way of the appointment of a statutory guardian by the Court but in the case of an appointment of a guardian by an oral testament a Court can ignore the appointment and make statutory appointment of its own if it considers best in the interests of the minor. [p. 217, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in Original Petition No. 150 of 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Swaning dia Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The appellant was appointed guardian by an oral Will of the child's mother. She should be preferred to the respondent. The mother has devised the properties to the child. The District Judge should have enquired into this question. Section 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act is a statutory bar to the appointment.

Mesers. K. Jogannadha Aiyar and K. R. Rangaswani Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—
The word Will' in section 7 (3) refers to a written testament. The implication is elear from the words which follow 'or other instrument."
There is no bar to the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction to appoint a guardian where some one elee had been appointed under an oral Will.

RUKEA U. DAJIBA BHAU,

JUOGMENT .- The respondent in this case is the father of a minor girl and has, at his own request, been appointed statutory guardian of her person and property under Guardians and Wards Act. This order is appealed against by the child's maternal aunt who alleges that she was appointed guardian by an oral Will by the mother of the shild who is said to have bequeathed the prop erty in question to the shild. The Distriet Judge has not enquired into the fact of this appointment of the appellant and we think he is justified in refusing to do so provided he finds, as he seems to do, that the appointment of the father as guardian is for the benefit of the minor. Oar attention has been drawn to sections 6 and 7 of the Guardians and Wards Act and in particular to clause (3) of section 7 which says: "Where a guardian has been appointed by Will or other instrument or appointed or declared by the Court, an order under this section appointing or declaring another person to be guardian in his stead shall not be made until the powers of goardian appointed or deslared as aforesaid have ceased under the provisions of this Act." We think that the word "Will" in this sestion which occurs in such intimate colloeation with the words "or other instrument" must be interpreted as meaning a written Will; and it is only in such a case that the appointment of a testamentary guardian stands in the way of the appointment of a statutory guardian by the Court. But in other cases, that is to say, in the case of the appointment of a guardian by an oral tostament, it would seem to be open to the Court to ignore this appointment and make statutory appointment of its own if it considers best in the interests of the minor.

As regards the merits, we see no reason to differ from the view taken by the learned District Judge. The learned Vakil for the appellant has drawn our attention to an allegation by his elient that respondent—the father, dishonestly and fraudulently obtained a sale deed and a othi deed in his own name and not in that of the minor and has complained that the District Judge has not taken evidence on this allegation. There is nothing in the District Judge's order to indicate that any evidence was tendered hafore him and the allegation that the Judge refused to take evidence is denied in the counter-affidavit.

Lastly, our attention is drawn to the last statement of the District Judge's order dated 18th January 1921. "The respondent will deliver to the petitioner the whole of the minor's property which is in her possession." It is suggested that this order is not justified by any provisions of the Act. But, however this may be, this direction is not embodied in the final order of appointment which is now made the subject of appeal and we see no reason to concern ourselves with the question of its legality.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1903), s. 22, applicability of-Joinder of parties-Appeals-Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1933), O. I, r. 10, O. XLI, r. 20 - Party against whom no relief claimed, whether can be joined as respondent in appeal-Cross-objection, admission of, after 30 days-Notice.

Section 22 of the Limitation Act does not prescribe any period of limitation for the joinder of a party to a suit under section 32 of the Civil Procodure Code of 1882 which is rule 10 of Order I of Civil Procedure Code, 1903) or to an appeal under section 55) of the old Code (which is rule 20 of Order XLI of the new Code; and there is nothing to prevent such a joinder in either a suit or appeal even after it is barred by time. Section 23 of the Limitation Act applies to appeals as much as to suits in principle. But a suit in which a defendant is joined, after the period of limitation has expired, must necessarily be dismissed as against him. JUDGMENT .- On the death of one Ganga Bai the plaintiffs sued for possession of the im. moveable roperty that had been in her posses. sion. The first two defendants admittedly had no title whatever to the portion of the property recorded as theirs, which they seem to have held, if they held it at all, on behalf of the third and fourth defendants. The two latter maintained that they had a good title to the property in their possession but the finding was against them. In the course of their pleadings in a written statement filed on the 26th of July 1919 they alleged that they were not in actual possession of certain jungles on the estate, which had been leased prior to their coming into possession by Ganga Bai to one Dajiba Boau under a lease expiring in the following year 1920; they urged that, therefore, Dajiba Bhau was a necessary party to the suit and ought to be joined as a defendant.

(2) It is elear that Dajiba Bhan's presence in the suit as a party was no more necessary than that of the large number of other persons who held portions of the property as statutory tenants or lessees under Ganga Rai, and that the plea was taken on behalf of the third and fourth defendants only for the purpose of delaying matters and embarrassing the opposite party. The plaintiffs naturally resisted the joinder of Bhau strenuously, but the third and fourth defendants insisted on it and the learned Subordinate Judge ordered that he should be joined as the fifth defendant. decree of the Court ordered that the first four defendants should give the plaintiffs possession of all the property they elaimed with the exception of about 33 acres, in which it was ordered that they were to have joint possession with the third and fourth detendants. It was also ordered that the first tour defendants should pay their own costs and that the third and fourth should pay those of the plaintiff. The only order in the decree affecting the fifth defendant Dajiba Bhau is that the plaintiffs are to pay his costs.

(3) Against this decree the plaintiffs filed Civil Appeal No. 12 of 1920 and the third and fourth defendants filed Civil Appral No. 24 of 1920 in the Court of the District Judge. The plaintiffs made Dajiba Bhau & respondent to their appeal as well as the third and fourth defendants, but these two defendants in their appeal joined the plaintiff only as respondents. Very much the greater part of the plaintiffs' appeal was directed against the order that they were to pay the costs incurred by Dajiba Bhau. Only the last of their eight grounds of appeal has reference to the one other matter of which they complained, the retention of the and fourth defendants possession with them of a part of the land. The third and fourth defendants attacked the whole deeree and, in particular, they urged that "the lower Court ought to have held that Musammat Ganga Bai had no right to lease out the Parsadi of the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to Dajiba Bhau, defendant No. 5." This matter was entirely outside the case even with Dajiba Bhau joined as a party, but it is, if possible, even more outside the scope of an appeal to which Bhau was made a party Dajiba not at all.

(+) The general remarks of the learned Di-triet Judge in regard to the joining of Dajiba Bhau do not show much understanding of the situation and are contradictory in several places. They need not, bowever, be discussed. His decision is summed up in the following words: "Dajiba Bhau will be discharged from the suit. It is somewhat difficult to decide how his costs ought to be met. As, however, I think that plaintiffs ought to have some to know about his claim over the jungle and that the other defendants were not in possession thereof before they launched this suit I order that plaintiffs do pay balf of Dajiba's costs in the lower Court and that Dajiba bear the rest himself." In regard to the main claim against the third and fourth defendants certain modifications were made in the decree of the First Court. I do not think it necessary to set out any reasons for saying that the orders of both the lower Courts in regard to the payment of Dijiba Bhan's costs are wrong and that the third and fourth defendants ought to have been saddled with the whole of them, or for holding that the deeree of the lower Appellate Court would have to be altered to that extent in a properly instituted second appeal.

(5) The plaintiffs filed two separate second appeals against these two appellate decrees, as they were bound to do, making the third and fourth defendants respondents in their appeal in regard to the case itself and Dajiba Bhau the only respondent in their appeal in regard to his sosts. The latter is the appeal now under emeideration, the other having been decided in accordance with admissions made by both parties. In this appeal it was rointed out to the learned Pleader for the appellants that he ought to have made the third and fourth defendants parties if he wished to shift the responsibility for the half of Dajiba Bhan's costs that he had been ordered to pay from his own shoulders to theirs. He then applied to have them joined as respondents under rule 20 of Order XLI of the Civil Proesdure Code, and this was done, but it was long after the expiry of the period during which be could have filed an appeal against them. He explained that he was confused by having to file two separate appeals and made a mistage in the matter of the persone impleaded in each, which he urged ought to be considered a sufficient reason for admitting his appeal against the third and fourth defendants after time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, He added, however, that it was no part of his duty to see that Dajiba Bhau was paid his costs by some other person; it was Dajiba Bhan's own business to see to that and the plaintiffs are concerned only to show that they ought not to be made to pay them; at the same time, if the appellants can obtain a decree transferring the liability for the sosts to the shoulders of the third and fourth defeadants, they would prefer that to a decree merely exonerating themselves, as they appreciate the unfairness of making Dajiba Bhau pay even the half that he has already been ordered to pay, though naturally not to the extent of being willing to Day him themselves.

(6) For the third and fourth defendants it is of course pleaded that the appeal against them is barred by time. They were at first represented in this Court by the learned Counsel who appeared for Dajiba Bhau before they were joined, and he began by supporting this contention that the appeal against them was barred by time realised later however that if it was, Dajiha Bhan would have to pay his own costs, as it was impossible to support the order that the plaintiffs should pay them. He then made over the case for the third and fourth defendants to another practitioner and on behalf of Dajiba Bhan alone supported the appeal.

(7) There has been a good deal of argument about the bearing of sestion 22 of the Limitation Ass on the matter in issue, Of the rulings quoted, I need mention only the Full Banah rulings of Calsutta and Allahabad in Ram Kinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chaudhuri (1) and Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2) The effect of all the cases, except a few of the earliear Calcutta cases which have been overruled, is the same, and it is this. Section 22 of the Limitation Act does not prescribe any period of limitation for the joinder of a party to a suit ucder sestion 32 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1832 (which is rule 10 of Order I of the Code of 190s) or to an appeal under section 535 of the old Code (which is rule 20 of Order XLI of the new Code) and there is nothing to prevent such a joinder in either a suit or appeal even after it is barred by time. The section says nothing about an appeal, and all it lays down in respect of snits is that one in which a party is subsequently joined shall be considered as instituted against that party on the date of the joinder. Whether it was barred by time against that party on that date or not is a question which eestion 22 does not touch. With respect, I would say that all this seems apparent from the very plain words of the section.

(8) There has also been some controversy as to whethersestion 22 of the Limitation Act applies to joinder in appeals as well as to joinder in saits. In words it eartainly does not, but I sanuot see what other principle sould be followed in regard to appeals than that stated in that section as to be followed in regard to suits. Indeed, if that sestion had never been enacted I find it difficult to imagine what other principle would have been followed in regard to suits. Section 22 undoubtedly applies to appeals as much as to suits in principle, if not in words. But there is a difference in the result, arising out of the application of section 5 of the same Act to appeals and not to suits. A suit in which a defendant is joined after the period of limitation has expired must necessarily be dismissed as against him. In an appeal, however, there may possibly be reasons justifying its admission after time under section 5.

section 5. (9) I hold then that, by the principle enunciated in regard to suits in section 22 of the Limitation Act, the appeal against the third and fourth defendants was instituted after the expiry of the period allowed for its institution. But I am of opinion that the eause shown by the learned Pleader for the appellante, which I have set out above, for its admission after time is sufficient, Undoubledly, the proper course would have been for the respondent Dajiba Bhau to file here crossobjection to the decree under rule 22 of Order XLI, contending that, in case it should be held that the plaintiffs were not liable to pay his costs, they ought to be made payable by the third and fourth defendants who had unnecessarily hapled him into Court. That a party to the suit against whom the appellant claimed no relief could be made a respondent to the appeal in this way was decided by a Bench of this Coort of which I was a member in Abdul Rahim v. Panda Shankarnoth, decided on the 12th of February 1921. It is also clear from the words of rule 22 of of Order XIII that such a cross. objection can be admitted after the expiry of thirty days from service of notice of the appeal on the respondent, so that if one had been put in even during the argument of the appeal, it might possibly have been admitted. I dcubt, however, whether sufficient reason could be said to exist in this ease for making such a consession. But if appellants press their application for the admission of their appeal against the third and fourth defendants after time and appear entitled to have it admitted. the fact that their application is entirely in the interests of some other person and its granting will do them no good canrot take away that right.

(10) For all these reasons, I condone the delay in the filing of the appeal against the third and fourth defendants who are the second and third respondents, and order that the decree of the lower Appellate Court shall be modified to the extent of making half the costs of the fifth defendant Dajiba Bhau in the First Court payable by the third and fourth defendants and not bу the plaintiffs. All his costs and those of the plaintiffs in the lower Aprellate Court and in this Court will also be paid by the third and fourth defend. ants.

ABDUL SAMAD U. BASIRUDDIN,

FAOTS appear from the judgment.

Baba Mohini Mohan Chakraburtty (with him Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury), for the Appellant .- The plaintiff is the appellant, The appeal arises out of a suit for possession. Plaintiff is the auction purchaser at a sale held in execution of a rent-decree. holding sold was a non-transferable cesupancy holding and the sale was by a co. sharer landlerd for his share of the rent. The defendant having resisted, the present suit has been brought. The defence was that the sale was irregular and void. The First Court decreed the suit. On appeal it has been dismissed. The defendant tried to set aside the sale in the execution proseadings but he failed there. Therefore, he cannot now, after the confirmation of sale, object to my taking possession. Refers to Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code. So that at the date of his defense he had no right of suit, He had knowledge of the sale when he same to know of the present suit. Even admitting that he could raise in defence there is no finding sufficient to dismiss my suit. The defendant having omitted to make the application within one month after date of service of summors of this suit, he has failed to get it set aside and, therefore, his right of suit is passed. Refers to Chandra Binode Kundu v. Ala Bux (1), as regards the finding of the Judge that the sale was fraudulent I submit he has wrongly thrown the burden of proof on me. The defendant ought to have addused evidence as to fraud in service of summons. I am a bonu file purchaser for value and should not suffer.

Moulvi A. K. Faslul Huq, for the Respondents.—The finding of the Executing Court cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit. On the findings of the learned Judge it cannot be said that the defendant failed to apply within time. The finding is that the whole thing is fraudulent from start to finish. I had not lost my might of suit when I filed my defence in this suit as my application to set aside sale was pending before the Executing Court.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakraburtty, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT,-The defendant had a non-transferable occupancy holding which was put up to sale and purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, obtained symbolical possession and not actual possession. He thereupon brought the present suit for declaration of his right by purchase and for possession of the land com Bafore entering prised in the holding. into his defenes, the defendant applied under Order XXI, rule 90 and section 47 of the Code for setting aside the sale, That application was dismissed by the Court before the present suit was decided by the Court of first instance. The Court of first instance decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff, the auction purchaser.

Oa appeal the learned District Judge held that the sale was not binding as the tenant was not an "asquissing party." He observes: "The defendant might have avoided the sale for the mere asking of it by a petition." Evidently he relied upon one of the principles enunciated in the case of Dayamoyi v. Anania Mohan Roy Chowdhuri (2), vie., that the transfer of the whole or part of an oseupancy holding is operative against the raigat where it is made involuntarily and the raigot with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the defendant was not aware of the sale which could have been set aside for the mere asking and as the defendant was in possession, he was entitled to resist the plaintiff's claim. The principle however, upon which he relied, can no longer be maintained, having regard to the view taken by the Special Bench in the ease of Chanira Binode Kundu v. Ala Buz (1), which modifies the decision in Dayamoyi's case (2).

The defendant was thus in the same position as any other judgment debtor and could have taken steps to have the sale set aside in the ordinary way. He did apply under Order XXI, rule 90 and seation 47 of the Code. Now, Order XXI, rule 50 not only covers a case of material irregularity but also a case of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. That application was dismissed and, that being so, and the sale not being otherwise invalid, we do not see how it can be held

JUDGMENT.—Oa 27th February 1903 Shaish Mashaq Ali executed a deed of gift of his entire property in favour of his elder daughter, Musammat Anjaman un-nisa, the first defendant, who had been left a widow and was living with him. The property covered by the deed of gift ineluded an eight-annas share in two villages, Rasulpur and Karsanda, 61 bighas 17 biswas chakdiri land in Amethi, 15 bighas of sir land in Manza Garni Mustafabad, and other miscellaneous properties. The dead of gift was attested by no less than thirteen witnesses. It was registered three days after its execution at the Registration Office at Mobanialganj in the Lucknow district, within the limits of which the villages of Rasulpur and Amethi are situated. Immediately after registration of the deed of gitt five applications for mutation of names were presented in respect of the different items of the landed property comprised in the gift. The usual notices were issued and the name of Musammat Aujuman un nisa was recorded as owner in postession of all these properties by order of the Assistant Collector. The donor Mashuq Ali was lambardar of Karsanda. At the time of the gift an eight annas share in this village was owned by Mashoq Ali. The other eight-annas had originally belonged to Shaikh Ashiq Ali, the first plaintiff in this suit, but in the year 18 8 he had granted it to his son Dildar Hasain by means of a deed of gift. Notice was served on D.Har Husain in connection with the lambardari proceedings and he made a statement that he did not wish to be appointed limbardir and Musammat Anjaman an nisa was duly appoint. ed limbirlar by the Revenue Court on 23rd September 1903. Prior to this, on the day after the gift, cartain tenants of Manza Kareanda had been called up and kabalay its execused by them in the name of the doues. In fast the proceedings in this case contain an express admission by the plaintiffs that everything was done which was necessary to complete the gift by delivery of passession. Mashuq Ali died in the year 1914. Not only did the first defendant admittedly remain in undisputed possession of the properties for three years after that date but the rents of her share in the village of Rasulpur, of which Dildar Husain was lambardar, were actually paid over to her by Dildar Hasain during this period. In 1916 Musammat Anjumanun nisa contracted a second marriage with a gentleman named Muharam Ali. Thereafter, on 25th June 1917, the present suit was filed, by Ashiq Ali and two other plaintiffs for possession of the property and mesne profits. The second plaintiff, Chaudhri Athar Ali, is a transferee of a portion of the property from Ashiq Ali. The third plaintiff, Musammat Said un nies, is Mashuq Ali's daughter. She has obtained a sale deed of their respective rights from Mashuq Ali's two surviving younger daughters, Musammat Shafq un-ni-a and Busammat Nasim-un-niss, who are arrayed as defendants in the case. The property was elaimed by right of inheritance from Mashuq Ali and the plaint was entirely silent as to the deed of gift, though Ashiq Ali and his nicess were certainly aware of its existence from the year of its execution. The defend. ant naturally set up the gift and alleged that she was in possession of the property under it up to the time of the suit. The plaintiffs thereupon filed a replication denying the gift altogether but setting up in paragraph 24 an alternative case in the following terms :-

"If the deed relied upon by the defendant No. 1 be proved to have been actually completed according to law still it appears to be, on the face of, it a wrong and a fictitions (galat wa numnishi) proceeding which may have been taken on some ground of temporary expediency but which was never actually enforced nor can any same person mean to enforce such a ded as is fully evident from subsequent declarations and behaviour of Shaikh Mashua Ali himself."

The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted the plea contained in this paragraph and decreed the suit on the ground that the gift was a fictitious transaction and that Machua Ali had no intention of parting with the ownership of the property. He hases this souslusion on a finding that Machua Ali the gift as before. It being at first admitted that if the deed was genuine everything necessary to give effect to it by delivery of possession was done, the Coart proceeds to find the deed not genuine on the ground that possession was never delivered. The defendant also set up a family enstom, supported by entries in the wajib ut arais of the different villages, by which brothers are debarred from inheritance in the presence of daughters. This issue has also been found against her. From this decision Musammat Anjuman-un-nica appeals.

The case was decided mainly on the evidence addused by the defendent and on the documentary evidence. The execution of the gift baving been denied, the evidence of the defendants was resorded first. With the excaption of three witnesses, Muhammad Wazir Khan, P. W. No. 59, and the two Police Officers, Inspector Shafiqui Hasan and Sub-Inspector Nazim Ali, the learned Subordinate Judge has not relied, to any large extent, on the oral evidence of the plaintiffs. Of the two Police witnesses he says: "These two witnesses are not of much help to the plaintiff on the question of management and possession of the property. But whatever they have said I have no doubt is strictly true." The remaining oral eyidenee adduced by the plaintiffs is sammed up in the follow. ing paragraph :--

"There would, of course, be found exaggerations and even fabrication in the statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses including Dildar, who does not seem to be very scrupulous in adhering to the truth. But I am perfectly entitled to give credence to the extent to which it is supported by documentary evidence and the s'atements of impartial and reliable witnesses."

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the defendant's evidence was transferred while the case was proceeding so that only the oral evidence of the plaintiffs was recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge who desided the case. In considering the severe criticisms passed by the learned Subordinate Judge on the defendant's evidence in his judge on the defendant's evidence in mind that none of these witnesses were examined before him and that he had only the written record of their evidence to go upon.

ANJAMAN.UN.NIBA U. ABEIQ ALI.

In this Court also the respondents rely mainly on documentary evidence. Such selections of the plaintiffs' oral evidence as have been laid before us with a view to showing what their case was do not impress us as in any way reliable.

The following pedigres will serve to elucidate the relationship of the parties:-

The ease for the appellant, Musammat Apjuman un nica, is so strong that it is difficult to understand any Court decreeing the suit against ber.

The deed, as we have already seer, was attested by thirteen witnesses. These in-

(a) the Patwaris of Rasulpar, Karsanda and Amethi, the villages within which the great bulk of the property was situated,

(b) Ajudbia Prasad, the agent who was managing the property,

(c) Muhammad Rissat Ali, the father inlaw of the donor's second daughter, Said unniss, who is now the third plaintiff in the ease, and

(d) two substantial tenants of the estate, Bhawani and Sahibdin,

The remaining witnesses were friends or relatives of the donor. The donor appears also to have taken steps to inform his married daughters or their husbands of this intention with a view to getting their assent to it.

Exhibit A 194 is a letter from Shafiq unnies to Mashuq Ali saying that she has heard from her sister that Mashuq Ali is going to make a gift to his eldest daughter and that it was a good thing that he should do so.

Exhibit A 195 is the letter of Shafquan-nisa to Said-an-nisa informing the latter to the same effect and saying it is not known who will be the mukhtar. These letters are undated.

Exhibit A 199 of 7th February 1903 is by Naim Ullah, husband of the youngest daughter Nasim-un-nisa, to her father saying that she has heard about the deed of gift (which had not then been executed but was in contemplation) in favour of her eldest sister and is delighted to hear of it. She saggests that there ought to be a partition to prevent disputes in future. (At the time of the gift the property was held jointly by Mashuq Ali and his nephew Dildar Husan). She also suggests that it will be a good thing for the old forinda to continue to manage the property.

Exhibit A 197 is a letter from Chaudhri Nabi Jan, busband of Shafiq un nisa, also stating that he has heard with great pleasure about the deed and suggests himself, Naim Ullab, and Ashraf Ali, i.e., the husbands of the three surviving daughters, as attesting witnesses. This letter was dated February the 27th and, therefore, must have reached Mashuq Ali after the execution of the deed, though probably before regietration. Shaikh Aznat Ullah, father of Naim Ullah and taluqdar of Saidanpur, has deposed that Mashug Ali asked him prior to the execution of the deed of gift if he had any objection to it and he said he had not.

Mashuq Ali in the deed itself states as his reason for giving his property to his eldest daughter to the exclusion of her sisters that, while she is a shildless widow, her sisters Shafq un nisa, and Nasim un nisa are married into well-to do families and do not stand in need of any benefit from his property nor can they live in his residential house. This is corroborated by the evidence of Shaikh Azmat Ullah. He says that when telling him of the intended gift, Mashuq Ali said that he, the witness, was well off and so was Chaudhri Nabi Jan, the husband of Shafq un niss, and that they did not stand in need of his property. The witness replied that he was not so well off that he did not eare about getting ANJAMAN. UN-NISL U. ASBIQ ALI.

additional property-an answer which has altogether misrepresented by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment-but in reply to direct A question whether he objected to the deed of gift be said that he did not. Mashuq Ali's second daughter, Said-un-nisa, had a son Fasabat Ali. It is stated in the deed of gift that Anjuman un-nisa having children herself has made Fasahat Ali her heir and betrothed him to Quiear un nise, the daughter of her deceased sister Badr un nisa. By this arrangement Mashuq Ali hoped that his house would continue to be compied generation after generation and that the descendants of Said-un-nisa and Badr-un nies would also ultimately be bonefted by the property he was bestowing on Anjaman nn nisa, Fasahat Ali and Quisarun-nisa were both young children at the date of the gift and the projected marriage in fact never came off, but there is some indication that Fasabat Ali stood at one time in special relation to Anjuman-unniss in that his first observance of the Ramzan fast, an important occasion in the life of a Muhammadan boy, took place at the residential house referred to in the deed (tide syidence of Musammat Said-un-nisa). It is admitted that this was not the case with any of the donor's other grandsons.

So much for the circumstances attending the execution of the gift. We now some to Mashaq Ali's subsequent condust.

On the very day after execution of the deed of gift Musammat Apjuman-un-nisa was taken by her father to Karsanda, four miles from Amethi, in order that the change of ownership and possession which had taken place might be publicly, recognised by certain tenants presenting sears or making an advance payment of rent (skagun) to her or executing kabuliyats in her name. Some doubt has been throwq on this evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that it would be unnatural for Mashuq Ali to sit by while money was presented to the defendant or kabuliyats executed in her name. This is to ignore the whole purpose of transaction, which was to afford a public indication of the fact that Musammat Anjuman nies had now become the owner of the property in place of her father, A similar seremony was gone through on the occasion of the gift to Dildar Husain-(Evidence of Dildar Husain, on page 849). Another criticism is that Ure ceremonies were taking place at Amethi for three or four days at the time of the gift. These seremonies admittedly take place at night and the distance of four miles to Karsanda is not so great as to render it in any way improbable that the journey should have been taken as alleged. In dealing with this incident, as in other parts of the judgment, the learned Sabordinate Judge in some instances misrepresents the effect of the evidence. He says, for instance, that evidence of Sant Bakhsh negatives the execution of any kabuliyat at Karsanda. What the witness actually says is that be stayed about an hour and saw nazars presented by six or seven tenants but that kabuliyats were not executed while he was there.

Several of the kabuliyats which were executed on that occasion have been put in. They are admittedly written out by Ajudhia Prasad who was then looking after the Karsanda property as general agent. Ajudhia Prasad died in the year 1907 so that it is impossible to suggest that they have been fabricated for the purpose of this case. Indeed, the Subordinate Judge himself finds that the fast "that these documents came into existence on that date, i, e., 23th February 1903, is not seriously disputed by the plaintiffs" (on page 899). It appears to us, therefore, that the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for easting doubt on this part of the defendant's case are altogether without weight.

We have already referred to the fact that the document was registered three days after its execution and that mutation of names was applied for and obtained in respect of all the properties before the end of March 1903. Mashuq Ali was separately examined on path in connection with each of the five applications for mutation and on each occasion he states in slightly varying language that he has made a gift of his property to Anjuman un niss and put her in possession and that he desires her name to be recorded in the Revenue Records.

ANJAMAN.UN NISA U. ASBIQ ALI.

The lambardari proceedings by which the appellant was appointed lambardar of Karsanda in place of her father are also important. Her appointment as lambardar was by no means a necessary consequence of the deed of gift or of mutation having been effected in her favour. The Circulars of the Board of Revenue relating to the appointment of lambardars, issued under section 2.44 (f) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, 1901, and having the force of law, prescribe that—

"no minor or female shall be appointed to be a lambardar unless special reasons exist for making such an appointment, or unless no co-sharer less ineligible for the appointment is available."

The rules also prescribe, as the learned Subordinate Judge himself points out, that no person should be appointed to be a lambardar who is not a so-sharer in the mahal and in pessession of his share. If, therefore. the defendant had not been in possession of the share transferred to her by the gift, or if Dildar Hussin, the son of the first plaintiff, one of his principal witnesses, and the owner of the other half share in the villige, bad objected, she could not have been appointed. So far was this from being the case that Dildar Husain who now comes forward to assert that the gift is a figritious transaction appeared before the Sub-Divisional Officer of the pargana and declared that he would not accept the lambardarship of the village.

On 21st March, while the mutation proceedings were pending, Anjuman un nica executed a power-of-attorney for the management of the property, she berself being a pardanashin lady. This power of at crosy was in favour of five persons. Lala Ajudhia Praiad, who had been already managing the property on Mashuq Ali's behalf, and his son Nand Lal were the persons who were actually to collect the rents and look after the property. The other three persons, Riseat Ali, Nasir Alı and Sajjad Ali were relatives of the family whose names are said to have been put in for the purpose of check and enpervision. As we have seen from the correspondence already referred to, the question of the appointment of a mukhtar had been under consideration even before the deed was executed. This deed also was duly registered. The Sab-Registrar attended at the defendant's residence. She was identified behind the parda by two of her couring, Shamehad Ali and Asaf-uz-ziman, and acknowledged the execution of the deed of her own accord and volition.

From that time forward and down to Mashuq Ali's death every transaction relating to the management of the property was conducted in the name of the defendant as owner. The fact that the revenue receipts stand in her name is not of primary importance as this would necessarily follow from her name being recorded in the Patwari's papers. Of more importance is the fact that the rents were collected on her behalf by Ajudbia Prasad and after his death by Nand Laland that leaves and rent rescipts were given in her name. Anjuman-un-pisa herself was illiterate and much has been made of the fact that on one or two leases and other documents Mashuq Ali signed her name for her even going so far as to write "by ber own pen." They do not seem to have been very particular in the matter of signing for one another in this family, for in his deposition of 23rd January Dilder Hussin states with reference to a certain receipt-

"Exhibit A 280 I find is written by my nucle and the signature of my father has also been made by him, and he used to do this not infrequently."

This circumstance, however, is of very little assistance to the plaintiffs. It rather goes to show that, throughout, and even when he himself was giving a receipt or signing a lease, Mashuq Ali regarded his daughter and not himself as the person to whom the property belonged.

House tax was paid in respect of the ancestral house at Amethi and here also the entries are all in the name of the defendant. In one instance, Exhibit A 153, the money was actually paid in on her behalf by the plaintiff Ashiq Ali and in another instance, Exhibit A 149, through his son Dildar Hugain. In one solitary instance, Exhibit 39, a receipt for Rs. 3 of 1st November 1904 was given in the name of Mashuq Ali.

Certain suits in the Rent Courts have been relied on. These are discounted by the plaintiffs on the ground that any proceedings in the Revenue Court must necessarily be taken in the name of the recorded proprietor. There is, however, one suit in the Civil Court which is of some importance,

ANJAMAN-UN-NISA U. ASBIQ ALI.

Exhibit A 25 is the plaint in that case. In 1907 the defendant fled a suit for preemption against Karim Bakhsh and Ala Bakbsh in respect of a share in Garhi Mustafabad. She brought this suit in virtue of the title acquired under the gift and in reliance on the fact that she was in possession under it. No objection was taken by the defendants in that suit on the ground that the gift in her name was fictitious or that ehe was not in possession. On the contrary, they admitted her right and ber suit was decreed, It may be said, no doubt, that the defendants in that ease were third parties but the transaction is certainly relevant under section 13 of the Evidence Act as an instance in which the defendant's right was asserted and enforced. The suit was actually prosecuted by Dildar Husain as he himelf admits. order to raise the money necessary to pay for the pre-empted property the defendant executed a mortgage of that property (Ex hibit A 27) in fayour of one Arehad Ali. The plaint in the case was signed on the defendant's behalf by her father but she certainly knew all about it and the execution of the mortgage in favour of Arshad Ali was necessarily her own act. After her father's death the defendant re-sold the property at a profit which has gone into her own pocket (vide erass-examination of Dildar Husain et o. page :62). We mention these sireumstances because of a suggestion put forward in argument on behalf of the plaint. iffs that the pre emption proceedings were merely carried on in the defendant's name without her having any knowledge of or interest in them.

The private assounts of income and expenditure prepared by the karinda from the execution of the deed up to Mashuq Ali's death were all prepared in the name of the defendant. If the deed was fistitious there was no need to keep up appearances in these private accounts. Much stress has been laid by the learned Advocate for the respondents on the fact that the sighas from which these accounts were prepared have not been put in. Nand Lal says in his evidence that a large number of papers. were destroyed after Ajudhia Prasad's death. The siahas were merely the rough material from which the account of income and expenditure was prepared and there was no particular reason why they should have been preserved. Nand Lal is a very partisan witness and the learned Counsel for the appellant has frankly stated that he is not prepared to rely on his evidence except where it is corroborated. In this particular instance his evidence is probable in itself and there is no reason why it should not be true.

Certain cha dari or under proprietary lands were included in the deed of gift. The rent of these was paid to the superior proprietor Mirza Muhammad Abhas. The receipts, Exhibits A 159 to A 175, have been produced and they are all in the name of Musammat Anjuman-un-nisa. Mansab Ali Khan, the agent of the superior proprietor, has been called as a witness and he swears that Mashuq Ali himself told him that he had made a gift of the property to his daughter and that the entries should be made in her name.

In support of the defendant's case two letters of Ajudhia Pracad to Mashuq Ali and three letters of Nand Lal to the defendant herself have been relied upon. All these letters are attacked by the plaintiffs as forgeries. They entain direct recognition of the defendant's title and of the fact that the karind is acting as her agents. The two letters of Ajudhia Prasad are in his handwriting and are proved to bear his signature. Exhibit A 210 is a very brief letter merely stating that if a new patta of certain land is given to one Tilak it will result in loss to the defendant. Echibit A 209 is longer and refers to several transactions in connection with the management. The reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for rejecting it are-

(1) that it mentions certain land as having been granted to Chheda Lodh on Rs. 10 as paid in the previous year with an enhancement of Rs. 2. The lease was executed for the year 1315 Faeli, whereas there was no tenancy of Chheda Lodh in the year 1314 and, therefore, there could be no enhancement;

(2) that according to the previous lesse. Exhibit A 233, the previous rent was Rs. 9 and not Rs. 10;

(3) that the letter appears to mention the defendant's name too often, and

(4) that it is difficult to believe that Ajudbia Prasad could have asked for the directions of defendant, AVJAMAN.UN. NISSA U. ASHIQ ALI.

The learned Subordinate Judge admits that the bandwriting of the letters bears strong resemblance to the admitted bandwrit. ing of Ajudhia Prasad. The last two reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge are matters of opinion, but the first two are demoretratably wrong and indeed the fasts referred to lend strong support to the genuineness of the letter. Chheda Lodb, it is true, was not resorded as tenant in Faeli 1313 but his father Ganga Lidb was so record. ed (Exhibit A 62) on a rent of Rs 9 0.6. The same document shows that in Fasli 1314 an enhancement of Re. 1 was made bringing the rent up to Rs. 10 0 6. Finally, a further enhancement of Rs. 2 was made and in the wasilbog; for 1315 Fasli, Exhibit A 61, we find the rent given as Rs. 120.6. With regard to the letter of Nand Lil the learned Subordinate Judge remarks at o. page 30 of his judgment that the learned Conneel bas conceded that it would not be safe to rely on Nand Lal's letters in support of his ease. The learned Coursel disputes this admission, and, whatever may have been the position taken up in the Court below, the letters have been discussed in detail in this Court by Coursel on both sides and the appellant's Counsel has been at considerable pains to show that the statements of fact made in them are in accordance with the facts proved from the wasilbagis and other doenmentary evidence. In view, however, of the learned Subordinate Judge's statement we refrain from examining them in detail in this judgment. It is common ground that both the plaintiff Ashiq Ali and his son Dildar Husain repeatedly asknowledged the title of the defendant both during Mashiq Ali's lifetime and after his death. In the ease of Ashiq Ali there is a receipt, Exhibit A 265, dated 2cth July 191, for the sale of mahur erop of Musammat Aujuman unnisa's shere which is admittedly in his handwriting and he acknowledged her title in this evidence in the Mutation Court in connection with the cale to Hira Lal which is referred to elsewhere. In one instance in 1909 house tax was raid by him on her behalf as appears from the receipt Exhibit A 153. These transactions were all in the lifetime of Mashuq Ali. After Mashuq Ali's death we have some half dezen letters addressed by Ashiq Ali to the defendant hercelf, all of which clearly asknowledge her title to the property. In one of them he sends her her share of the under proprietary rent. In others he speaks of the sale of the produce of her share in groves in Rasulpur. In another he asks that the amount due to her and to Dildar Husain on account of sale of mango erop should be spent in repairs to the bouse. The learned Subordinate Judge indeed propounds the question: "Why did Ashiq Ali state orally, in writing in Court and out of Court, that Mashuq Ali had excented the gift and the defendant was the owner of the property?" (o. page 954) but though he devotes several pages to its disenssion it is difficult to find in them any sort of reason why these admissions should have been made if the fact was otherwise.

The learned Subordinate Judge on page 89 of the printed judgment notices the fact that Ashiq Ali has not stepped into the witness. box to explain his admissions, but says that this is to some extent exensible because Ashiq Ali has been proved to be very old acd to have lost a good deal of his powers of memory, sight and reasoning. alleged proof rests on a statement of Dildar Husain in examination-in-chief that his father was 84 years of age, weak in body and mind and destitute of eye-sight and that he has not been in his proper senses during the past six months. When pressed in crossexamination as to the basis of the last state. ments he said that his only reasons were -

(1) that Ashiq Ali made a mistake as to whether an allowance sent to him had been for the month of October or November, but afterwards agreed with Dildar Husain and said that he had forgotten and that Dildar Husain was right on the point, and

(2) that when questions were put to him, he no doubt answered the questions but went on to talk about other things which did not bear on the subject.

He was obliged to admit that within the last three months his father had attended Court on eight or ten cosseions in connection with a case regarding a deficiency of stampduty. It also appears from another passage in his evidence that Ashiq Ali must have instructed his Pleader as to the preparation of the replication. Dildar Husain denies that he himself had anything to do with it and easy that his father had stated to him that he was going to the Pleader to get the replication prepared. His father also helped property attached to the plaint.

ANJAMAN-UN-MISSA U. ASHIQ ALI.

Ashraf Ali to draw up the list of moveable

Dildar Hussin almits (o. page 852) baving done several acts which if unexplained would go to show that he accepted the dead as a gennine and real transaction. He admits, for instance, having written kabuliyate in the defendant's favour on behalf of tenents and having paid house tax in her name. In an earlier portion of his evidence he admits that after the death of Mashuq Ali defendant has been receiving the share of the profits of the property from the havinda. He entinues—

"There have been Zamindari dues received by me after the death of Piare Sahib. I took half of such things and gave the other half to the defendant No. 1."

The explanation he offers is that he did these acts against his interest by his unale's direction because if he had not done so his unels might have become alive to the danger that Dildar Hasain might afterwards seek to impeach the gift and to the necessity of completing it by a genuine delivery of possession. He professes to have maintained this Mashiavelian policy during the whole of the eleven years which elapsed between the execution of the gift and Mashuq Ali's death. This explanation would have been difficult to accept even if the admissions in question had been confined to Mashuq Ali's lifetime. breaks down hopelessly when we find that they were continued even after Mashuq Ali's death when there was no motive for maintaining the deseption any longer.

In view of all this evidence, the burden of proving that the gift was fictitions lay heavily on the plaintiffs. This is conceded by the learned Subordinate Judge in the earlier portion of his judgment (o. page 10).

"It is contended," he says, that there being a registered deed of gift in favour of the defendant, and there being such evidence as has already been detailed in support of the defendant having been exercising acts of ownership with respect to the property in enit it lies upon the plaintiffs to show by very cogent evidence that the gift is fictitions and benami and was never given effect to. There can be no doubt of the correctness of this contention."

What in fact have the plaintiff: proved? Merely that the management of the property remained mainly in the hands of Mashuq

Ali. It is common ground between the parties that this was the case. It was indeed only natural that it should be so. The defendant was a pardanashin lady incapacitated by her position from looking after the property in person.

She is, moreover, illiterate except to the extent of haing able to sign her name in Hindi. She owed her possession of the property to the generosity of her father to whom she would naturally look, and it would be most unlikely that she should either quastion his management or attempt to put a sheek on his expenditure. She says, on the first day of her examination, that she had no one except her father to advise and help her in managing the gifted property and that the karindas used to render assounts to her father and he explained them to her. Nand Lal ones brought the accounts to her direct after Ajudbia Prasad's death. She referred him to her father. At the conclusion of her evidence she was questioned by the Court as to whether any accounts were ever kept as ber father and she neew ted her and eaid-

"My father never called for any account from me. I never called for any account from my father. He was my father. How I could call for an account from him? I never raised any objection whenever my father asked me to give him any sum for expenses after the execution of the deed of gft. I could not raise any objection as he was my own father."

We have already seen that Mashuq Ali from the time of the gift right down to his death constantly acknowledged his daughter's title to the property by granting receipts, paying rent and revenue and doing all other acts of management in her name and that the private assounts of income and expenditure were also kept in her name. The instances addnesd to show that he ever claimed to dispose of the properly in his own right are of the most flimsy description. Exhibit 52. for instance, is a letter in which he says that he is sending one anna six pies (the equivalent of three half pense) for the price of kerosine oil for the shrine "for my share." The letter is undated and the inference drawn by the learned Subordinate Judge as to its date being subsequent to the gift is presarious, but even if it be taken that it was subsequent to the gift it would be absurd to attach any importance to a casual expression of this kind with reference to a petty payment for the lighting of a shrine. Another instance is with reference to a theft of nine sovereigns and Rs. 90 which took place at the family house in 1908 from a looked box. The box was on a portion of a roof where Mashuq Ali was sleeping and sould apparent. ly be approached only through the canana portion of the house as that is how the thief is said to have got in. Two letters from Mashuq Ali, one to Ashiq Ali and the other to Dildar Hussin, have been produced with reference to this transaction. Reliance is placed on these letters for two purposes, first that in one of the letters he speaks of the box as "my box" and the property as "my property," and secondly as contradicting the defendant when she says that each in hand used to be kept inside the sanana in her charge. The letter hardly be said to support the second inference seeing that the thief admittedly broke into the sanana in order to commit the theft. As regards the general question whether the money was kept in the canana, it is a very common practice for this to be done for reasons of security even if the lady were not the owner of it. As regards the first point, even if the money was estate money it was for the time being in Mashuq Ali's sharge and it would be highly risky to draw any inference as to the nature of the gift from the fact that te tells his brother or his nephew that his box has been broken into and money stolen. Another supposed instance was a letter of Nand Lal, dated 23th February 1914, Exhibit 76, in which, when sending the monthly pay amounting to Rs. 40, he says that one rupee is already in deposit with the defendant so he sends only the balance Rs. 39. It is unnecessary to consider this further as the learned Subordinate Judge has himself rejected the explanation offered by the plaintiffe. This letter is really in favour of the defendant and not against her.

It should be mentioned here that the method of remitting money both in the time of Ajudhia Prasad and of Nand Lal was to send a fixed monthly amount called "Tankhwah" or pay to each of the ecowners of the property, remiting the balance after making up the accounts at the close of the year. The amount so fixed was not always the same but it was always a definite amount which the karinda had to send.

Exhibit 19 is a relinquishment of a single field purporting to be executed by two tenants Dwarks and Debi in respect of one plot of land and field in the Tab. sil in accordance with the Oudh Act. It asks for notice to be served on Ashshe Sahib and Piare Sahib, i.e., Ashiq Ali and Mashnq Ali. Dwarks is slive but has not been called and it is only the fact that the dosument was formally filed hefore the Tabsildar that makes it admissible at all. One cannot but be struck by the contrast between the importance which the learned Subordinate Judge attaches to this document, to which neither Mashuq Ali por Ashiq Ali were parties, as a solemn proceeding in Court" in which Machuq Ali's title was recognised, and the easy way in which he brushes aside all the numerous proceedings in Court which recognise and support the title of the defendant.

The three instances on which most stress is laid are—

(a) a joint sale deed of 13 biswas by Mashuq Ali and Ashiq Ali in favour of Hira Lal;

(b) a deposition dated 23rd April 1909, Exhibit 118, of Mashaq Ali in a pre emption suit, and

(c) three statements of receipt and expenditure of the under-proprietary land, Exhibits 23 to 25.

The first two transactions are also relied on by the defendant as admissions in her favour. In the case of the sale deed mutation was only effected in respect of Ashiq Ali's half share in the property and was rejected in respect of Musammet Anjaman. uc-nisa's share. Ashiq Ali was examined in the case and admitted that Mashra Ali did not own the half share which the deed purported to transfer as his but had transferred The vendee himself it to his daughter. seems to have been aware that there was some flow ic the transaction for he said that if half the share had been given away prior to his sale deed mutation might be effected in respect of the other half Both these statements are on the record, Exhibits A254 and A253, as is also the mutation order affecting mutation in respect of 61 biswas only. We have no information as to how it same to be executed; we do know that when the matter came into the Court the defendant's right was asknowledged and was given effect. It is equally difficult to see how the plaintiffs can draw any advantage from Exhibit 118, Mashuq Ali was examined as a witness in a pre-emption case between third parties with reference to a disputed sale of property in Amethi. He did in several passages speak of his brother and himself as being joint owners but in the very same deposition he went on to say that he was no longer owner, having given all his property in Amethi to his daughter Musammat Anjuman-un nisa.

The importance of Exhibits 23 to 25 is that they purport to speak of the share of Mashuq Ali and that they bear his signature. Their genuineness is disputed both here and in the Court below. It is urged by the defendant that the plaintiffs have got hold of some old statement of assount prior to gift in which the date of the year was not given and added a date subsequent to the gift. In support of this it is pointed out—

(1) that the portion containing the mention of the year, especially in the case of Exhibit 23, may easily have been added afterwards and is clearly in different ink and added after the signature of Mashuq Ali,

(2) that the Exhibit 23 purports to be for the whole year ending May : 5th, 1914, and Exhibit 24 for two months of the same year, and

(3) that the entries regarding payments of rent from tenants do not correspond at all with those recorded in the Patwari's sighas.

The learned Subordinate Judge himself (o. page 53 of his judgment) is not prepared to rely on Exhibit 23 as a genuine document and we think that the genuineness of all three is open to grave suspicion.

The suggestion of the plaintiffs is that Mashuq Ali used to appropriate the pay as his own. In this connection we have on the record a letter, Exhibit 32, of 21st August 1919 written by Mashuq Ali from Sandila to Ashiq Ali at Amethi in which he tells the latter to get the rest of the pay from Nand Lil, and after paying Ra 3 to the sipuli Makend to send the balance to the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge's ordinary. He attaches no importance to the fact that the pay was said to be sent to the defendant, but, on the other hand, he considers that Machua Ali ought to have told Ashia Ali, who was at Amethi, to take instructions from the defendant, who was at Lucknow, as to what to do with the pay. In this connection it may be noted that though the karindas Ajudhia Pracad and Nand Lal may have on one or two occasions written loosely to Machua Ali about sending "your pay," Mashua Ali never speaks of the pay as his own. He speaks of the pay.

The oral evidence of Muhammad Wazir Khan, Honorary Assistant Collector, is also relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge. This witness admits that he has no personal knowledge regarding the question of possession but he deposes to a statement said to have been made by Mashuq Ali between 1:08 and 1910 in these words—

"I am still in the same way owner and in possession," meaning that he continued to be owner and in possession of the property before the gift. Assuming the witness to be entirely honest in what he saye, it would obviously be dangerous to rely on his being able to reproduce exactly from memory the effect of a remark made to him in conversation nine or ten years before he was called on to give evidence. As Mr Taylor says in his back on Evidence (Volume I, page 446);—

"Men, without deliberately intensing to falsify facts, are extremely prone to believe what they wish, to confound what they believe with what they heard and to ascribe to memory what is merely the result of imagination.

The theory adopted by the Subordinate Judge, and pressed in this Court, to explain away this mass of evidence, is that the deed of gift was intended to operate as a Will. This was not the theory put forward by the plaintiffs themselves in the Court below. In their replication, as we have seen, they merely suggested that the deed of gift was executed as a temporary expedient. As to what the temporary nesessity was which led to its execution the pleadings are entirely silent. During the progress of the case the plaintiffs put forward through the mouth of the third plaintiff Musammat Said-un-n a the case which the learned Sabordin a Judge describes as the theory of a age at ANJAMAN-UN-NISA U. ASBIQ ALI.

trust. In her examination in chief Mus.m. mat Said un nies originally cenied the gift altogether as will appear from the following extract from her evidence:—

"To my knowledge, my father never in fact gave any of his property to the defectiont No. 1." Later on, she modified this by saying that she came to know from her father and from the first defendant that her father got a Setitions deed executed in favour of the latter. On the second day of her crossexamination she declared that she did not know whether this deed was a sale deed or a mortgage deed or a deed of gift and that she did not know that it was a deed of gift until the written statements of the defendants were filed. On a subsequent date ebe said that her father told her that he had taken an oath from the first defendant that after his death she would divide the property between herself and her sieters. This conversation she represents as having taken place before the actual execution of the deed. The learned Subordinate Judge bimself holds (on page 953) that this case of a scoret agreement to divide the property was quite an after-thought and that it was inconsistent with the position originally taken by the plaintiffs. He points out that the first suggestion of the theory comes in evidence of Dildar Husain and that it was considerably improved upon by Musammat Said-un-nisa who followed. Notwithstanding this, he expresses more so the opinion that though the story had been found to be untrue "it is likely that it has some basis of reality." By this he means, he proceeded to explain that Mashuq Ali may have entertained the idea of depriving Ashiq Ali of his share in the inheritance. He continues-

"But this idea must have been confined to the mind of Mashua Ali and I am not prepared, in view of the state of the plaintiff's pleadings noticed above, to hold that it was materialised by Mashua Ali in the way alleged by the plaintiffs in obtaining an oath and agreement from the defendant No. 1."

We may note that the evidence in support of a secret trust has been wholly discarded by the learned Advocate for the respondent in this Court.

The learned Subordinate Judge assumes, without any warrant except his own idea of what Mathuq Ali would or would not be likely to have done, that "it is impossible to conceive that he should have reconciled himself to the idea of locking up to the defendant-his daughter and dependant till then-for money to satisfy his require. ments." (on page 926). He alludes to the fact that the Hanafi Law does not allow a Will in favour of an beir. Whether Mashing Ali intended to benefit his daughter or to deprive Ashiq Ali of his share in the property after his death, these objects could be served by the execution of a fictitions deed of gift. He, therefore, considers it "not unlikely" that Mashuq Ali intended the deed to operate as a Will but executed it as a gift in order to evade the provisions of the Muhammadan Law. Tois theory he considers will meet the of both parties as to the motive of the deed. It does not seem to have struck the learned Subordinate Judge that it was equally possible and much more likely that Mashuq Ali was really doing what he purported to do and that knowing that if he wanted his daughter to get his property he must make it over to her in his lifetime be decided to take the risk, feeling sure that his daughter whom he loved and who owed her title to the property to his generosity, would not allow him to suffer for having done so. He must have known quite well that any attempt to execute a Will under cover of a fictitious gift would run the gravest risk of being sot aside.

The theory that the deed was a fictitious transaction only intended to some into operation on Mashuq Ali's death breaks down in several directions. As we have already seer, it is inconsistent with the conduct of the plaintiffs in allowing the defendant to take possession of the property without opposition on his death and to realise the entire income. If the defendant had already been in peaceable and undisputed possession of the property for eleven years, as was in fact the case, that possession would naturally not be affected by Mashuq Ali's death. It was far otherwise if she had never had any real possession at all and Dildar Husain had been keeping quiet for eleven years in order to lull Mashuq Ali into a false scenrity. point has been already dealt with and need not be further elaborated.

APJAMAN-UN-BIBA D. ABBIQ ALI,

In the second place, Mashuq Ali's motives in executing the deed are clearly stated in the document itself.

The fact that his married daughters were well off, though the Subordinate Judge throws doubt on it, has not been seriously disputed in this Court. Indeed, in another portion of his judgment, page 94 of the printed judgment, he says that the defend. ant's case may be taken as being true in this respect that Mashuq Ali sonsidered that the busbands of his daughters were well provided for. It is also undisputed that, by reason of their marriage, they could not continue to reside in the ancestral house as he desired. If there were not the true motives which is flaenced him, what other motives can be set in their place for his desiring to disinherit his younger daughters, of whom he Was admittedly fond, after his death? An attempt was made in the Court below to suggest a reason, but it has been found to be false and has now been abandoned.

Finally, the evidence of Mashuq having entertained any desire to injure Ashiq Ali by depriving him of his right of inheritance to one-third of the propertyassuming that Ashiq Ali was not already deprived of that right by family eustomis of the lightest. There is evidence that at the time of the gift to Dildar Husain in 1898 Mashuq Ali expressed displeasure at it on the ground that Dildar Husain's mother was of a lower status than her husband. One witness says that Mashuq Ali spoke of Dildar Husain as being illegitimate but his legitimacy is not questioned by either party in this case. The suggestion that Mashuq Ali went so far as to oppose mutation in Dildar Hassin's favour rests on the doubtful recollection of Bhagwat Prasad Kanungo after an interval of twenty years. But it does not follow that because Mashuq Ali was displeased in 1898, he still continued to be so five years later in 1903. The learned Subordinate Judge admits that the relations between Mashuq Ali and bis brother and nephew were in 1903 perfectly friendly so far at least as outward appearances went. We have no letter relating to that precise period, but from the time when eprrespondence does begin it is beyond question that the relations between the three were not only in outward appearance but in reality, perfectly friendly and affectionate right down to Mashuq Ali's death. Dilder Husain admits at the close of his cross-examination that never until the present suit did his father express, or to his knowledge entertain, a desire to get the property in suit. Musammat Said-un-niss in connection with her story of a sceret trust admits that it was only after the defendant's second marriage that the notion of filing a suit to dispute her title was entertained.

The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is unduly prolix and contains much unnecessary repetition. After saying that no question of law remains to be decided, it devotes some ten pages of disenssion of various rulings with a view to extract eireumstances favourable to the plaintiffs or to distinguish rulings which appear to favour the defendants. The judgment bas unfortunately much graver faults. only is it full of the most transparent special pleadings but in many passages it seriously misrepresents the effect of the evidence. For the first ten pages or so the judgment seems to be leading up to a deeree in favour of the defendant. Then follows an attack on the defendant which is in many respects grossly unfair. Her evidence is discounted on the ground that she was examined as the last instead of the first of the witnesses called on her behalf, while the fact that Dildar Husain was examined last of the plaintiffs' witnesses examined in Court and Said-unnisa the third plaintiff was examined still later on emmission is passed over almost without comment, Achiq Ali, as we have seep, never appeared as a witness at all. From this point onward instances reckless or unfounded statements may be found on almost every page of the printed judgment. It is said that in part of her evidence the defendant lays claim to know everything even the minutest details of her property. This eriticiem is not borne out by a perusal of her evidence and no attempt has been made in this Court to justify it. In arguing that she could not have held possession after the gift because of her ignorance of many details of the property the learned Subordinate Judge evidently felt the diffiABJAMAN-UN MEA O. ASEIQ ALI.

oulty that this argument proves too much, If ignorance of detail disproves her posses. sion it would equally disprove her possession for the three years after Mashuq Ali's death during which there is no dispute that she was in possession. This difficulty is passed over with the remark that, in any ease, this argument does not relieve having been placed her from position of consistency. Later on, on page 35, he returns to the charge and ignoring the fallacy of argument based on her ignorance says that it shows the real state of affairs in the lifetime of Mashuq Ali. (This and all subsequent references to the judgment refer to the page of the printed judgment). Her statement that she received rent from Ajudhia Prasad in respect of the Garbi Mustafabad land sultivated by him is attacked on the ground that, instead of paying the amount in eash, Ajudhia Prasad set it off against his salary. The amount of the rent was regularly credited on the receipt side of her account. Her statement is said to aim at showing that ede thoroughly went into the accounts. All she says is that her father explained the accounts to ber. The word "thoroughly" is an interpolation of the learned Sab. ordinate Judge. It is suggested that about the property beknows nothing cause she says that she has no grove in Amethi proper, whereas she has hereelf spoken of her father selling the produce of the groves in Amethi and Chamertola. This is most unfair. As the deed itself shows the groves are not in Amethi proper but either in the chakdari land or in the included villages of Chamartola and Ghuskai. It is said that the case set up by her is that she signed all the papers after the gift, a statement that she never made anywhere in the course of her long examination. She said, indeed, in one place that her father signed rarely for her when she asked him, referring apparently to his eigning her name on her behalf which he did on several occasions and is said to have done in the pre-emption case referred to in the next sentence. She has, however, stated very clearly that all acts of manage. ment were done by her father and Nand Lal, and she clearly could not be coguieant of all doonments signed by him in the course of management. For instance, the says, with reference to the produce of the groves, sometimes receipts were signed by her and sometimes by her father (on page 565). Theo, again, it is said on page 35 of the judg. ment that wherever in this ignorance of affairs any assertion of fasts is made it would be found to be inassarate, if not absolutely false," and the portion of her evidence from pages 545 to 571 is referred to in support of this statement. The most important statement of fast in regard to the property contained in these pages is with regard to the land revenue which she says was formerly Rs. 975 and now amounts to Rs. 925. As a matter of fast, the revenue was Bs. 972 13 0 in 1903 (Erhibit A 40) and Rs. 925 50 in 1908-9 (Exhibit A 46). As a matter of fact, it is surprising, considering that she as a parda. nashin lady depends on others for the administration of her property, how much she does know of it. As an instance of the minuteness of her cross-examination she was asked how many trees there were in a particular grove. She replied, naturally enough, that she had not seen it and did not know.

The statement is reiterated again and again in various forms that she denies that her father had any hand in the management of the property after the gift. This was never at any time her case. Even in the opening statement of her Counsel, which had been quoted in ext. nso in an earlier part of the judgment, it was said that, while collections in Karsanda and Rasulpur were made by the karindas, collections for the Amethi property were made by Mashaq Ali, either in person or through the servants of the defendant. Because in a single instance a woman who had been refused permission to build on her land appealed to her direct as woman to woman to give her the permission, it is said, page 34, that this is the elearest possible indication of the position being set up by her that Mashuq Ali would not after the gift do any thing about the management of the property on his own authority and whenever he did so the defendant either ratified it or overrode his decision.

Walle dealing with this part of the case we may remark that the defendant's evidence does contain here and there statements which appear to be untrue. The most important are perhaps—

(1) her denial that she knew of the existence of Musamnat Sundar, a prostitute-

ANJAMAN-UN-NISA U. ASBIQ ALI.

who was kept by her father for many years, and the latter's son Yusuf, and

(2) her statement that Mashuq Ali never drew more than Rs. 25 a month so far as she is aware for personal expenses.

With regard to the first of these statements there is a good deal of excuse to be made for her. It is natural that a woman of good family and virtuous sharaster would be relustant to admit knowledge of a family seandal affecting her father. We think that in fact she must have known of it but that Musammat Sundar and her shildren were allowed to reside openly at the anesstral house when they came to Amethi, as some of the plaintiffs' witnesses assert, is a statement which we sannot possibly accept. The Subordinate Judge's summent on this part of the case strikes us as one of the most amszing in the whole course of the judgment:-

"That the defendant should deny to have ever heard the names of Sundar, Yusuf and Jilayya (Jilayya was Yusuf's wife) prozes conclusively her having unscrupulously attered lies and falsehood on all the points the revelation of which may have the tendency to weaken her case."

The second statement is certainly untrue, but it must be remembered that she kept no accounts and that her evidence is that her father was at liberty to draw whatever money he needed at any time. Sometimes he told her why he needed it and sometimes he did not.

When everything has been said against her evidence that can be said, she is a more reliable witness than either Dildar Husain or the third plaintiff Said-un-nisa.

A similar strain of inaccuracy and tendency to exaggerate every point which can be made against the defendant runs through the remainder of the judgment. "Imagine the extent to which the mendacity of the witness has gone," says the learned Subordinate Judge, because Naud Lal declined the responsibility of identifying a signature made in a character which be is unable to read. On the same page we have the remarkable statement, already noticed, that failure to prove certain documents is conclusive proof that they are forgeries. On page 51 it is stated as a reason for not accepting a certain document that the writer Amjad Ali "has not been stated to be dead." His death was proved by Nand Lal (on page 204). This particular error is not indeed of great importance as it is easy to make an overeight of this kird in dealing with a bulky record. On page 52 we fird it stated that the execution of the mulhtarnama had no bearing on the question whether the defendant or her father was the real employer of the muthtar appointed noder it. On page 59 it is said that Mashuq Ali " occasionally expressed that the defendant's presence with him had been a financial burden to him." On one solitary occasion Mashuq Ali said in a letter that the expense of a partieuter visit had been greater because his daughter had accompanied him. On pages 67 to 71 the fact that the deed was attested by a number of witnesses and executed with much formality and that Mashua Ali tork sare to consult his other daughters and their husbands is used as an argument that there must have been some sipister design behind the transaction. page 73 it is said that "Nezir Husain constitutes himself as the sole legal resort of Mashuq Ali" and that "he reproduces from memory the fall contents of the deed." Neither of these statements is borne out by the record.

The portion of the judgment dealing with the evidence of Naim Ullah, the husband of Mashuq Ali's youngest daughter, and of Naim Ullah's father Shaikh Azmat Ullah is full of incourate and unfounded statements. We select a few of these by way of illustration. Shaikh Azmat Ullah, a Talukdar paying some Rs. 4,000 a year as land revenue, is attacked as baving no scruples on the subject of truth because he could not remember the names of the attesting witnesses of a deed he admitted having executed in favour of his second wife, and on the suppos. ed ground that he tried to suppress the existence of deeds executed by his second wife in favour of her sons. These deeds have not the slightest bearing on the present ease and not only had the witness to motive for attempting to suppress them but his evidence gives no indication of his having tried to do so. He himself had executed three deads of gift in favour of his recond wife and he stated that, so far as he remillested, she had s Iready executed a deed in favour of her cone but be was not sure whether the deed was executed with his knowledge and AFJAMAN-UN-NISA U. ASHIQ ALI.

consent. An attempt is made to use Azmat Ullah's gifts in favour of his second wife as showing that he and his sons are not well off as they represent. It is said that out of the estate paying Rs. 4,000 land revenue Azmat Ullah executed gifts in favour of his second wife yielding Rs. 1,700 per annum ignoring the fact that the land revenue stated by the witness is exclusive of his self. acquired property and that two out of the three properties comprised in the first gift were self-acquired property. All these deeds are subsequent to the deed in suit, so this could not effect Az nat Ullah's or Naim Ullah's financial position at the time of its execution.

Naim Ullah is said to be a person getting only R3. 16 a month because his father states that he give him an allowance of R2. 200 per aroum for clothes again ignoring the very next sentence, in Az mat Ullah's deposition which reads—

"If he requires anything for his other expenses I give him the requisite sum."

On page 70 of the judgment the defence is attacked for not producing the letter in reply to which Naim Ullah's letter, Exhibit A 199, ascenting to the gift to defendant was written although Naim Ullah in reply to the Court had stated that he did not preserve the letter in reply to which Exhibit A 199 was written.

One or two more instances must suffige. They are of some importance as they bear on the genuineness of the motives in the gift. The learned Sabordinate Judge says (page 79)—

"To my mind the omission of the circumstances of widowhood of the defendant from the reasons given for the deed is vary significant. Though Mashuq Ali gave all the reasons, real and imaginary, for making the deed appear real, he did not give this reason, which would have been probable."

This is a direct miss atement. Almost at the outset of the deed Mashnq Ali says -

"Out of the four daughters who are alive my oldest daughter Anjuman un nisa is a childless widow: I am now old in age and, therefore, it has struck me that I should make any such arrangement in respect of my property, etc."

Again, when he comes to the actual gift, he cays-

"I, therefore, with this view have proposed that I should make gift of my entire property specified below in favour of my daughter Anjuman-un nisa, who is a widow who being childless has made, etc."

On the following page the learned Subordinate Judge says -

The defendant No. 1 was questioned by the Court on this point on the last page of her deposition and said-

"The marriage of Quisar un nisa and Fasahat Ali have not yet taken place. There was formerly a talk of their being married together, but now their parents do not agree to their marriage."

It was left for the Court to put this question as the plaintiffs, though they crossexamined the defendant at very great length, had put no question to her on this point.

There is one other point not directly connected with the merits of the appeal on which we think it desirable to say a few words. It is with reference to the pleadings. On 30th June, before written statements had been filed, the Court ordered written state. ments to be filed on 8th August, replication on 14th August, and fixed 17th August for The date of issues was subsequently changed to 17th September. On that the proceedings contained only a statement of Shaikh Shabarshah Husain, Pleader for the plaintiffs, that they did not press their plea contained in paragraph 27 of their replication, namely, that even if the gift had been completed by delivery of possession they were entitled to repudiate it under the Muhammadan Liw. The parties or their Pleaders were not examined generally with reference to the pleadings as required by Order X, rule 1. In several cases which have come under our notice we have observed a tendency on the part of the suberlinate Courts to loss sight of two important provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, those contained in O der Vil, rule 9, and those contained in Order X, rale 1. The former provision lays down that no pleadings subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court upon such terms as the Court thinks fit. In this case a date was fixed for a replication as a matter of sourse before the written statement of the defendant had been filed and before it could possibly be known whether any further written pleading would be necessary. The proper way of clear. ing up the pleadings after the plaint and written statement have been filed is that prescribed by Order X, rule 1, the provisions of which are peremptory. The Court must, under that rule, at the first hearing of the suit, assertain from each party or his Pleader whether he admits or denies the allegations of fact made by the opposite party except where such admissions or denials are already contained in the written pleadings and must record such admissions or denials. A written replication is not a substitute for this oral examination of the parties and their Pleaders and it is of the utmost importance for the purpose of doing justice between the parties that this oral examination should be duly and earefully earried out by the Court.

This care is so clear on the main issue that it is unnecessary to go into the question of custom. The deed of gift was made with the utmost formality after communication with the persons most immediately idterested. In view of the matters stated in the deed it was quite natural that Mashuq Ali should wish to make a gift of the property to the defendant in her lifetime. The gift was followed by the most public and formal delivery of possession and was asted on, without any dispute by the persone now seeking to set it seide, for a period of eleven years during Mashuq Ali's lifetime and for a period of nearly three years after his death. Mashuq Ali took a leading part in the management of the property up till his death but he did so professedly on his daughter's behalf and in her name, and her title was repeatedly recognised, toth in Mashuq Ali's lifetime and after his death, alike by Ashiq Ali and by his son. Ashiq Ali has not come into the witness box to explain his admission and the explanation given by Dildar Husain is manifestly false. False also is the story put forward by Said-un nisa to account for the execution of the deed consistently with the ease set up by her. Mashuq Ali, through whom the plaintiffs claim, admitted the defendant's title and possession in the slearest possible way both in "solemn proceedings in Court." to use the phrase of the learned Subordinate Judge, in his sworn evidence in the muta. tion ease, and subsequently by giving receipts and signing leases on her behalf. possession was further recognised by the fact of her appointment as lambardar of Karsanda in place of her father, and indeed from the time of the gift the whole administration of the property, including the payment of house-tax for the ancestral house, was thenesforward sarried on in behalf. and on her name ber plaintiffs have utterly failed to show that the deed was a fictitious and unreal transaction and their suit should have been dismissed by the Court below.

We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

JUDGMENT.-This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the first respondent against the appellant and others for resovery of posses. sion of the mosque and Idge mentioned in the plaint. The plaintiff's grandfather and the first defendant's father were brothe s. ease for the plaintiff was that the morque and idga were places where persons who formed his father's jama were entitled to offer prayers and perform other religious esremonies and were in possession of his father till his death; that after his father's death he (the plaintiff) was appointed Kazi, (the business of the office of Kazi being con dusted by a deputy during his minority) and was in possession; that the first defendant took wrongful possession of the mosque and Idga under colour of his appointment as Kazi by the Government; and that the plaint. iff is, therefore, entitled to possession and mesne profits as elaimed in the plaint. The first defendant denied the appointment of the plaintiff as K zi and pleaded that he was the duly appointed Kazi and Pesh Imam and had been doing the necessary duries; that he was entitled to possession of the mosque and Idga; that the suit was barred by limitation and that the mosque and Idga were places which all the Mahammadans were entitled to use. Toe District Mansif dismissed the plaintiff's sait holding that the plaintiff did not prove his title. On appeal the Sabordinate Judge was of opinion that both the plaintiff and the first defendant were entitled to possession and management of the mosque and idga and he passed a decree for joint possession in favour of the plaintiff and the first defendant. Against this decree the first defendant has filed the present second appeal and the plaintiff has filed a memorandan of objections elaiming exelusive possession. We are of opinion that the desision of the Sabordinate Judge is right.

As regards the mosque and the Idga, it appears from Exhibit H, which is a statement made by the first defendant so long ago as 1:05, that the mosque and the Idga were buils and dedicated during the time of the Nawabs by the ancestors of the plaintiff and the first defendant. It is not disputed that the mosque and the Idga were in the possession of the ancestors of the parties ever since they were founded. Moideen Sahib, the great. grandfather of the first defendant, Jahangir bahib, his grandfather, Siraj-ud-Dia Sahib, his uncle, and Ghulam Moiteen, father of the plaintiff, were in possession and management of the mosque and Idga and also of the in im lands which were attached to the offise of K zi. Having regard to these fasts and to the fact that the mosque and Idga were built and owned by the ancestors of the parties, the reasonable presumption is that the office is hereditary in the family and that possession and enjoyment have been in the family since the foundation. The plaintiff was a minor about 10 years old when his father Ghulam Moidean died. The first defendant thereupon applied to the Government to be appointed Kazi and he was so appointed; but this would not, under the Kazis Act; XII of 1880, give the first defendant any rights as against the plaintiff. In 1863 the inam lands were enfracchised in the name of the plaintiff's father and it appears from Eshibit D that the plaintiff's father was put in possession of the musque on the 8th of August 1833. That he was in possession till his death is not disputed. He died on the 28th of April 190; and the first defendant was appointed Kazi in 1904. The attempt of the first defendant to get the patta of the inam lands transferred in his own name was unsuccessful as the Government held that, under the Kazis Act, he had no right to the lands. For some time after the death of the plaint. iff's father, plaintiff's first witness Sheik Mobideen Sahib, his brother-in law, was in possession of and was looking after the morque and Idga on behalf of the plaintiff. The first defendant, under colour of his appoint. ment as Kazi, applied under the Oriminal Procedure Oode to the Stationary Sab-Magistrate of Unimbatore and he was success. fal in keeping Sheik Mihideen Sihib out of the mosque and getting passession. It seems to us that, apart from any other question in the ease, the plaintiff who was in possession is entitled to get back possession from the first defendant on the strength of his posses.

DHUDABAI U. MARAIN.

sory title unless the first defendant can show an equal or better right. In the former case the plaintiff would be entitled to joint possession and in the latter case he would have no right to retain possession. In Mustapha Saheb v. Sontha Pillai (1) it was held that a person who is custed by another who has no better right is, with reference to the person so ousting, entitled to recover by virtue of the possession he had held before the onster even though that postession was without any title and that section y of the Specific Relief Act does not take away such right. In Narayana Row v. Dharmachar (2) it was held that possession is good title against everybody except the true owner and that the effect of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is that a person dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law is entitled to be reinstated even against the defendant who is a true owner. A similar view was taken in Vythialinga Padayachi v. I onnusuami Padayachi (3). As poseession and management of the mosque and Idga were in the family ever since they were founded over 200 years ago, it cannot be said that the plaintiff, who is a descendant of the senior branch, has no right to possession and management of that, the first defendant has got a better title than the plaintiff. The mere appointment of the first defendant as Kazi by the Government will not give him any superior claim as against the plaintiff. So far as the office of Kazi goes, any person can be appointed Kazi and it has been proved in the present case that the plaintiff has been performing the duties of the office of Kazi ever since he attained majority. A great deal of confusion has arisen owing to the fact that persons in possession of the mosque were also Kazis. The office of Kazi will not by itself give any right to the morque or Idga, What really happened seems to be that the offices of Kazi and Muttawali were till resently merged in the same person. We think the Sabordinate Judge was right in holding that it may be presumed on the facts of the present ease that the members of the plaint. iff's family were Kazis and Muttawallis. We are of opinion that, on the facts found by the Sabordinate Judge, the first defendant has no better right as Kazi than the plaintiff. Even the plaintiff as Kazi during his minority was invalid, it has been found by the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has been officiating as Kazi for a section of the Muhammadan Community ever since he attained majority and that he has been solely enjoying the inam lands. There is, therefore, no reason why he should be excluded from the right which his father and ancestors enjoyed as regards the mosque and the Idga.

As regards the memoranda of objections the Subordinate Judge finds that plaintiff has not proved his exclusive rights and we cannot disturb his finding.

The appeal and memoranda of objections are dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law-Mortgage by father—Suit by mortgaged —Sons not joined — Mortgage decree against father. Suit by sons to set aside decree — Want of legal necessity and antecedent debt—Pleas available to plaintiffs—Burden of proof.

In a suit by sons to set aside a mortgage decree passed against their father in respect of joint family property including their share in it in a suit to which they were not impleaded as parties, it is open to them to plead that part of the debt secured by the mortgage was not for legal necessity and the balance was not advanced for the satisfaction of an antecedent debt. The doctrine of reasonable satisfaction after due enquiry as to the propriety of an alienation of joint family property by the manager of the family must apply just as much to an antecedent debt of the father as to family necessities or pressure on the estate. [p. 255, col. 1.]

Per Kotical, A. J. Per Dhobley, A. J. C.—The rights of co-parceners in a Hindu family consisting of a father and his son do not differ from those of a co-parcener of a like family consisting of undivided brothers. No single co-parcener can alienate anything beyond his own share in the joint property, father being no exception to it When, however, a single co-parcener alienates the joint family property for necessary family purposes the alienation is binding upon the other members and upon the whole property covered by the alienation [p. 248, col 2.]

In a suit brought on a mortgage executed by the father, the son can call upon the mortgagee to show that the mortgage was for one of the two purposes either for legal necessity or for the satisfaction of an antecedent debt. The son's position is not injuriously affected by the mortgagee's omission to join him as a party to his mortgage suit and by the son being thus compelled to bring a separate suit for protecting his own interests. In a suit brought by a person to avoid a mortdecree passed in a suit to which he was not the debt was borrowed for immoral purposes but he can plead that there was no legal necessity for the loan or that no poration of it was an antecedent debt [p. 249, col. 2.]

A loan made to the father on the occasion of a grant by him of the mortgage on the family restate is not antecedent debt and the mortgage so created is not binding on the son's share in the property. [p. 250, col 1.]

The sale or charge by a father of joint family property in order to be binding on the son's shares should be made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. Appeal against the decree of the Additionenal District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 3th February 192) in Civil Suit No 16 of 1918.

Dr. H. S. Geur, for the Appellant. Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

FACTS appear from the following referring judgments:

Kotval, A. J. C.—(Nevember 3, 1920).—
The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that a decree obtained by Hiralal Sadaenkh, deceased husband of Ratnabai, defendant No. 1, and father of Dhudabai, defendant No. 2, on a mortgage was obtained by fraud and that it does not affect their shares in the mortgaged property.

2. The mortgagors and the plaintiffs are related as shown below:

3. The mortgage (Exhibit 2 D-2) was executed by Tukaram, Govind and Laxman for Rs 15,000 purporting to be made up as follows:—

"Rs. 5,000 to be paid to a prior mortgages Pralbad.

"Rs. 10,000 each borrowed for purposes of cultivation and payment of debts."

4. Suit No. 14 of 1915 was instituted by Hiralal against the mortgagors on the above mortgage on the 17th September 1915 and a preliminary decree was passed on the 11th November 1915. Hiralal having died.

DEUDABAT C. NARAIN.

on the record. Ratnabai was brought on the record. Ratnabai applied for a final decree on the 7th March 1918. On the 4th July 1918 Dhudabai applied to be recorded as decree holder on the ground that she had become entitled to recover the decretal amount under her father's Will, and on Ratnabai's admission she was recorded as decree holder. A final decree for foreslosure was passed on the 6th August 1918. While these proceedings were going or, the present out was instituted on the 8th May 1918.

5. The lower Court has found that the decree in Suit No. 14 of 1915 was not obtained by fraud and that finding is not now challerged.

6. The grounds on which the declaration that the plaintiffs' shares in the mortgaged property were not affected was sought were .that the mortgage debt was incurred for immoral purposes and not for legal necessity, or for payment of antecedent debts or any other purpose binding on the plaintiffs' shares in the joint estate. In reply, the defendants stated that the mortgages had made bona fide inquiries regarding the necessity of the mortgage-debt and was satisfied that it was required for paying off antesedent debts and for cultivation expenses and improvements. They further pleaded that the plaintiffs were represented in Sait No. 14 of 1915 by the defendants actually impleaded who were all the adult members of the joint family and had no right to question those proceedings.

7. The lower Court has found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the debt was incurred for immorel purposes and that the defendants had failed to prove that it was incurred for legal necessity, or that Hiralal made the necessary inquiry and was satisfied that a real necessity existed, or that they were incurred to pay off antecedent debts, that is, personal debts incurred by the father independently of the scourity of the joint family property. The lower Court then observed:

The question, therefore, is whether in this state of evidence the plaintiff; can susceed. In fact the question is one of burden of proof. The burden of proving that the debts were contracted for immoral and illegal purposes was evidently on the plaintiff, and they must fail to one extent to which the claim is based on these grounds because they have failed to dissharge the burden. But they can succeed even if it is shown that the debts were neither antesedent nor borrowed for the benefit of the family. Here the barden of proving that the money was borrowed to pay off antecedant debts or for the benefit of the family is on him or her who says so, and who on that ground wants that the alienation should be held binding on the plaintiffs who were not parties to the former sait and who eannot be said to have been represented in that sait by their fathers. sinse these are grounds personal to them and were not available to their fathers to contest the claim. In other words, the burden is on defendant No. 2 who says that the alienation is binding on the plaintiffs' shares because the debt was of a particular nature. It was for her to prove its nature, and as she has failed to prove it she cannot sussed in enforcing the mortgage against the plaintiffe' shares, and consequently plaintiffs must snessed in obtaining a declaration that the mortgage and the decree are not binding against their shares in the property."

- E. As held by a Bansh of this Court in Motivan v. Asyram (Ramgopal) (1), the plaintiffs are entitled to challenge the decree on grounds personal to themselves, and it is open to them in the present suit to have the question tried whether the mortgage executed by the father was binding upon them.
- 9. The question involved in this case is, as the lower Court has observed, one of burden of proof as to the antecedency of, or legal necessity for, the debt. Are the plaintiffs who have some into Court, to assail a mortgage-decree obtained against their fathers and have failed to prove that the debts were incurred for legal necessity, or were antecedent debts of the father, or is it necessary for the plaintiffs in order to succeed that they should prove that the debts were not antecedent or not incurred for legal necessity.

10. In Salu-Bim Chandra v. Bhun Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down the principles which govern alienations of the joint family property by one so-pareeper :-

"Under the law of the Mitskehara the joint family property owned, as stated, by all the members of the family as co-pareeners, cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-pareener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-pareeners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co pareener in his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid; the estate is wholly unaffected by it and its entirely stands free of it."

The law of Mistakshara has, however, given to the father in his eapacity of manager and head of the family certain powers with reference to the joint family property. The general principle in regard to that matter is that he is at liberty to effect or to diapose of the joint property in respect of purposes denominated necessary purposes. The prineiple in regard to this is analogous to that of the power vested in the head of a religious endowment or muth, or of the guardian of an infant family. In all of the cases where it can be established that the estate itself that is under administration demand. ed, or the family interests justified, the expenditure, then those entitled to the estate are bound by transactions. It is not accurate to describe this as either inconsistent with or an exception to the fundamental rule of the Mitakehara. For where estate or family necessity exists, that necessity rests upon the so pareeners as a whole, and it is proper to imply a consent of all of them to that act of the one which such necessity has demanded."

"But for the exception immediately to be noted, these two principles would cover the ground, and it would be clear that if the father of a family purported or presumed to mortgage or sell the joint family estate, the mortgage or sale would be entirely ineffectual."

"But while the principles as above set forth still stand, an appeal is made in this case to the following exception. Although the correct and general principle be that if the debt was not for the benefit of an estate then the manager should have no power either of mortgage or sale of that setate in order to meet such a debt, yet an exception has been made to cover the ease of mortgage or sale by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt. This being an exception from a general and sound principle, their Lordships are of opinion that the exception should not be extended and should be very carefully guarded."

The onus is on the party who seeks to enforce or support the alienation either on the ground of legal necessity or on the ground of its being for an antesedent debt. Admittedly, if the sons had been joined as parties to the mortgage, suit they sould have shallenged the binding nature of the mortgage so far as their interests were coneerned and the mortgagees would have had to prove either legal necessity or that the debts were antecedent debts of the father. The question is, whether the passing of a deeres on the mortgage against the father in the absence of the sons absolves the mortgagees from discharging the burden that lay on them. There seems to be no reason why the burden should be thus shifted as a result of the mortgagee's default, intentional or unintentional, in their duty to make the sons parties to the suit. There are rulings which lay down that the son can in such a case avoid the alienation only by showing that the debts were incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. But they seem to be based on the pious obligation of e son to discharge his father's debts not tainted with immorality or illegality. The fathers Tokaram end Govind are alive and those rulings, therefore, can have no application after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the ease eited above, where it is said:

"It was argued that a mortgage was binding because of an obligation of religion and piety which is placed upon the sons and grandsone, under the Mitakehara Law, to discharge their father's debts. If, accordingly, he has incurred a debt, and the debt was not for immoral purposes the pious obligation resting upon the sons and grandsons to discharge this debt is in practice worked out by giving effect to any mortgage or sale of the family property in which they, with the father, its manager, were joint owners, so as to enable the debt to be discharged."

"Waile the father, however, remains in life the attempt to affect the sous' and DEUDABAI C. NARAIN.

grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts, and not in respect of the debt baving been traly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, that attempt must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, the responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing. Accordingly, the ease founded merely upon pious obligation, and so strenuously argued before the Board, fails in the present instance by reason of the fact that Bhup Singh, who contracted the debt, is still alive."

12. In turmanund v. Orumbah Koer (3) the mortgages from the father who was in possession of the mortgaged property after foreslosure was held not relieved from the burden of proving necessity or inquiring into its existence. I, therefore, consider that the onus was rightly laid on the defendants in this case.

13. The next point to decide is whether the defendants have proved that Hiralal made any inquiries which satisfied him that the mortgage debt was required for paying off antecedent debts or for necessary purposes.

14. Rs. 5,000 are said to have been paid by Hiralal to a prior mortgagee Prablad. I concur with the view that the lower Court has taken that this is not an antecedent debt since it is not one incurred by the father independently of the security of the joint family property. On this point my learned colleague and I have differed in First Appeal No. 41-B of 1919 Sheonarain v. Nathu (4)] and the matter has been referred to a third Judge,

15. As regards the inquiry about the necessity of the cash loan of Rs. 10,000 reliance is placed in appeal merely upon the recitals in the mortgage deed. The recital regarding this sum runs as follows:—

"Rs. 10,000, in words ten thousand, British surrensy, have been agreed to be taken

(8) W. R. 1864, 143. (4) 65 Ind. Cas. 786, before the Registering Officer. On receipt of the same there we shall have received the full consideration of rupees fifteen thousand, British currency, for purposes of our cultivation and for payment of debts due to others."

The recital by itself does not establish legal necessity, though it is evidence of the representation made by the mortgagor. There is no reliable evidence to show that Hiralal made any inquiries and was satisfied as to the truth of the representation. As the lower Court etates, if he had made any inquiry, something more than what is in the recital would have appeared in the mortgage-deed. I agree with the lower Court's finding on the point.

16. In my opinion the decree of the lower Court is correct and this appeal should be dismissed,

Michair, A. J. C.—(November 3, 1920).—
The facts of this case are stated fully in the judgment of my learned brother Kotval. Tukaram is the father of plaintiffs Nos. I and 2 and Govind the father of plaintiff No. 3. Tukaram and Govind executed a mortgage in 1912. The mortgages instituted a suit in 1915 but did not implead the plaintiffs: he obtained a preliminary decree. The sons now seek to re-open that decree.

The only ground urged in this Court is that the mortgage was not executed for legal necessity. My learned brother, relying on Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1), holds that it is open to the plaintiffs to raise the question whether the mortgage was executed for nesessary purposes.

I have considerable diffilence in expressing my dissent both from my learned brother and from the ruling on which he relies. But I consider that it is my duty to base my decision on my view of the law.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (5) have stated:-

"Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sone, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority."

In the recent case, Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) this statement of the law has been quoted with approval.

In the present case the preliminary decree was the remedy of the creditors for a debt incurred in 1912. It appears to me, therefore, that the sons cannot impeach this decree if the debt existed and was not tainted with immorality.

I have carefully studied the reasoning of their Lordships on pages 36 and 37 of I, L, R. 13 Calentta [Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mo. hun (5)]. Their Lordships referred to the case of Deendyal v. Jugleep Narain Singh (6). In that case the appellant seized and sold in exact. tion only the right, title and interest of the father. It is open to a father to obtain advances on the security of his undivided In such a case the creditor share alone. may obtain a decree and bring to sale the undivided share of the father. desree is conched in ambiguous it is open to the some to urge that, as a matter of fast, their undivided shares were never attached or sold. In Nanomi Babusiin v. Modhun Mohun (5) their Lordships hold that the debt for which the decree was made was a joint family debt and infer from this that the sale was of the entire estate. But it is elear that they do not contradict the statement of law on the previous page by holding that the creditor's remedy may be impeashed on the ground that the original debt was not incorred for legal necessity.

In Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (7), the question I am considering is fally discussed. Their Lordships state:—

"It appears, therefore, from the decision that, in a case like the present, where sons claim against a purchaser of an accestral estate under an execution against their father upon a debt contracted by him, it is necessary for the sons to prove that the debt was contracted for an immoral purpose, and it is not necessary for the creditors to show that there was a proper inquiry, or to prove that the money was borrowed in a case of necessity."

In my opinion, ther, it is sufficient in the present case to find that the fathers did incur a debt in 1912 and that this debt was not incurred for immoral purposes. In 1915 the fathers could have legally sold the joint family property to discharge such a debt. The creditors' remedy taken in 1915 cannot then be impeached.

In the case of Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) the father of the plaintiffs mortgaged the joint ancestral property in 1909. The creditor in a suit instituted on the basis of this mortgage brought the property to sale in 1917. My opinion, which I express with the greatest respect, is that this sale was a remedy of the creditor for his debts and could not be impeached on the ground that there was no legal necessity for the loan contracted in 1909.

The learned Judges who decided the case of Motiram v. Asiram (Ramgopal) (1) held that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the question tried as to whether the mortgage executed by the father was binding upon the sons. They allowed the plaintiffs to argue that the mortgage was not justified because there was no legal necessity for the loan. In my opinion the law laid down in Bhagbut Fershid Singh v. Gir a Koer (7) is clear and the question of legal necessity at the time of the original loan cannot be raised: for the purpose of deciding this appeal this question should be referred to a Full Bench.

If my intrepretation of Bhagbut Pershad Singht. Gir.a Koer (7) is accepted, it follows, in my opinion, and I understand in that of my learned brother, that the present appealm ust succeed and the suit must be dismissed.

If it be held that the ruling on the point in Motivam v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) should be followed, I see no reason to differ from the conclusion of my learned brother that the passing of a decree does not shift the burden of proof. I agree with the finding of my learned brother that enquiry about the necessity of the cash loan of Rs. 10,000 has not been proved. I am of opinion, however, that the mortgage debt due to Hiralal was an antecedent debt for reasons which I have

ORDER.

ROTVAL AND MACNAIR, A. J. Cs.— (No-ember 3, 1920).—As there is a difference of opinion among us, it is referred, under section 10, (b) (ii), Central Provinces Courts Act, to such other Judge as the Judicial Commissioner may appoint. The point of difference is stated in the judgment of Macnair, A. J. O.

Batter, O. J. O .- (December 16, 1920) .-As the reference includes the question of the correctness of the decision by a Bench of two Judges in Motiram v. Asaram (Ram. gopal) (1) the Judges would have done better to ask for a Fall Bench under section 9 of the Courts Act. Under rule 3 of Notification No. 29.483 A of 14th June 1917 the Judicial Commissioner may order any reference to be made by a Bench. It is accordingly ordered that the reference shall be heard by a Fall Bench consisting of Messrs, Hallifax, Madholkar and myself personally, or the A. J. C. who may join the Court if I am on leave.

ORDER.

Read the representation made by Mudholkar, A. J. O, to the effect that he appeared as Advocate for one of the parties to this appeal while the suit was pending in the Court of first instance.

DRAKE BROCKMAN, J. C.—(December 22, 1920).—The Full Bench constituted by my predecessor's order dated the 16th current will include Kotval, A. J. C., instead of Mudholkar, A. J. C.

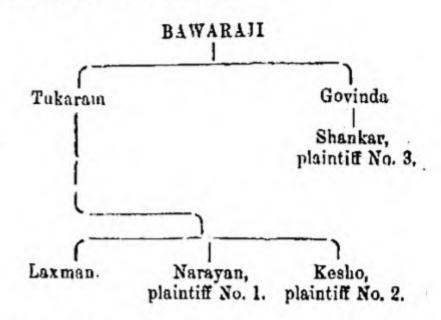

Deare-Brock Man, J. C.—(March 29, 1921).

The Full Bench as reconstituted above includes Mesers. Hallifax, Kotval and Prideaux, A. J. C's. I consider it desirable to place thereon a Hindu Judge, the question for decision being an important one of Hindu Liw. Rao Bahadar W. R. Dhobley is, therefore substituted for Mr. Prideaux.]

OPINION OF THE FULL BENCH.

DECELEY, A. J. O.—(July 14, 1921).—In order to understand the points of difference between the two learned Judges making this reference, it is necessary to state briefly the fasts of the case. The family table of the plaintiffs is as given below:-

Oa 3rd March 1903 the two brothers, Tukaram and Govinda, exsented a mortgage. deed in favour of one Pralbad for Rs. 3,500, borrowed by them in cash, mortgaging under it certain fields belonging to the joint family, of the total area of about 70 acres. They and Tukaram's son Laxman, who was then alive, executed another mortgage deed on 15th April 1912 in favour of one Hiralal. who is now represented by the present defendant-appellant, for Rs. 15,000, Rs. 5,000 out of which went to satisfy the earlier mort. gage in favour of Pralhad, the balance being paid in cash to the mortgagor. Under this mortgage several fields belonging to the family, of an approximate area of 500 acres. were mortgaged. In Sait No. 14 of 1915 on the file of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, the mortgage of 1912 was enforced and a preliminary decree was passed on 11th November 1915, which was on 8th August 1918 made final. To that suit, the present plaintiffs were not made parties.

2. In the meantime, the plaintiffs commensed their Suit No. 16 of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, for a declaration that the decree obtained in Suit No. 14 of 1915 was not binding on them or on their shares in the mortgage property, on the ground that the mortgage-debt was not insurred for any logitimate or nesessary family purposes or for the payment of any anteredent debt of their fathers. susseeded in getting a deeros in the Trial Court, as prayed for by them, it being held that the debt was not proved to have been borrowed for such purposes as would make it legally binding on the plaintiffs or on their shares in the property mortgaged.

DHUDABAI U. MABAIN

There was a difference of opinion on two points between the learned Judges of this Court, who heard the defendant's appeal, Maenair, A. J. C., was of opinion that the plaintiff could not attack the decree or question its binding nature merely on the ground that the debt had not been incurred for legal necessity or for family purposes. According to him that ground was insufficient for exempting the plaintiffs' shares from the operation of the decree and in order to succeed it was necessary for them to show that the debt had been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. This the First Court held they had not suseeded in proving. according to his view, the plaintiffs' suit was liable to be dismissed. Kotval, A.J.C., on he other hand, held that the plaintiffs were on the authority of Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) entitled to challenge the decree on grounds personal to themselves and that it was open to them in the present suit to have the question tried whether the mortgage executed by their fathers was binding upon them and their shares in the mortgage property. According to his view the plaint. iffs were entitled to succeed, if it was not shown that the debt had been incurred for legal necessity or for the payment of an antecedent debt of the fathers. There was, however, an agreement betweenthe two learned Judges on the question of the burden of proof. Assording to both of them, if the plaintiffs' suit was, on the grounds mentioned by them, tenable, the burden primarily lay upon the defendant to prove that the debt had been borrowed for legal necessity or for family purposes and it was not shifted merely because there was a deeree in her favour in the mortgage suit. They also agreed that the burden had not been discharged by the defendant and that, so far as the sum of Rs.10,000 the eash portion of the mortgage-money was concerned, legal necessity had not been established.

4. The second point on which the learned Judges differed was with reference to the item of Rs. 5,0.0 which went to satisfy the earlier mortgage. Macnair, A. J. C., held that this was what is in Hindu Law known as father's "antecedent" debt at the time of the second mortgage and that the alienation by way of the second mortgage made for paying off that debt bound to that extent the thole of the family property including the sons' shares in it. This portion of the considertien was not an antecedent debt, when the mortgage of 1908 was executed, as the loan and the transfer by way of mortgage to seeme it were contemporaneous and formed in reality parts of one and the same transaction. See Hira Ram v. Ulhe Ram (8) and Dilli Singh v. Bina (9). The debt did not, according to the view of Kotval, A. J. O., become antecedent at the time of the execution of the second mortgage in 1912, as it had originally been borrowed on the security of the joint family property.

5. The points of difference between the two learned Judges have not been specifically put in the form of issues either in their separate judgments or in the order of reference. These may, however, be put as under :-

(1) Are the plaintiffs in the present suit to be confined to the plea that the debt was borrowed for immoral purposes and can they not plead that there was no level necessity for the loan or that no portion of it was what is called an antecedent debt of their fathers?

(2) Was the sum of Rs. 5,000 an "antesedent" debt of their fathers at the time of the mortgage of 1912?

6. The questions raised here are not entirely new ones. They same up before the different High Courts and also before their Lordships of the Privy Council at different times in different forms and quite a bulky case law, not altogether uniform or consistent, has sprung up around them. The reported cases on the subject are too numerous and it will serve no useful purpose to refer to them all here. The whole law on the subject was practically overhauled in the well-known recent case of Sahu Bam Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), and their Lord. ships of the Privy Council made in that ease one more attempt to settle the dispute finally. All the principal reported cases of the different High Courts in which diverse views were expressed were in that ease eited and fully considered and it appears that their Lordships intended to settle finally. not only the points directly involved in that particular ease, but also other important points closely connected with them

DHUDABAI C. NARAIN.

On which the views of the different High Courts were not in harmony. What they intended has not, however, been accomplished, as we find that in a subsequent ease, the Madras High Court considered their Lordships' observations on the subject as mere obiter dicta, not meant as an authoritative and final decision on all the points discussed there. I refer to the case of Armugham Chutty v. Muthu Koundan (10). Under these circumstances, it becomes necessary to consider carefully the questions raised.

7. The want of harmony in the views expressed at different times is to a certain extent due to the apparent sorfleting nature of the two principles of the Mitekshara School of Hindu Law bearing on the subject. These are:—

(i) The son gets an interest in the ancestral property by his mere birth and becomes an equal co-owner along with his father and

(ii) The son is bound to pay the father's personal and private debts, unless these are incurred for purposes commonly known as illegal or immoral.

The father who has, before the son's birth, an absolute power of disposal over the ancestral property, is afterwards prevented by the express texts from alienating it, even his own share, except for sertain purposes which are usually designated as legal necessity or family purposes. The rights of so pareeners in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his son de not differ from those of the co parceners of a like family consisting of undivided brothers. The son occupies the same position and possesses the same rights against his father in respect of the ancestral property, as brothers have against each other in a joint family, see Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (11). The father does not possess any better rights as regards the alienation of the ancestral property. The son's ownership is not subordinate, but is so-ordinate. This is the principal feature of a joint family governed by the Mitskehara School, strictness of the rule bas, apparently on equitable grounds, been somewhat relaxed by some of our High Courts by giving effect to the alienations made by a coparsener to the extent of the alienor's share, the others still adhere to the original principle and declare the whole alie. nation void and inoperative. This Court has for a long time taken a view similar to that prevailing in Madrae and Bombay and it has been settled in our Provinces that an alienation for value by a member of a joint Hindu family holds good to the extent of his own share in the property 888 Mukund Ram Swal v. Ran Retin (12) and eases eited therein and also Kusanlal v. Nathu (13).

The rights of a son in a joint Hindu family do not thus differ from those of any other so-paresner. It is, however, settled law that the second principle mentioned above furnishes an important exception to this rule. The two principles-that a son takes a present vested interest jointly with his father in ancestral property, and that he is legally bound to pay his debts not ineurred for immoral purposes-apparently sorflet with each other, as, if the son be legally liable to pay the father's personal debts, if not immoral, it would seem as a matter of source to follow that the father has power to alienate the whole of the family property for such debts and that the son would not be able to question the alienation. It is this conflict between the two principles that has caused diffieulty in giving full effect to each of them. It appears to me that this diffioulty is to a certain extent due to the fact that what was, in my opinion, under the original texts merely a pious duty on the son's part has been declared to be a legal duty enforceable against him to the extent of the property taken by him through the father. The fact that under the old texts, the liability to satisfy the ansestor's debts was thrown only upon the son and the grandson and that it was irrespentive of any assets left to them by the ancestor would show that it was intended merely to be a pious obligation. The liability of the grandson was limited to the payment of only the principal dobt and was not bound to pay any interest at all. Under the old Hinda Law the rule of damdupat prevailed and the son had, therefore to pay interest not exceeding the amount of the original debt. great grandeon had not to pay any portion of the grandfather's debt. Under the present law the liability of the son and the grandson in respect of the payment of interest is not in any way limited. There is also another oironmetanes worth mentioning in this connection. Under the old texts the son's liability for the payment of the father's debts arose only after the "If the father without father's death. paying a debt which is due dies or goes to a distant country or is attl eted with an incurable disease, then his debts must be paid by his son and son's son by reason of their somebip and grandsonship, even if no assets of the father or of the grandfather have been left"- see Yajnavalkya's Smriti, Chapter II, verse 50, and the Mitaksbara commentary on it. "The father having gone abroad, the son is not bound to pay his debt before the lapse of twenty years" Narada, I. 14; Shered Books of the East, Volume XXIII, Edition 1889, page 46. This period of twenty years was apparently fixed with a view to raise a presumption of the father's death. Bri. haspati also says that the debt of the father is to be paid by the son, if the father is no longer alive, see the same volume of Sacred Books of the East, page 32", verse 47. It will thus be seen that the original liability which the old texts upon the son for the payment of laid the father's debt has now been very much enlarged.

9. Strictly speaking, the two principles mentioned above are quite distinct, one from the other and the liability of a sen to pay the father's debt has nothing to do with his right as a co-owner in the ancestral property. As observed in the case of Sahu Ram Ohundra v. Bhup Singh (2), responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing. The son may be liable to pay the father's parsonal and private debts, but the validity and the binding contracter of a mortgage or other alienation by the father of the joint family property as against the son has to be determined by another test altogether and it is whether the alienation is for necessary family pur-If it be not for those purposes, it would not be strictly binding upon the son or his share in the joint ancestral property. The general rule is that no single co-parcener can alienate anything beyond his own share in the joint property, the father being no exception to it. When a single so parcerer alienates the joint family property for necessary family purposes, the alienation is binding upon the other members of the family and upon the whole property covered by the alienation. This is, strictly speaking, no exesption to the general rule mentioned above, as such an alienation must be considered to bave been made by the whole family for their joint benefit. , part from the express texts making such alieuations binding on the whole family, the question would seem to be governed by the ordinary law of agency. The real exception is in the case of an alienation made by the father for the payment of his personal and private debte, provided these are not tainted with immorality and provided also these are what is called " antecedent" debte, that is, debts already existing and outstanding at the time of the alienation and not raised at the time of the alienation and by means of it. It is now settled law recognised by a long series of reported cases that a mortgage of ancestral property belonging to a joint Hindu family governed by the Micakshara School is binding on the mortgagor's son, if it be justified by legal necessity or if it be for the payment of an antecedent debt of the mortgagor. The son either as a defendant in the mortgage suit brought by the mortgagee or as the plaintiff in the suit instituted by bimself cannot avoid the mortgage, unless. he shows that the antecedent debt was inentred for immoral purposee. He would have also to show that the mertgagee was aware of the immoral nature of the previous debt. If the existence of the previous debt or of the legal family necessity be not proved, the mertgagee would not be able to hold the son's share in the mortgage property liable, See DEUDABAI U. NARAIN.

Ganesh Dher v. Nind Lal (14), Hiraram v. Ush Rame (8), Dilli ringh v. Bina (8), Ratan. chant v. Sheocharan (15) and Ohantrades Singh v. Mata Frasa 1(16). la a suit brought on a mortgage executed by the father, the son ean, therefore, call upon the mortgagee to show that the mortgage was for one of the two purposes mentioned above, so as to be binding upon his share in the mortgage property. If the mortgage be found to have been for neither of these two purposes, the mortgagee would not be able to hold the son or his share in the mortgage property liable. If this would be a good deferee in the mortgage-suit, it is not understood how the son's position could be injuriously affected by the mortgagee's omission to join the son as a party to his mortgage suit and by the son being thus compelled to bring a separate suit for protesting his own interest. It is true that equitable considerations would arise in favour of a bona file transferes for value, such as auction-purchaser, and that in such eases, the son would have no remedy against him, unless he showed that the anteedent debts were of an immoral nature which he was not bound to pay. In the present case, however, there are no such equitable considerations in favour of the defendant, at least so far as the eash portion of the mortgage-money goes and her position has not in any way been improved by the mere fact that the foreslosurs decree has been made final in her favour and by the fact that in the present suit she happens to be the defendant, the sons being the plaintiffe. The grounds on which the attack an alienation made by the father are available to them both as a defence when they are defendants and as an attack when they are themselves sning as plaintiffs.

10. It is contended that the present plaintiffs should be considered to have been properly and sufficiently represented in the previous suit was not maintainable on grounds which the fathers could have raised in defence for the sons. The pleas raised by the plaintiffs now would have been foreign to the mortgage suit, as these had the effect

(14) 2 O. P. L. R. 284. (15) 51 Ind. Cas. 28, 15 N. L. R. 89. (16) 1 Ind. Cas. 479; 31 A. 176; 6 A. L. J. 268 (F. B), of claiming for the sons a paramount and superior title to the mortgage property, as against the mortgagors. The fathers sould not have raised these pleas in defence either for themselves or for the sons. In any case, they did not represent the sons in the mort. gare suit so far as the present pleas went and these are still available to the sons. If contention raised by the defendant were correct, the sons would not be able to maintain in a sait even on the ground that the debt was of an immoral nature. Though there has been a diversity amongst the several High Courts on other points, there is none as regards the son's right to avoid an alienation made by the father on the plea that debts for the satisfaction of which it was made, were immoral and that he was not bound to pay them.

11. The case of Nanomi Babuarin V. Modhun Mohan (5) relied upon by Mansanir. A J. C, in support of his view was discussed in Sahu Ran Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) and it does not help the defendant. The observation made in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (5) to the effect that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt or against ereditor's remedies for their debte, if not tainted with immorality, was fully considered by their Lordships, who held that it did not give any countenence to the idea that the joint family estate could be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father except where the sale or charge bad been for diesharging an autecedent debt, when the ce it was advanced at the very time of the erestion of a charge. In my opinion the case of Motiram v. Asarum (Ramgopal) (1) correctly lays down that, in cases like the present one, the sons can re-open the mortgage decree on grounds personal to themselves and can avoid the mortgage by showing that it was given for a debt which was not binding on them under the Hinda Law.

My answer to the first question is that, in the present emit the plaintiffs are not confined to the plea that the debt was borrowed for immoral purposes, but that they camplead there was not legal necessity for the loan or that no portion of it was an antecedent debt.

12. The expression "antesedent deb: "does not ovenr anywhere in Hindu Law. It was in Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (17) held that there was no distinction in principle between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt and a mortgage given for a debt then incurred, for in either case the debt was binding on the son and the enforcement of the secraity exonerated him from the burden of his father's debts. Similarly, in Maheswar Dutt v. Kishun Singh (18) no distinction was made between debts insurred to pay off antesedent debts and those insurred for present necessities. Banerji and Richards. JJ, saw no distinction in principle between a debt secured by a mortgage and an unsecured debt, see Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (16). The point need not be further pursued, as it has now been authoritatively settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a loan made to the father on the occasion of a grant by him of mortgage on the family estate is not an antecedent debt, and that the mortgage so created is not binding on the son's share in the property, see Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). Even in the ease of Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (10), where the Madras High Court declined to accept the correctness and the authority of eertain observations made in the ease of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) on other points, the finality of the above view, so far as the Courts in India are concerned, was accepted. The mortgage executed in 1905 in favour of Pralhad cannot, therefore, be said to have been executed for the payment of an antecedent debt. The transfer by way of mortgage was made for a each payment of an antecedent debt. The transfer by way of mortgage was made for a cash payment and it was not on that day an antecedent debt. It could not, therefore, be binding on the son's shares in the property. The question is, whether the second mortgage of 1912 was binding on them to the extent of the amount of the consideration which went to satisfy the earlier mortgage; in other words, the question is, whether the amount due on the earlier date was an "antecedent" debt in 1912 when the second mortgage was excented. Though the point did not directly and specifically arise in the case, their Lordships expressed

(17, 27 M. 326. (18) 34 C. 184; 11 C. W. N. 294; 5 C. L. J. 441. their views on it in elear and unambiguous terms, for the guidance of the Courts in India. In the Madras case of Arumugham Ohetty v. Muthu Koundan (10), already eited. the Fall Bench of that High Court considered these views as mere obiter and held in direct conflict therewith that an independent debt, neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a Hindu father on the security of the joint family estate, antesedent to the mortgage sued on, was an "antecedent debt," so as to support a charge on the son's shares also, to the extent of the sams secured on the prior mortgage. That this is a direct conflict with the views expressed in Sahu Rim Chandra v Bhup Singh (2) would be clear from the following extract from their Lordships' judgment:-

"In their Lordhsips' opinion these expressions which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his ereditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, viz., that no manager, guardian, or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position : under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might DHADUBAI C. NABAIN.

be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalize any such transaction. The limits of the prinsiple of the exception have been thus set forth because, in their Lordships' opinion, they form a guide to the settlement of the confict of authority, in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

Thue, according to their Lordships, the sale or charge in order to be binding on the son's shares should be made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. There is no ambiguity or doubt left in the matter. This view was meant to settle finally the previous conflict on the subject of antecedent debt and was expressed in such definite terms so that it might be followed by the Courts in India. It will thus be seen that it was not an obiter of an ordinary nature and, coming as it does from such a high authority as Privy Conneil, it should be followed.

13. The view expressed in Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Shup Singh (2', apart from its high authority, appears to be strictly in accordance with the principles governing a joint Mitaksbara family. There is nothing "startling in the proposition that while an antecedent debt of a simple character can support a subsequent mortgage or sale of the son's share also in the ancestral property, the fact that the antecedent creditor got the additional scourity of a mortgage deprives the anbsequent alience of the right to rely upon the antecedent character of the debt discharged by the consideration paid for his alienation." The Hindu Law made the son liable for the father's personal and private debts, that is, debts which he could borrow on his The debts which personal eredit. the father borrows on the security of the whole of the joint family property sannot be said to be his personal debts. It is well-known that a person is able to borrow much more money on the security of immoveable property than that upon his personal credit. The debts which the father can borrow on his personal credit would be petty sums of money, as compared to what he would be able to borrow on the security of the whole of the immoveable property belonging to the family.

It could not have been intended that the son's liability under Hinda Law to pay off the father's debts should extend to such heavy debts. The son would not, therefore, be bound to pay the debt borrowed by the father on the security of the joint family property and the charge or mortgage so created by the father would not affect the son's share in it.

14. My answer to the second question, therefore, is that the sum of Rs. 5,000 due on the earlier mortgage was not an "antecedent" debt of the fathers at the time of the mortgage of 1912.

15. Though the grounds that the amount due under the earlier mortgage and paid off out of the consideration of the second mortgage was an antecedent debt and that the second mortgage was, therefore, to that extent, binding upon the son's shares in the mortgage property fail, there are certain equities in favour of the second mortgages. In such eases, bona nde transferess for value have always been given protection on equitconsiderations. As, for instance, when the joint ansestral family has gone out of the family under a conveyance given by the father for payment of his debts or under an execution sale for such debts, the sone cannot recover their share unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and also that the tranferee had notice that they were so contracted. In the present ease the debt due under the earlier mortgage had already become overdue and there was a certainty of the prop. erty being foreslosed, if it was not re paid. The old mortgage was earrying interest at 15 per cent., while the money advanced under the second mortgage was 9 per eant. There was thus an actual pressure on the estate and the second mortgage was more advantageous. The second mortgages was not expected to know the subtle and nice distinctions regards the term "antecedent debt," which point there was neither certainty nor unanimity even amongst the lawyers. The maxim that every body is presumed to know law and that its ignorance is no excuse cannot be applied when we have to decide whether a sertain act was or was not bona fide. The first mortgage was excented by both the brothers, who were the only adult male members of the family then and the second mortgages must have honestly thought that DHUDABAI C. NARAIN.

borrowed for family purposes. He acted perfectly bona file. The case would certainly have been different, had he himself been the creditor and advanced money under the first mortgage. My opinion, therefore, is that on this ground the second mortgage is binding on the son's shares in the property to the extent of the amount borrowed for satisfying the first mortgage. I have to observe that this is not an entirely new point, but that it had been taken up in the pleadings in the Trial Court, though not in this form.

I had the advantage of reading the jadgment which my learned brother Hallifax proposes to deliver in this case and asserding to him there was another ground why the second mortgage should be held binding on the sons' shares to the extent of the amount which went to satisfy the earlier mortgage. It is that as under the earlier mortgage the father had charged only 70 acres of land which was much less than their share in the whole 50) acres belonging to the joint family; it was perfectly valid and enforceable to that extent and that the subsequent mortgage executed for paying up that debt was, there fore, binding on the sons' shares. With the utmost respect, I have to differ from my learned brother, as the view expressed by him does not commend itself to me. When the family property is not divided, no individual member can say that any particular share or any particular property belongs to him. In every bit of land belonging to the family, all members have their shares and interest. In the 'O agree of land, which the father's mortgage, the sons had their shares and those shares the fathers could not validly convey except for certain specified purposes already mentioned. Moreover, the fathers did not purport to mortgage the 70 acres of land, as their individual shares in the joint family property.

In my opinion, therefore, the fact that only a portion of the family land was mort-gaged under the mortgage of 1938 would not, in any way, affect the rights of the sons and would not make either of the two mortgages binding upon them or their shares in the joint property.

Kotvat, A. J. C.—(August 2, 1921).—My learned brother Masnair, A. J. U., and I differed on two points. The first one was whether Motiram .v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) was rightly decided and whether the pleathat there was no legal necessity for the loan or that the amount of Rs. 5.000 due to Prablad was not an antecedent debt of their fathers could be raised by the plaintiffs in this suit. The second point which must be formulated with reference to our judgments in First Appeal No. 41 B of 1919 [Sheonarain v. Natiu (4)] was whether according to Sahu Ram Ohandra v. Bhup Singh (2), the mortgage debt due to Pralbad was an antecedent debt at the time of the mortgage of 1912.

On the first point I have very little to add to what I have already stated in my judg. The point of distinction between ment. Nanomi Bibuasin v. Molhun Mohun (5) and Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Kor (7), relied on by Masnair, A. J. C., and the present case is, that in those cases at the time of the institution of the suit the property had already passed out of the family, whereas here the property was then still in the possession of the family. The decree in Sait No. 14 of 1915 was, moreover, not the ramedy of the ereditor for his debts. It was merely a step towards the remedy: Kishen Chand v. Sohan Lal (1). My opinion on this point is that Motiran v. Asiram (Ramgopal) (1) was rightly decided and that in the present case the plaintiffs could raise the pleas, that there was no legal necessity for the loan and that the amount of Re. 5,000 due to Pralhad was not an anteredent debt of their fathers.

The only point referred in the present case was the first one. The second point did not form the subject of reference as it had already been referred in First Appeal No. 41 B of 1919 | Sheonarain v. Nathu (4)]. Both points, bowever, have been argued and dealt with by my learned colleagues and the Bench deciding the present case will have the advantage of their opinions. On this point I only wish to add that the view taken by me in my judgment in First Appeal No. 41-B of 1919 (Sheonaroin v. Nathu (4) where I have dealt with the matter at some length ti: , that, secording to Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), the mortgage-debt due to Pralhad was not an antecedent debt of the fathers of the plaintiffs is further sup-

HALLIPAN, A. J. C - (August 5, 1921) .- The learned Judges who made this reference and the learned Coursel who argued it were clearly under the impression that the main matter for decision by this Fell Bench was the somewhat thorny question of the correct interpretation of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Counsil in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2). I find, bowever, on examination of the case that a discussion of that question is not necessary for a decision of the points of difference between the two learned Judges. reference is of a difference of orinion made to a Single Judge under section 10 (b) (ii) of the Central Provinces Courts Act, not of a question of law made under section 9. As it involved the examination of the sourcetness of a published ruling of a Bench of this Court in Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1), which a Single Judge or a Beach would be bound to follow, and also was considered to involve an examination of the Privy Council case already mentioned, it would perhaps have been simpler to refer it in the first place to a Full Bench under section 9. The difficulty was surmounted by an order of the Judicial Commissioner, passed under rule 3 of the rules relating to Benches published in Notification No. 29-489 A of the 14th of June 1917, that the reference should be heard by a Full Bench. That, however, does not alter the character of the reference. It is still one under section 10 (b) (ii), that is to say, a reference of the point or points on which a difference of opinion exists between the two learned Judges who made it, and that is all we have to deside.

(2) The points of difference have not been formulated, but from the judgments recorded I take them to be as follows:

1. In reference to the consideration of the mortgage of 1912, are the plaintiffs limited to the plea that the sum of Rs. 5,000 advanced to their fathers in 1908 was a debt incurred for immoral purposes, or can they plead that there was no legal necessity for the alienation in respect of the loan of Rs. 10,000 made in 1912 and that the amount of Rs. 5,000 advanced in 1908 could not properly be called in 1912 such an antecedent debt of their fathers as would be binding on their chares in the property?

2. If the plaintiffs can plead that the debt of Rs. 5,000 was not in 1912 such an anteredent debt of their fathers as was binding on their property, was it so or not?

Kotval, A. J. C., following Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (i) held that both the pleas mentioned were open to the plaintiffs and that on a proper interpretation of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) the debt of Rs. 5.0.0 could not in 1912 be called an antecedent debt of the fathers because it had been secured by a mortgage of the family property when it was first incurred in 1:08. Masnair, A. J. C., was unable to agree with the ruling in Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) and was of opinion that the ruling of the Privy Conneil in Nanomi Babuasin v. Madhun Mohun (5) lays down that in a case like the present the sons can only take one ples and that is that any antecedent debt of their father's which forms a part of the consideration of the slienation by their father was incurred for immoral purposes. He differed also as to the proper interpretation of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) and held that the debt of Rs. 5,000 was no less an antecedent debt of the fathers so as to bind the property merely because it had been essured on the family property before it was such a debt.

(3) As to the pleas that san be taken by the sons of a Hindu father in attacking a mortgage by him on which a decree has been obtained in a suit in which they were not impleaded, I am in entire agreement with the learned Judges who decided Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgoral) (1). Their decision is based on that of the Privy Council in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (5) which Magnair, A. J. C., reads as restricting the sone to the one plea that their father's debt was immoral. It certainly does so restrict the sons in that ease, but the only question before their Lordships was of the way in which an admittedly existing debt due by their father at the time of the alienation might be assailed. They did not DHODABAI U. NARAIN.

lay down or even suggest by implication that the existence of the debt might not be disproved, or that a plea of want of legal necessity might not be taken in respect of any part of the concideration of the alienation that was not a pre existing debt.

- essential facts on which the (4) The desision was based were exactly the same in Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Gir a Koer (7). The alienation was for a debt due by the father the previous existence of which was admitted, and their Lordships laid down that in such a case the only plea open to the sons was that the debt had been insurred for immoral purposes. Now the plea that the amount of Rs. 5,000 which formed a part of the consideration of the mortgage of 1912 was not binding on the estate according to the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) is a plea that there was no existing "father's debt", and ean certainly be taken. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision in Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) is correct, and that in the present case the plaintiffs are entitled to advance the plea that there was no legal nesessity in 1912 for their fathers to incur the debt of Rs. 10,000 and also the plea that in that year the amount of Rs. 5,000 due by their fathers was not an antecedent debt of their fathers so far as they were concerned, that is to say, that no antecedent debt of their fathers' which bound them was then in existence.
- (5) Before discussing the second point it is necessary to set down a few facts which do not appear in the judgments of the learned Judges who made the reference. The genealogy of the plaintiffs which is given by Kotval, A. J. C., may first be re-produced for convenience. It is this:

The first of the two mortgages with which we are concerned was executed by Tukaram and Govind Ran on the 3rd of March 1908. In the plaint which was filed on the 8th of May 1918 Shankar is described as seven years of age, so that be cannot have been in existence or even in gremio matris in March 1908. The two mortgagors were, therefore, at that time owners of five. eighths of the joint family property, which, according to the personal law to which Hindus are subject in the Central Provinces and Berar, as well as in Bombay and Madras, they were competent to alienate. Even if Shankar had been in existence then the brothers Takaram and Govind Rao would have been owners of three eighths of the property.

(6) The property mortgaged in 1908 was three fields with a total area of 70.33 acres and a rental of Rs. 72. The mortgage which is the main subject of this suit was executed on the 15th of April 1912 by Tukaram, Govind Rao and Lakshman and comprises 22 fields, including only two of the three mortgaged in 1905, with a total area of 5,7.20 acres and a rental of Rs. 502-12-C. Now it is the basis of the plaintiffe' care that all the land mortgaged in 1912 was ancesteal property, so that the excess over the seventy acres previously mcr:gaged cannot have been acquired after 1908, and it was admitted before us that all the land mortgaged in 1912 was joint family property in 1908. One more fact bearing on the matters under discussion is this. The mortgage of the seventy acres in 1:08 was executed in favour of one Pralhad, and in 1912 Pralhad's mortgage was redeemed by the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant in this suit Rs. 5,000 in question, and the bond was taken back and has been produced.

(7) It follows, therefore, that in 1908, when Tukaram and Govind Rao alienated 70 acres, they were entitled, if they chose, to alienate no less than 317, (or at the least 190, even if Shankar had been in existence then) without the consent of the other members of the co parcenary body. It is probably true that an alienation by a member of a joint Hindu family of a specified item in the family property is good only to the extent of his share in that item, or rather in the equivalent of that item that might be allotted to him in a partition, even though the whole specified item is less than the chare he is entitled to alienate. This proposition is interpreted to mean that in this case if the mortgage of 1908 had been foreclosed the mortgages on partition could have got only five-eighths of seventy acres. It seems to me elear, however, that in such a case equity would require that the transferor should be compelled to make good his contract to the full extent of his capacity to do so. This seems to be the visw taken by Stanyon, A. J. O., in Mohanlal v Tet Chand (21) though that was not exactly the point considered in that case. If that view is correct, there is no farther question about the validity of the alienation of 1:12 in respect of the Rs. 5,000. Neither view of the meaning of the pronounce. ment in Sahu Ram Chandra v Bhup Singh (2) would make a debt by the father, secured not even partly on property belonging to else but entirely on property anybody belonging to himself, anything but an antecedent debt for payment of which he is entitled to alienate the joint property of himself and his cons.

(8) Another point of view is this. Even if we assept the view that the desision in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (2) means that what is undoubtedly in fact an antecedent debt of the father seases to be an antecedent debt binding on the sons merely because he secured it by a mortgage of his sons' shares along with his own, it seems to me the mortgagees in this case would be amply protected by the dostrine of reasonably satisfactory enquiry into the necessity for the alienation. This dostrine of reasonable satisfaction, after due enquiry as to the propriety of an alienation of joint family property by the manager of the family, must apply just as much to an antecedent father's debt as to family necessities or pressure on the estate. The mortgagess could searcely be expected to know anything about such a delicate point of law as that raised in the case, about which there is even now so much discussion, many years before it was enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Conneil, whatever the true interpretation of their Lordships' enunciation may be, and at that time any person who ascertained that a Hindu father had been owing money for some years and had gone to the length of mortgaging the whole of his family property for it, would have been quite justified in assuming, as all the Courts in India did, that this antesedent debt of his was one for which he could alienate their shares with his own in the joint property, whether the mortgage bound their shares in the property or not. These mortgagees assertained that Tukaram and Govind Rao actually owed Rs. 5,000 for which they had mortgaged only seventy agras of land out of a family estate of 500 in . which they knew these two co-parceners had more than a half share. They had, therefore, every reason to be quite satisfied that the sum of Rs. 5,000 was properly due by Tukaram and Govind Rao. and constituted a debt for which in 1912 they were fully entitled to alienate their three minor sons' shares in the family prop. erty.

(9) I cannot, indeed, see that they would have been in any worse position even if the previous mortgage had been of the entire family property. If they were satisfied that an unsecured father's debt existed it would not be for them to institute enquiries and make sure that the debt had not been insurred for immoral purposes before advancing money on the security of the family property for its re-payment. Similarly, if the previous debt was secured on the family property it would not be necessary for them to enquire whether the money has originally been borrowed for family necessity or the debt had been in existence as a father's debt before the mortgage was executed. They would be perfectly justified in assuming that it was so, for, to translate the familiar maxim of law, the chances are that what has been done has been done honestly and properly.

(10) For these two reasons, I hold, in respect of the second of the two matters of difference referred, that the sum of Rs. 5,000 which forms a part of the consideration of the mortgage of 1912 was then an antecedent debt due by Tukaram and Govind Rao, in payment of which they were entitled to alienate their sons' share in the joint family property.

HALLIFAX, KOTVAL AND DECELEY, A. J. Cs.—
(August 5, 1921).—For the reasons recorded in our separate judgments we are unanimously of opinion that it was open to the plaintiffs to plead that there was no legal necessity for the alienation of their shares in the property in respect of the loan of Rs. 10,000 made in 1912 and no justification for it in respect of the amount of Rs. 5,000 advanced in 1908 for the reason that the sum was secured by a mortgage on their shares when it was first advanced. Two of us, forming a majority of the Fall Bench, are further of opinion that the mortgage of 1912 is binding on the whole property mortgaged in respect of the amount of Rs. 5,000 then paid in redemption of the mortgage of 1908.

MUHAMMAD SAID U. ABDUL ALI.

FINAL JUDGMENT.

AND PRIDRACK, A. J. C.'s .-(August 8, 1921.)-The Fall Bensh has held that the desision in Metiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (1) is occreet and that the plaintiffs are entitled to advance the plea that there was no legal necessity for the lcan in 1912 and that the amount of Rs. 5,000 due to Pralhad was not an antesedent debt of their fathers. As regards the question whether, according to Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2), the amount of Rs. 5,0(0 constituted an antecedent debt in 19.2 although the point was not directly referred, yet two of the Judges of the Fall Bench have held that it did not. We are also of the same opinion. The result is that the appeal must fail. It is dismissed with costs. G. B. D.

Defendant sold two shops and in the deed of sale covenanted that in case of eviction by the Municipality the vendee would be entitled to refund of the purchase money. The vendee made a gift of the shops in favour of the plaintiff and the deed of gift contained the following clause: "The donce like the donor will be bound by all the terms and all the rights to realise rents, to do repairs, etc., which I had under this deed vest in the donee." Plaintiff was evicted from the shops by the Municipality and brought the present suit to recover the purchase, money from the defendant:

Heid, that the right to recover compensation had not been assigned to the plaintiff under the deed of gift and that his suit must, therefore, fail. [p. 257, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 21st March 1921, affirming that of the Muneif, First Class, Delhi, dated the 1st Ostober 1920.

Dr. Shuin ul Din, for the Appellant. Mr. M. Obedulla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.-On the 19th July 1907, the defendant in this case transferred two shops or their aml in favour of the plaint iff appellant's father. In the sale deed there was entered a covenant to the effect that in case of eviction by the Municipality the vendee would by entitled to refund of the purchase money and also to recover the expenses of repairs. On the 23rd of November 1910 the vendee made a gift of the two shops in favour of his son, the plaintiff appellant before me. The plaintiff, however, was evicted by the Municipal Committee in August 19 9. He, therefore, preferred this claim for the refund of the purchase money plus Rs. 100 expenses insurred by his father in repairs. The suit was resisted on the ground that the right to recover the compensation or the purchase-money was not assigned under the deed of gift to the plaintiff, and that there being no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant no suit of the nature brought by the plaintiff could be maintained. Both the Courts below have accepted the defence and have dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal to this Coart and the main contention put forward on his behalf by his learned Counsel. Khalifa Shuja-ud Din, is that according to the correct construction of the deed of gift the right to recover compensation was also transferred to the plaintiff. I have read the deed of gift earefully and I do not find that there is anything in the deed which bears out the contention of the learned Connsel. The following words in the deed of gift are especially relied on by the learned loansel in support of his "Toe done like the argument, namely, donor will be board by all the terms and all the rights to realise rents, to do repairs, etc., which I had under this deed vest in the donee." I cannot hold that under this clause the right to recover compensation was also assigned to the plaintiff. In my opinion, the Courts below were right, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. I order accordingly.

Appeal against the decree passed by the District Judge, Akola, dated the 27th April 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 114 of 1919.

Mr. M. R. Bose and Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case, as the legal representatives of one Sardaribai, sued defendants Nov. 1 to 3 as the legal representatives of the deseased Harisingh on a mortgage deed of 5th June 1913 elaiming Rs. 2,253 thereon. The 4th defendant was joined as the purchaser of some of the mortgaged property. The execution, consideration and valid attestation were denied by the first three defendants, and it was further denied that the plaintiffs are the heirs of Sardaribai. It was pleaded that the property mortgaged was the joint ansestral property of the mortgagor and the defendante, and that the mortgage was not binding on them. It was admitted that the property was joint and ancestral and plaintiffs stated that of the consideration of Rs. 1,200, Rs. 400 were borrowed for the payment of the decretal debt of one Bhairodas Laxmandas, Rs. 400 for payment of the mortgage-debt of Ramdban Brijraj, Rs. 40 paid in eash before execution and Rs. 360 paid before the Sub-Registrar. This was for cultivation purposes and for maintenance. It was pleaded that the amount having been advanced for the payment of antesedent debts and family purposes is binding.

The first Court found that Harisingh, defendants' father, did execute the deeds that consideration passed; that the deed was duly attested, that plaintiffs are the rightful owners of the document; that Rs. 400 was payable on a decree dated 31st July 1913 against the joint ancestral property, and another Rs. 400 were paid to discharge a mortgage debt on a previous mortgage, but that these two debts were not antecedent debts. A decree was eventually passed in plaintiff's favour for a sum of Rs. 2,794.6.0 against the one-fourth share of Harisingh alone in the property.

On appeal the District Judge, West. Berar, finds that the sum of Rs. 800 above referred to were antecedent debts not shown to be either immoral or illegal and that this amount was binding. The decree of the first Court was modified and a clause added "that in case the defendants paid. Rs. 800 for principal and Rs. 800 for interest and costs of the first Court Rs. 236 2.0 and Rs. 208.10 for costs of appeal, the mortgage shall be considered redeemed and if the sum is not paid on or before the 17th day of July 1920, the defendants shall be debarred from all rights to redeem the property" and in the event of the defendants making the payment they would be entitled to redeem the one fourth share.

Defendants appeal here. It is contended that the Rs. 800 should not be deemed to have antecedently incurred. It has been held, in the well known case of Sahu Ram Cianara v. Bhup Singh (1) by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "a loan made to the father on the occasion of a grant by him of mortgage on the family estate is not an antecedent debt.' The same view has been maintained in Bri, Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (2) and in Ram Singh v. Chet Ram (3). Sukhdeo Jha v. Jhopat Kamat (4) is another ease on the same point. The same principle was affirmed in Ratanchand v. Sheocharan (5) and Motiram v. Asaram (Ramgopal) (6). In a recent case decided by a Foll Bench of this Court, Dhudabai v. Narain (7), the Allahabad view has been adopted.

It is pleaded for the respondents that, as regards the Rs. 400, the decretal debt, it should be held that legal necessity existed for that portion of consideration. It seems elear that the Rs. 400 due on the mortgage then existing is not antecedent debt and, therefore, sannot be held binding on the defendants' share of the estate. It has not been proved that the Rs. 400 paid in each were for family necessity or benefit and also that cannot be held as binding on the defendants' share. As regards the Rs. 400 sovered by the decree to satisfy which part of the consideration of the mortgage sued on went towards, the ease must be tried whether that payment amounts to family necessity or benefit. I must remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on that question and a fresh decision with advertence to the adove remarks.

That Court may, if it thinks fit, remand, the case to the Trial Court, for there is no specific issue on this point though the third issue might be said to cover it. Costs here will abide the result.

JUDGMENT,—This judgment will dispose of Appeals No. 3387 and 3382 which have been referred to a Division Bench for disposal on account of the law point involved.

Two suits were brought against Sardar Shibdeo Singh and others, managers of the Khalsa High School, Sialkot, in respect of 54 kanals 11 marlas of lands, the site of the High School. In one, the plaintiff was Harnam Singh, Mahant of the Durbar Baba Nanak Sahib. He alleged that he bad been induced to part with the land, which originally belonged to his shrine, under false pretences, that the defendants had not fulfilled an agreement to give over land in exchange for it, and that they should be dispossessed. The plaintiffs in the second suit were Hazura Singh and Fatch Singh, two pu aris of the same shrine. They also sued for dispossession of the defendants, and they further challenged the right of Mahant Harnam Singh to alienate. Mahant Harnam Singh as a defendant admitted the elaim of these plaintiffs but the other defendants contested both suits.

The saits were in the Court of the Sabordinate Judge. On the 2nd May 1916 two of the contesting defendants, Shibdeo Singh and Garbakhsh Singh, patitioned the Court that the dispute in each case had been settled by oral compromise. Harnam singh and Fatch Singh denied having been parties to any compromise and, after framing an jesue on the point and recording evidence, the Subordinate Judge decided that Harnam Singh and Fatch Singh were neither present nor represented when the alleged settlement was arrived at, and that they had not ratified it subsequently. Accordingly, he refused to record the compromise.

Shibdeo Singh, Kharak Singh and Gur-bakhsh Singh appealed to the District Judge, who found that there had been a valid compromise to which all parties to both suits had assented, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, and returned both cases with instructions to him to decide them in accordance with the compromise the terms of which he held to be those stated by Shibdeo Singh and Gurbakhsh Singh in their petition.

Both sets of plaintiffs appealed again to the Chief Court. The learned Judge before whom the appeals were placed held that no appeals lay by reason of section 104 (2), Civil Procedure Code, but in exercise of revisional power set aside the District Judge's orders of remand and directed him to dispose of the cases himself by recording the compromise and passing decrees in accordance with it.

This accordingly was done, and the plaintiffs have appealed ones more to this Court against the decrees of the District Judge.

The first point for decision is that deals with in the order of reference to a Division Bench, whether or not the appeals are barred by section 96 (3), which lays down that no appeal shall lie from a decree passed with the consent of parties.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has commenced by pointing out that section 375 of the old Code of Civil Procedure has not been reproduced in entirety in the present Code and by distinguishing certain early authorities on that ground.

Section 375 ran as follows:-

"If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith ac ar as it relates to the suit, and such decree hall be final, so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction."

The section, with the words underlined (italicized) omitted, with the substitution for the first four words of the words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been," and with one or two other unimportant verbal alterations, appears in the 1908 Code as Order X III, rule 3. The portion underlined has been replaced by section 96 (3) "No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties."

the discussion of Conneel next sites law the in Renuka Untar (1). ٧. admittedly differing ease in its facts from the present cases) to support an argument that the alteration of the old law has the result that decrees made in pursuance of Order XXIII, rule 3, are not necessarily final, and that the right of appeal conferred by sections 96 (1) and (2) and 100 is only withheld by section 95 (3) when the decree is passed with the consent of the parties, ecmpromise, recording of compromise, and decree being three separate proceedings. He has quoted a decision of the Madras High Court, reported as Appogari Veerasalingam v. Korvuri Basivireddi (2), as one exactly in point. That care dealt with a situation similar to the present situation except that there was no previous appeal under Order XLIII, rule (1) (m), A written compromise was presented to a Subordinate Judge who recorded it and passed a decree which the High Court held was in accordance with it, in the face of objection by the defendant that he agreed only to execute a cale deed to the plaintiff onteide the Ocurt on the plaintiff withdrawing the suit and not to a deeree being passed (as it appears from the report was dore) compelling him to execute the saledeed. The defendant aprealed uneuccess.

fully against the decree to the District Judge, and then preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

The High Court overraled two preliminary objections (1) that the second appeal was in effect against an order by the District Judge, in appeal, confirming an order by the first Court recording a compromise and was barred by Order XLIII, rule (1) (m) and section 101 (2) and (2) that section $6 (3) probibited an appeal from a decree passed with the consent of parties. On the first point the High Court ruled that the first and sesond appeals were respectively from the decree of the Sabordinate Judge passed in accordance with the compromise, after recording it, and from the decree of the District Jadge on appeal against the Sabordinate Judge's desree, and that there bad been no appeal to the District Court against the order recording the compromise. answer to the second objection was held to be that the decree itself was not passed with the consent of the parties, but the Court held that there was a consent of parties to the terms of a compromise agreement which was recorded and it passed a desree in accordance therewith notwithstanding the objection of one of the parties.

The appeal was then dismissed on the merits, the defendants' objection being dealt with in the following terms:

"The appellant's learned Counsel coutended that under the compromise agreement the first defendant agreed only to execute a sale deed to plaintiff outside the Court in consideration of the plaintiffs' withdrawing the suit and that he did not agree to a decree being passed compelling him (the second defendant (sic)) to execute such a sale deed. Whether he agreed to the Courts' passing a decree, or not, compelling him to execute a sale-deed is not relevant. The real question is whether the suit was adjusted by a compromise one of the terms of which was that the first defendant should execute such a sale. deed and whether a decree can be passed in accordance with such a term. We think that it could be done."

LALIT KUMAR MURREJEE D. DASIRITHI SINGHA.

Our view of the law as applied to the fasts of the sases before us is this. Under Order XXIII, rule 3, the first Court had to see whether the suits were proved to its satisfaction to have been adjusted by a lawful compromise. There is no question of the lawfulness of this particular compromise but the first Court held that adjustment was not so proved because two of the parties had not agreed to the compromise, and it refused to record the compromisc. Appeal was made under Order XLIII, rule 1 (m), and the District Judge beld that all the parties bad agreed to the compromise, and reversed the order refusing to record it. This order of the District Judge was final under section 104 (2). There was thus a final decision that all the parties had consented to the compromise. Again, under Order XXIII, rule 3, a deeree in assordance with a recorded compromise must follow it. There is no doubt that the present decrees are in acsordance with the recorded compromise, which has been held finally to have been made with the someont of the parties. Those parties at the time of that consent must have contemplated the issue of the decrees, which are mere formal expressions of the compromise, in that view these decrees are decrees passed with the consent of the parties within the meaning of section 96 (3). No appeal lies against them.

Mr. Dalip Singh for the appellants relies strongly upon the decision on the second preliminary objection in Appegari Veerasalingam v. Koveuri Basiviredai(2), and we suppose that we must be taken to dissent from it. Nevertheless, the ultimate result of that case seems to uphold our view. The appeal failed and the learned Judges, although asked specifically to go behind the finding of the Court which recorded the compremise that it was agreed to by the appellant, did not do so (we have quoted the actual words of the judgment purposely) and indeed appear to have ignored the request altogether.

It will be seen also that we differ from the learned Additional Judicial Commisaloner who decided Renuka v. Onkar (1), in his interpretation of the law and we do so with all respect for what he has written.

Mr. Dalip Singh's further contention that ander section 105, Civil Procedure Codes if appeals lie, the correctness of the order on which the decrees are based can be attacked, even if that order is not appealable, need not be dealt with since we hold that appeals do not lie.

We, therefore, dismiss both appeals with

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J .- This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother, Mr. Justice Rankin.

On the 27th of November 1919, a suit was brought by the plaintiff against Dasarathi Singha, based upon promissory-notes alleged to have been executed by the defendant, the dates of which extended from the 28th of July to the 3rd of September 1919. defendant was sued as a person who was sui juris. On the 17th of December 1919, an ex parte decree was made. Thereafter, there was an attachment of certain properties, and, in consequence thereof, on the 16th of February 1920, an application was made by Subashini Dasi, who was alleged to be the certificated guardian of the defendant, that the decree should be set aside. It was alleged that at the time of the above mentioned snit and deeree the defendant, Dasarathi Singhe, was a minor. On the 15th of June 1920, the learned Judge delivered judgment after an issue or issues had been tried, and the following order was made : "This Court doth deelare that the defendant is a minor under the age of twenty-one years and it is ordered that all proceedings in this suit except the said plaint be, and the same are hereby, set aside. And it is further ordered that the defendant be at liberty to appear in and defend this suit upon a proper guardian being appointed in this suit. And it is further ordered that the said plaint and the register of this suit be amended by describing the defendant in the cause title thereof an a under the age of twenty-one years."

The main ground on which this appeal was argued by the learned Connsel for the appellant was that the order appointing the guardian, who was the sister of the defendant, was a nullity, and that the defendant had in fact attained his majority in May

The material dates are as follows. In December 1900, the father of the defendant died; on the 31st of May 901 the defendant was born; on the 30th of Auguts 1901

Letters of Administration were granted to the defendant's mother in respect of the father's estate. It was on the : Oth of July 1917 that Subashini Dasi, the applicant in this matter, was appointed guardian of the person and the property of the defendant, Dasarathi Singha. At that time the defendant was under the age of seventeen years. By reason of the provisions of the Indian Majority Act, the effect of that order, if valid, was to extend the mirority of the defendant until he attained the age of twentyone. Therefore, if the order was valid, the defendant was still a minor in 1919, when the promissory-notes were executed by him and when the decree in the suit was made.

Learned Counsel has argued that the order of guardianship made by the District Judge was without jurisdiction and that, consequent. ly, it should be treated as a pullity, and that if it were so treated the defendant was not a minor in November or D-sember 1919, when the suit was instituted and the decree made, inasmuch as he attained the age of eighteen in 1919.

The District Judge of the Hughli Court by his order appointed the sister guardian of both the person and the property of the defendant. My learned brother, Mr. Justice Rankin, found that the residence of the defendant was not within the jurisdiction of the Hughli Court and that, consequently, the appointment of the guardian, so far as it concerned the person of the defendant, was not valid. But the learned Judge further found that cartain of the properties left by the minor's father were within t-e jurisdiction of the Hughli Court and that, consequently, the order was not invalid so far as the property was corcerned.

It was, however, urged that the mother of the defendant had been appointed administratrix of the father's estate and of the abovementioned properties and that, consequently, the said properties vested in her and, therefore, they were not the properties of the defendant. It was urged, therefore, that the Hughli Court had no jurisdiction to make the order appointing the sister guardian of the property, and, therefore, it must be treated as a pullity. By section 4 of the Probats and Administration Act (V of 1881) it is provided as follows:-

LALIT KUMAR MUKERJEN U. DABARATHI SINGHA,

"The executor or administrator, as the ease may be, of a deceased person, is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. [But nothing herein sontained shall vest in an executor or administrator any property of a deceased person which would otherwise have passed by survivorship to some other porson]."

Therefore, the property of the defendant's father would vest in the defendant's mother as administratrix on her appointment as such administratrix, and for the purposes of administration. The defendant, however, was admittedly his father's heir, and he had a beneficial interest in the property, and I am not prepared to hold that the mere fact of the appointment of the mother as administratrix would have the effect that the defendant had no property within the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of section 9 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890).

In my judgment, therefore, the Hughli Court had jurisdiction to make the order as to the guardianship of the property, and, although there, may not have been any necessity to appoint the guardian in respect of the property-as to which I express no the order opinion-I cannot hold that The order the was a pullity. Hughli Court, therefore, extended the minority of the defendant until he Was twenty-one years old. Consequently, he was a minor at the date of the suit and the desree, and he should not have been sued as if he were a person in sui juris.

The result, in my judgment, therefore, is that I agree with my learned brother, Mr. Justice Rankin, in the order which he has made, and, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with easts.

Mooresten, J.—I agree that the order made by Mr. Justice Rankin must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The facts material for the determination of the question in controversy are not in dispute at this stage, and may be briefly outlined. On the 27th November 1919, the appellant instituted a suit against the respondent on several negotiable instruments under Order XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code. The claim was not contested, and was decreed ex parts on the 17th

Desember 1919, On the 12th February 1920, the sister of the respondent initiated the proceedings which have culminated in this appeal. She made an application under rule 4 of Order XXXVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the ex parte decree on the allegations that the respondent was, at the date of the institution of the suit, an infant, that she had been appointed guardian of his person and property, that the suit instituted against him, described as sui juris, was not properly constituted, and that, consequently, the ex parte desree should be vacated and the suit restored to be re-tried in accordance with law. It was asserted that the respondent was the posthumous son of his father and was born on the 31st May 1901. Her sister was appointed guardian of his person and property by the District Judge of Hughli on the 30th July 1917 with the result that the period of minority, which would otherwise have terminated on the 31st May 1919 was extended up to the 31st May 1922. Consequently, on the 27th November 1919, when the suit against the respondent was instituted he was still an infant. The appellant contended that the order for the appointment of the sister as gnardian was inoperative, first, because it had been made without jurisdietion; and secondly, because it had been irregularly made without service of the raquisite notices. Justice Mr. overraled these contentions and granted the application,

On the present appeal, the grounds urged before Mr. Justice Rankin have been reiterated and it has been urged by Mr. Chakravarti that the order was made without jurisdiction and that, in any event, it was irregularly made.

It may be stated at once that the second ground assigned cannot be entertained in the present proceedings. If the order was irregularly made, the proper course to follow was to have it vacated by the Court which passed it, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Davar in the case of Nagardas Vachra; v. Anandrao Bhai (1). We are, consequently, called upon to consider only one question, namely, whether the order for appointment of guardian was made without jurisdiction. Section 9 of the Guardians and Wards Act (1890) provides that if the application is with respect to the guardianship of the person of the minor, it may be made to the District Court having jurisdiction in the place where the minor ordinarily resides, or to a District Court baving perisdiction in a place where he has property. In so far as the order appointed the sister to be guardian of the person of the minor, it has been found that, at the date of the application, the minor did not ordinarily reside within the jurisdiction of the District Court at Hughli. Consequently, we may take it that the order in that respect was made without juriediction. But this is not sufficient for the purposes of the appellant, because, under section 3 of the Indian Majority Act (1875), the period of minority is extended from eighteen years to twentyone years, if a guardian has appointed either of the person or of the property of the infant. Consequently, the appeliant bas to establish that the order for the appointment of the sister as guardian of the property of the minor was also made without jurisdiction.

On this part of the ease, the contention is that the minor had no property within the jurisdiction of the District Court at Hughli. It is conceded, however, that the father of the minor left property within the jurisdietion of that Court. The respondent on his birth took this property by right of inheritande, because it is well established that an unborn shild is treated as in actual existence whenever it is to his benefit so to treat him. As was pointed out in Beroja v. Nucokissen and Keshab v. Eishnu Prosad (3), this is a principle recognised by Hindu Law. The rule was subsequently affirmed by a Fall Beach of this Court in Kali Das v. Krishan Chandra Das (4) and was recognised by the Judicial Committee in the case of Garendromohun Tagore v. Jotendromohun Tagore (5). We then start with the position that the estate left by his father, subject no doubt to the liability to discharge such debte, if any, as were legitimately payable out of the assets left by him. It is then contended, that as, on the 20th August 1901, the mother of the infant was appointed administratrix to the estate left by ber deceased bushand, the properties ceased to be the properties of the infant within the meaning of section 3 of the Indian Majority Act. In support of this proposition reliance is placed upon section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act, which is in these terms: "The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such." This section corresponds to section 179 of the Indian Succession Act (1865), which was considered by this Court in the ease of B. aja Nath Dey Sirkar v. Anandamoyi Dasi (6). Mr. Justice Phear pointed out in that case that the executor or administrator holds the estate of the deceased only in a representative character, and takes ro beneficial interest therein. This view was affirmed in Ragnaroin v. Universal Life Assurance Co. (7) and was subsequently adopted by the Bombay High Court in Lullubhai v. Mankutarbai (8) and by the Madras High Court in Adusupatti Venkata Rao v. Saumi I illai (9). The case last mentioned pointed out that the decisions in Bhaifi Bhim i v. Administrator-General of Bombay (10) and Srivangammal v. Sandammal (11) were in reality not opposed to this principle. In these cases, the question substantially in controversy was as to the right of possessich of the administrator as against the person entitled to succeed to the estate either under a testamentary instrument, or in the crdinary source of inheritance when the original owner died intestate.

I am, therefore, unable to hold that the result of the appointment of the mother of the respondent as administratrix on the 30th Angust 1901 was to deprive him of his interest in the estate of his father, which he had acquired on his birth on the 31st May 1901. Consequently, the order for appointment of his sister as guardian was made with jurisdiction and had the effect of extending the period of his minority up to the 31st May 1922. The suit instituted against him as sui juris on the 27th November 1919 was thus improperly constituted and the ex parte decree made therein has been rightly vacated.

JUDGMENT.

Spences, J.—The plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration of his title to succeed to the properties of Ponnusami Maniagar by virtue of his having been adopted by that individual and for recovering his share in the estate. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit holding that, as Ponnusami Maniagar was a ward under the Court of Werds at the time of the adoption and as the Court of Wards had not sanctioned the alleged adoption, the adoption, even if true, would be invalid for want of the previous consent of the Court of Wards in writing as required by section 25 of Regulation V of 1804.

Section 25 of Regulation V of 1804 deelares: "It shall not be competent for disqualified land-holders to adopt shildern without the consent of the Court of Wards previously had in writing," and section 4 of that Regulation declares: "where minors may succeed to inheritable property, they shall not in any case be competent to take charge of or to administer their own affairs during the period of their minority and for the better understanding thereof, the duration of minority shall, without exception, continue until the completion of the eighteenth year of age." In 1875, the Indian Majority Act was passed, and it provided under section 3 that "every minor of whose property the superintendence has been or shall be asenmed by any Court of Wards shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of twenty one years and not before." Then, the section goes on to provide that every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before. If this stood alone, the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge would be perfectly correct and we shold have to support it. But sestion 2 (a) of this Ast states, "nothing herein contained shall affect the capacity of any person to set in the following matters (namely) marriage, dower, divorce and adoption."

Now, we see that 18 is the age of majority for Wards of Court under the Regulation before Act IX of 1875 was passed and it is the ARULAMANDA MUTEU v. PONNUSAMI.

age of majority for other persons under Act IX of 18:5, but when the Indian Majority Act was passed at a time while Regulation V of 1804 was still in force, its effect was to raise the age of majority from 18 to 21 for minors whose estates were under the adminis. tration of the Court of Wards for all purposes except for those matters referred to in section 2. The result is that, as regards questions of marriage, adoption, etc., the eapacity of minors is left untouched by the Indian Majority Act, and it is as if the Act had never been passed. . In such matters the law stands exactly as it stood before that piece of legislation was put on the Statute Book. It is argued that the restriction upon adop tion contained in section 25 of the Regulation was introduced not by reason of the age of the minor, but by reason of the fact that he is a disqualified owner; but when the Act of Majority does not extend the disqualification of persons under the age of 21 to matters of marriage, adoption, etc., the effect is that an adoption made by a person over 18 but under 21 without the consent of the Court of Wards is not invalid by reason of the Regulation. The word 'competent' in the Regulation implies legal competency. The word 'sapacity' in the Act is wider in meaning and includes legal competency as well as other ability.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row wished us to take the view that the saving clause appearing as section 2 of Act IX of 1875 governs only the general provision in section 3 as to .8 years being the age of majority for ordinary persons, but not the special provision as to minors whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. I find it impossible to make this distinction when the words in section 2 are nothing herein contained shall affect. herein contained must mean contained in any part of this Act. There are no apt words which may serve to restrict the application of section 2 to one part of the Act while applying it to other portions.

Some additional points were raised before ne by the learned Vakil for the appellant as to the effect of the Majority Act being only applicable to Regulations passed after 1897, when the General Clauses Act defined "enactment" and as to the application of the Court of Wards Regulation being only as governing the relations between the Court of Wards and its wards. But it is not necessary to deal with these points, as on the first point the appellant is entitled to succeed.

The result must be that the suit which was dismissed, must be remanded for desision upon the other points arising in the case. We deside nothing on the question of the plaintiff's age in this issue, or as to other issues which have not been argued before us. These questions will be determined by the lower Court.

Costs of the appellant and respondents Nos. 1 and 7 will abide the result and be provided for in the final decree. The appellant is entitled to a refund of Courtfees paid by him on his appeal.

RAMBOAM, J.-I agree.

Assuming that the word "capacity" should be construed in the Majority Act its general sense i.e. inherent or intrinsis capacity [Cf. Orden v. Ogden (1). Ohetti (Venugopal) v. Ohetti (Venugopal) (2)] and that restraints on eapacity may not be properly described as want of eapacity, still the extension of the restraint on the capacity to adopt in section 25 of the Court of Wards Regulation V of 1804 which is terminable at the age of 18, to the age of 21, by the use of the Majority Act in reading section 4 of the Court of Wards Regulation and applying it first to the word 'minor' and then to "disqualified landholder" amounts to affecting the eapacity of the minor. Section 2 of the Act therefore, applies.

Other points argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant, viz., (1) that the word 'enactment' in section 3 of the Indian Majority Act does not include a Regulation of the Madras Code;

(2) that a general law such as the Majority Act does not affect a special law like

Regulation V of 1804, and

(3) that the effect of section 25 of the Regulation is to make the adoption voidable only at the instance of the Court of Wards and not to make it void, need not, therefore, be considered.

Contract Act (IR of 187'), s. 73-Non-delivery of goods contracted - Damages, assessment of.

In an action for non-delivery or non-acceptance of goods under a contract of sale, the law does not take into account in estimating the damages anything that is accidental as between the plaintiff and the defendant, as, for instance, an intermediate contract entered into with a third party for the purchase or sale of the goods. [p. 267, col. 2.]

Mr. Srikrishindas Lula, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for Defendants Nos. I and 3.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this suit is as to the rate to be adopted for the measure of damages for failure of delivery of 50 bales July 1917 cotton. The practice of taking delivery is a matter of common knowledge. The seller makes "Mati Khari" on his buyer and the latter sends a delivery shit, i. e, a request to the seller to deliver to the person named in the chit.

In the present case defendants sold to plaintiffs who sold to Charatsing Attarsing who sold to one Jaswantrai. Jaswantrai issued the delivery shit No. 300 to his seller Charateing Attareing, who passed it on to the plaintiffs who gave it to the defendants. Defendants failed to deliver any cotton. Ordinarily, therefore, the damages to the plaintiffs is the difference between the market rate and the contract rate on the due date and not the damages as between the market-rate on due date and the rate of plaintiff's contract with Charateing Attarsing. Plaintiffs have claimed at a marketrate of Rs. 40 per maund. But the defendants claim that plaintiffs have settled their contract with Charatsing at Rs. 37.4 0 per maund and the defendants say they should not be compelled to pay plaintiffs more loss than they (plaintiffe) have actually sustained, i, e, the rate for the measure of damages should be Rs. 37.7.0 per maund.

It is not suggested, nor is there anything to show, that defendants knew that plaintiffs had sold these bales of cotton to Charatsing Attarsing. Indeed, plaintiffe may have had another contract of purchase for 50 bales which they could, if they had chosen, have appropriated to their contract of sale to Charatsing Attarsing for all we know.

Section 73 of the Contract Act lays down the rule for damages for breach of contract. The application of that rule shows that the boyer sould not sharge the seller with the less sustained by breach of a contract between the buyer and a third party, consequent on the sellers' breach of his contract with the buyer, unless, at the time of contract between buyer and seller, the former's contract with the third party was expressly brought to the knowledge of the seller. Similarly, the defaulting seller cannot claim to take advantage of a reduction of his liability procured by the buyer who has committed default in his contract with a third party.

The defendants' contention on this point has been the subject of judicial pronouncements so far, such as the leading case of Rodocanachi v. Milburn (1) which was applied by the House of Lords in the recent case of Williams v. Agius (2). Lord Esber in the former case answered the argument in the following terse and unmistakeable language:-"It is well settled that in an action for non-delivery or non-asseptance of goods under a contract of sale the law does not take into account in estimating the demages anything that is assidental as between the plaintiff and the defendant, as for instance, an intermediate contract entered into with a third party for the purchase or sale of the goods," This view of the law has been quoted with approval in a subsequent ease in Eugland, slater and Co. v. Houle & Smith (3) and has tather received the same. tion of the Judicial Committee in appeal from the Indian Courts; Muhammad Habib Ullah v. Bird & Co. (4), Jamal v. Moella Dawood Sons and Co. (5). In this respect therefore. the principle to be applied is the same in India as in England.

If, therefore, the defaulting seller cannot take advantage of a contract reducing his liability between his buyer and a third party. it is a fair deduction that he cannot equally take advantage of a settlement effected between his buyer and the third party which has the effect of reducing the damages which the buyer has sustained through breach by the seller of his contrast with him. So in this case, the fact that plaintiffs settled their contract with Charateing Attar. sing at Rs. 37-4 0 affords the defendants no ground for contending that the measure of the damages due by them to the plaintiffs should also be calculated at that rate and not at the market-rate of the due date.

Nor was this the care of the sale of a specific article which was the subject-matter of both the sale and the sub-sale. I am, therefore, of opinion the defendants are not entitled to the rate of Rs. 37-4-0 for the measure of the damages payable by them to the plaintiffs.

Mr. Fatehehand admits the rate for July 17 was Rs. 40 I, therefore, allow damages at that rate.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) s. 7, (x', cl. (c)-Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8-Court-lee; payable in suit for specific performance of contract to grant lease-Principle. .

In order to determine the jurisdiction and the Court-fee payable in a suit for specific performance of a contract to grant a lease the suit must be first valued for payment of Court-fees in accordance with the rule embodied in section 7, sub-section (x), clause (c) of the Court Fees Act; then the value so determined for computation of Court-fees should be adopted as the value for purposes of jurisdiction. [p. 269, col. 2]

The right construction of section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act is, that the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction should, in the cases mentioned there, follow and be the same as the valuation for Court-

ment. JUDGMENT .- This is a Reference under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, in an appeal from an appellate desree which arises out of a suit for specifi; performance of a contract to grant a lease. The suit, which was instituted on the 27th August 1915 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Midna. pur, was valued at Rs. 1,200 for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction and at R. 32 for the purpose of payment of Court fee. elaim was decreed in the Court of first instance and the first defendant was directed to execute in favour of the plaintiffs a lease for the disputed land on a fixed rental of Rs. 32. On appeal to the District Judge, the decision of the primary Court was reversed on the 17th January 1915 and the SAILENDRA NATH MITRA U. BAM CHARAN PAL.

suit was dismissed. On second appeal to this Court, the decree of the District Judge was set aside and the case was remanded for re-trial. After remand, the District Judge re heard the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Court of first instance. Against this decree a second appeal has been preferred to this Court. The appeal has been valced at Rs. 32, which is the amount of rent annually payable for the contract of tenancy sought to be specifically enforced. This valuation was based on section 7, sub-section (x), clause (c) of the Court Face Act. Objection was taken by the Stamp Reporter to the valuation on the ground that, under section 8 of the Saits Valuation Act, the Court-fee was payable on the value of the appeal as stated for purposes of jurisdiction. As this view was controverted on behalf of the appellant, the matter was placed before the Taxing Officer, who referred the question to the Ohief Justice, as it was, in his opinion, one of general importance. The determination of the point in controversy depends upon the true construction of section 7, sub-section (x), clause (c) of the Court Fees Ast and section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act.

Section 7, sub section (x), clause (c) of the Court Fees Act provides that the amount of fee payable in a suit for specific performance of a contract of lease shall be computed assording to the aggregate amount of the fine or premium, if any, and of the rent agreed to be paid during the first year of the term. Section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act provides that where, in suits other than those referred to in the Court Fees Act, 1870, sestion 7, paragraphs V, VI, IX and paragraph X, clause (d), Court-fees are payable ad valorem under the Court Fees Ast. 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of Court fees and the value for purposes of jarisdiction shall be the same. The view taken by the Stamp Reporter is. that, as the suit has been valued for purposes of jurisdiction at R : 1,200, the value as determinable Vbe. for computation of Court fees must also be deemed to be Rs. 1,200. I am of opinion that this position sannot be supported, as it ignores the provision in sestion 7 of the Court Pass Act which is brought into conflict with the provision in sestion 8 of the Suits Valuation Act. If the construction put upon section

8 of the Suits Valuation Act, namely, that the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is. to be determined by the market value of the property and that valuation is to be taken for the purposes of payment of Court fees. were correct, the effect would be to nullify the provisions of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. The right construction of section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act is that the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction should, in the cases mentioned there, follow and be the same as the valuation Court-fees. This view is supported by the desision in Hari Sanker Dutt v. Kali Kumar Patra (1), which approved the earlier eases of Bai Vurunda Lakshmi v. Bai Manegavri (2) and Velu Goundan v. Kumaravelu Goundan (3). The procedure to be adopted in eases of this character is obvious; first value the suit for payment of Court-fees in accordance with the rule embodied in section 7, sub-section (x), clause (c) of the Court Fees Act; then adopt the value so determined for the somputation of Court-fees, as the value for purposes of jurisdiction. There is a manifest danger of conflict between the provisions of the two Statutes if the process is reversed; in other words, the substance of the matter is that the valuation for assessment of Court-fees controls the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. I hold ascordingly that, in the present case, the value for the purpose of payment of Court-fees was correctly assessed at Rs. 32 under sestion 7 of the Court Fees Act and that the value for the purpose of jurisdiction is, consequently, only Rs. 32 under sestion 8 of the Suits Valuation Act. This no doubt leads to the conclusion that the suit was not instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it, in contravention of sestion 15 of the Civil Prosedure Code : but sestion 11 of the Suite Valuation Ast affords the plaintiffs' adequate: protection : see also Nidhi Lal v. Mashar Husain (4) and Matra Mondal v. Hari Mohun Mullick (5). In my opinion, the mamorandum of appeal bears the requisite amount of

—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—
Application to set aside ex parte-decree—Extension of time—Inherent power.

Section 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to an application to set aside an ex parte decree.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code must not be used to defeat the imperative provisions of section 3 of the Limitation Act

Sonubai Baburao v Shivajirao Krishnarao, 60 Ind. Cas. 919; 45 B. 646; 23 Bom. L. R. 110, dissented from.

Petition, under section 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st Fabruary 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 23rd November 1923.

Sheikh Niae Muhammad, for the Petitioner. Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Khairati for revision of the order of the District Judge of Hoshiarpur. The fasts are as follows:—The petitioner lodged a suit escipet the respondent and the latter was served in jail. The suit was decreed ez parte on the 15th of November 1919. The respondent was released from jail on the 14th of May 1920 and he filed an application for setting aside the ex parte decree on the 15th of June 1920. The first Court rightly held that no extension of the period of 30 days allowed by Article 164 of the Schedule to the Limitation Ast sould be granted, and dismissed the application as time-barrad. The learned. District Judge, quoting Maharaj Narain v. Bane i (1), held that the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act could be applied and that the application for setting aside the ex parts decree having been lodged within 30 days of the respondent's release from jail should be regarded as within time. The District Judge, therefore, set aside the ex parte deeree and remanded the case for redesision.

The ruling quoted by the learned District Judge is no authority for the view adopted by him. This ruling merely lays down that section 5 of the Limitation Act may be applied in cases where an appeal has been lcdged after the period of limitation for appeal has expired. This, of course, is correct, for section 5 applies to appeals. It also applies to applications for a review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which the section may be made applicable by an enactment or role for the time being in force. But, in the Punjab at least, this section has not been made applicable to applications under Article 164 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, and the Mansif was quite right in refusing to allow any extension of time. Connsel for the respondent refers me to Sonutai Baburao V. Shivajirao Krishnarao (2), which lays down that the Court has inherent power to re-open cases under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. With all respect to this ruling, I prefer to follow the rulings of this Court which clearly lay down that section 151 must not be used to defeat the imperative provisions of section 3 of the Limitation Act This section lays down that suits, appeals and applications preferred after the prescribed period of limitation shall be dismissed.

GONTU APPIREDDI C. GONTU CHINNA APPIREDDI.

In the present ease the period of limitation prescribed expired before the application was made and the application is time-barred and must, therefore, be dismissed, no extension of time being allowable, as section 5 is not applicable.

Finally, Counsel for the respondent urges that this Court should not interfere in revision in cases where the time-barred application has wrongly been held to be within time; but the present case is one in which the District Judge has wrongly upset a correct decision of the First Court dismissing the application as time barred. It is not a case in which a mistake as to limitation has been made by the Court of first instance. Farther, I note that the petitioner, according to the statements in his own application, was released from jail on the 14th of May 1920 and that the application for setting saide the ez parte deeree was not presented till the 15th of June 1920, so that it cannot be said that the application was presented even within 30 days from his release from jail,

I accept this application for revision and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, I restore the order of the first Court dismissing the application as barred by time. The respondent will pay costs both in this Court and in the Court of the District Judge.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 7, 27 (1) and 3—Petition by creditor for adjudication and cancellation of transfers—Order cancelling sales by insolvent, legality of.

On a petition under section 7 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, for adjudication in insolvency, it is not competent to the court by the same order adjudicating the debtor an insolvent to order cancellation of sales made by the insolvent immediately prior to the application. It is for the receiver to take action for the cancellation of the alienations under section 63 of the Act and not for the Court to do so on a petition for adjudication. [p 272, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Guntur, dated 13th March 1920, in Insolvency Petition No. 1 of 1919.

Mr. V. Ramadess, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT,-In this case two creditors of one Chindayaram Ramaya and of his three undivided sons (respondents Nos. 1 to 4) petitioned (i) that they might be declared insolvents, (ii) that certain alienations made by respondents Nos. 1 to 4 in favour of the 5th respondent might be declared invalid and cancelled. The alienations took place about a month before the presentation of the petition which is dated December 19.8. The learned Judge heard the petition on 19th 1920 and, in the same order, not only adjudicated respondents Nos. 1 to 4 insolvents but deelared the sale deeds which witnessed the alienations cancelled. The act insolvency alleged and proved against the respondents Nos. I to 4 was these alienations under section 6 (b) of the Provincial Insolveney Act (V. of 192) i.e., they were held to be transfers with intent to defraud or delay ereditors. The petition was presented under section 7 and the debtors were adjudicated under section 27 (1) which runs thus: "If the Court does not dismiss the petition it shall make an order for adjudication." There is, of course, no doubt that the learned District Judge was justified in making the order of adjudication but the question is, was he right in going further and ordering the sancellation of the sale-deeds in the same order. He apparently held a detailed enquiry to which the vendor was a party; one would ordinarily whereas that a much more summary procedure would, in the first instance, meet the case. The question is governed by section 53 of the Act which provides that "such transfers as are therein specified shall be voidable as against the Receiver and may be annulled by the Court." The scetion certainly contemplates action by Receiver. It is true that at the time the order for eancellation was made Receiver had not been appointed, but he was appointed later on the same day. In Hemraj Ohampa Lall v. Ramkishen Ram (1) it was held that until the Reseiver refuses or declines to act no one else can do so, because he is the person to set, the proceeding under section 36 (now section 53) in motion.

We are inclined to respectfully adopt this decision. The other cases cited can be shortly dealt with. In Kauleshar Ram v. Bhawan Prasad (2) the Allahabad High Court held that a proceeding to set aside a transfer should be taken in the name of the Receiver, and that no proceeding should have been sommensed (by ereditors) until after the appointment of a Receiver. It may well be that, when the Reseiver fails to move in the matter, a ereditor may do so, Nikka Mal v. Marwar Bank Limited (3). Even there the Court held that, in a case of fraudulent preference, the Receiver should sither apply or be a party to the application. The decision in Khushhaliram v. Bholar Mal (4), does not deal with the question at all but simply with the jurisdiction of an Insolvency Court. There the Judge had referred a creditor alleging a fictitious mortgage to a suit instead of enquiring into the question himself as the Court held he was bound to do. It does not appear whether or not a Receiver had been appointed in that case. Section 4 of the Act which was quoted for the respondents is inserted for the purpose of putting an end to the conflict of decisions as to whether proceedings in the Insolvency Court constitute rescudicate or not.

It appears to us that what authority there is all points one way, viz., that it is for the Receiver to take action under section 53 and not for the Court to do so on a petition for adjudication. We, ascordingly, set aside that part of the District Judge's order which relates to the cancellation of the sale deeds to the 5th respondent.

No costs in this Court.

Compromise decree-Time fixed for compliance-Extension of time-Decree and compromise bearing different dates-Time, when begins to run.

Where a compromise-decree fixes a period of time for the payment of a sum of money under it that period cannot be extended on the ground of the Courts being closed on the day fixed for payment when it was not necessary under the compromise that the money should be paid into Court.

A compromise becomes operative when it is embodied in a decree, and if it fixes any time for the doing of any act, the time begins to run not from the date of the compromise, but from the date of the decree.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 12th May 1921, confirming an order of the Muneif, Frzabad, dated the 12th March 1921.

Mr. Wasi Rasan, for the Appellant. Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,-The sole question in this appeal is, whether the appellant complied with the terms of a compromise-decree. compromise in question was filed on 19th August 1920 but was not signed by the last of the parties till just before the end of August and was not embodied in the decree in the suit until 31st August. By the compromise it was agreed that the appellant should pay a sum of Rs. 25 compensation to the plaintiff within four months from to-day". The sum was not actually paid until 4th January 1921. The Courts. were closed on January 1st and 2nd but opened on the 3rd. Two points were argued in the Court below :-

(1) Whether the four months should be counted from 19th August or from 31st

August.

(2) Whether, if the latter contention is correct, the appellant sufficiently complied with the desree by tendering the money on 3rd January though he did not actually pay. it till next day.

The learned District Judge has found

this Court a further point has been argued on behalf of the respondent, namely, that even if the four months be counted from August the 31st the appellant was not entitl. ed to any extension of time on assount of the Courts being slosed on that day. It appears to me that this contention must prevail. It is ecneeded that, neither section 5 of the Limitation Act, nor section 10 of the General Clauses Act, applies and no law. has been shown or suggested (apart from a. general suggestion that it would be equitable) by which such an extension can be claimed. It was not even necessary. under the compromise that the money should be paid into Court. The appellant might have paid it to the opposite party direct and certified it to the Court afterwards. On the question of the date from which the four months should be counted I am disposed to agree with the appellant, It seems to me that the compromise only became operative when it was embodied in the decree, and that the word "to-day " must be construed as referring to the day on which it became actually effective. But on the ground already discussed, I consider that the decision of the learned Judge was correct and I accordingly dismiss the appeal. As the point now pressed was not urged in the Court below, I make no order as to costs of this appeal.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1832), s. 52-Lis against, the appellant on both points. In pendens-Consent decree, if falls within scope of rule

BHARAT RAMANUJA DAS U. SARAT KAMINI DASI.

-"Contentious suit," meaning of -Suit originally contentious, if ceases to be contentious, because it is compromised.

A consent-decree falls within the scope of the rule of lis pendens enunciated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 277, col. 1.]

One acquiring interest pendente lite in a proceeding which is lis pendens is bound by the decree without regard to its form, or whether it is erroneous, and it is immaterial that the relief granted in the suit is the result of agreement or compromise, except where it is the result of fraud or collusion between the parties. [p. 277, col. 2.]

In order to determine whether a suit is contentious within the meaning of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court has to consider whether it is contentious in its origin and nature. The expression "contentious suit" must be held to be used in contradistinction to a collusive suit in which there is no contest. [p. >76, col. 1.]

If a suit is not collusive, it cannot be maintained that, though originally contentious, it ceases to be contentious because it is compromised by the act of the parties [p. 276, col. 1.]

A decree is none-the-less a decree as defined by the Code of Civil Procedure, because it is based on a compromise and the legal effects of the decree contemplated by Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, do not differ from the legal effects of a decree where the suit has been fought to the end. [p. 277, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJES, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgagesecurity, executed in his favour on the 14th September 1906, by the first defendant, Raja Balabhadra Singh Deb, in respect of what is known as the Raipur Zemindary. Besides the mortgagor, 85 other persons were made parties to the suit in the Court below, on the allegation that they were subsequent ensumbraneers. They filed twelve separate and raised numerous written statements questions which were embodied in fourteen issues. We are now concerned with only one set of defendants, namely, defendants Nos. 8 to 19, who have been described in these procaedings as the Rathis and the Datts. They set up a mortgage for Rs. 75,000 executed by the first defendant in their favour on the 28th January 1908. They contended that the security held by them, though subsequent in point of time, bad priority over the mortgage in suit, by the application of the dostrines of subrogation and lis pendens. The Subordinate Judge held that these defend. ants were entitled to the benefit of the rule of lis pendens, but that the principle of subrogation was of no avail. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has granted the plaintiff a mortgage-decree, subject to the mortgage in favour of the Rathi and the Dutt defendants to the extent of Rs. 71,000 only. On the present appeal the plaintiff has contend. ed that the rule of lis pendens is of no assistance to the defendants, who have not only controverted this argument but have also assailed the opinion expressed by the Subordinate Judge as to the inapplicability of the principle of subrogation. To elucidate the questions in controversy, it is necessary to explain the eireumstances which led up to the mortgage set up by the Rathi and the Dutt defendants.

The Raipur Zemindari, which is the subjectmatter of both the mortgages, originally belonged to one Haribar Singh whose name appears in the following genealogical table; it is alleged to have been an impartible Raj governed by the rule of primogeniture according to the custom of the country and the neage of the family:

Harihar Singh died in 1849, leaving three sons, Indra Singh, Lal Singh and Mohar Singh. Indra Singh, as the eldest, succeeded to the Raj, while his two brothers received maintenance. Indra Singh died in 1855, leaving him surviving his two widows and two brothers. The first widow, Ujjalkumari, died in 1867 and the second widow in 1905 after the death of both Lal Singh and Mobar Singh, On the 12th January 1906, shortly after the death of Nilkamari, Balabhadra Singh instituted a suit (Suit No. 10 of 1906) for declaration of his title to the Raipur Zamindari and for recovery of possession thereof from various persons including the Rathis and the Datts, who, he alleged, were wrongfully in occupation under titles ereated by Nilkumari. The Rathis and the Datts resisted the claim on the allegation that they had acquired an indefeasible title, first by purebase at a sale held on the 20th January 1891 in execution of a decree, on a mortgage granted on the 22od April 1885 to one Tarashand Pal by Nilkamari and Mohar Singh, and then again by a purchase on the 20th January 1832 in execution of a prior mort. gage taken by one Kahetranath Mahapatra from the same mortgagors. The order-sheet in that suit, which has been received in evidence in this litigation, makes abundantly clear that the suit was contentious and was astively prosecuted by both sides during many months. When the issues had been framed, the suit was, after the usual adjournments, set down for trial on the 13th January 1908; on that date, on the applieation of both parties, time was allowed to them till the 17th January to compromise. On the date so fixed, it was recorded that the case had not been compromised, and the trial commenced. The bearing proceed. ed from day to day till the 23rd January when the ease was adjourned in view of a "talk of sompromise." Ultimately, on the 28th January 1903, a sulenama (petition of compromise) was filed on behalf of the plaintiff Balabhadra Singh and the Rathi and the Dutt defendants as also an added defendant Brajalal Datt. The Court accepted the petition of compromise, but could not forthwith make a decree on the basis thereof, as there were other defendants who had not compromised The case was assordingly directed to proceed against the remaining defendants. On the 30th January, a sulenama was filed on behalf of the plaintiff and another defendant and was accepted. The trial proceeded as against the other defendants who utilised, as appears from the order of the 14th Fabruary 1908, the documents previously filed by the Bathi and the Datt defendants. The pro-ecedings were much prolonged and the hearing did not conclude till the 6th March 1908, when judgment was reserved. On the 31st March 1908 judgment was delivered. and the suit was decreed, "partly in terms of sulenama and partly on contest." The desree thus made gave effect to the eompromise beibcdme tn the presented on behalf of the plaintiff and the Rathi and the Datt defendants on the 28th January 1908. The decree recites the terms of the compromise which now require examination.

BHARAT BAMANUJA DAS U. SARAT KAMINI DASI.

The purport of the compromise was that and the the Rathi Dutt defendants relinquished in favour of the plaintiff whatever interest they had asquired in the Raipur Zamindari, for a consideration of Rs. 71,000 which was secured by a mortgage of the Zamindari, as the plaintiff was unable to pay the amount in eash. The petition of compromise resites that this mortgagebond had been executed on the same date to secure a sum of Rs. 75,000, made up of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 71,000 and an additional each payment of Rs. 4,000. There is no room for controversy that the compromise and the mortgage constituted one entire and indivisible transaction and that when the desree of the Court, made on the 31st March 1908, give effect to the compromise, it validated the whole contract between the parties inclusive of the mortgage. To take any other view would be to sacrifies substance to form and to disintegrate vital elements of the transaction which could not, in the contemplation of the parties, have ever been regarded as other than inseparable in character. The question thus emerges for consideration, whether the mortgage in suit, executed on the 14th September 1906 after the institution on the 12th January 1906 of Suit No. 10 of 1906 for determination of the title to the hypotheested property, is affected, by virtue of the rule of lis pendens, by the sonsent-decree in the title suit dated the 31st March 1908, which incorporated and gave effect to the mortgage of the 28th January 1908. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question against the plaintiff and we have now to consider whether his conclusion is well founded on principle,

The rule of his pendens is enunciated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act in the following terms:—

BHABAT BAMANUJA DAS C. SABAT KAMINI DASI.

"During the active presention in any Court baving authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor General in Council, of a contentious suit or preceding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding, so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose."

The desicion of the Judicial Committee in Faiyat Husain v. Manshi Frag Narain (1) shows that, in order to determine whether a suit is contentious within the meaning of this section, we have to consider whether it is contentious in its origin and nature. The expression "contentious suit" must then be held to be used in contradictination to a collusive suit in which there is no contest, a suit of the nature described by Lord Brougham in Bondon v. Becher (2).

"A centence is a judicial determination of a cause agitated between real parties, upon which a real interest has been settled. In order to make a sentence there must be a real interest, a real argument, a real proseantion, a real defence, a real decision. Of all these requisites not one takes place in the case of a fraudulent and collusive suit; there is no Judge, but a person invested with the ensigns of a judicial office, is misemployed in listening to a fictitious cause proposed to him; there is no party litigating, there is no party defendant, no real interest brought into questiop."

maintained that, though originally contentious, it ceases to be contentious because it is compromised by the act of the parties. This view is supported by the decision of a Fall Bench of the Madras High Court in Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appoya Naik (3), where it was roled that the dostrine of lis rondens as embedied in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to transfers effected during the pendency of a contentious suit cr proceeding, even when such suit or proceeding is subsequently compromised, and a decree is passed in pursuance of such compromise not tainted by fraud or collusion. The view was followed in the ease of Mati Lal Fal v. Freo Nath Mitra (4) where Dose, J, quoted with approval the following observation of Chancellor Searis of the Supreme Court of California in Partridge v. Shephard (5): "We know of no good reason why a judgment entered by consent of parties, in a cause in which the Court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, is less efficacions than if entered after a trial of the suit. It may be impeashed like any other judicial record by evidence of a want of jurisdiction in the Court rendering it, by showing collusion between the parties or by proof of fraud on the part of the party offering the record." The same position was: affirmed in the case of Tinoodhan Chatterice v. Trilokya Saran Sanyal (6) and had been recognised in the earlier decisions in Nadurconissa Febre v. Aghur Ali Chowdhry (7), Rai Rishen Mooker; ee v. Radha Madbub Holdar (8) and Monohur v. Hurryhur (9). A similar opinion was expressed by Jenkins, C. J., in Krishnappa v. Shirappa (10). As was pointed out by Subrahmania Ayyar, J., in Annamalas Ohettiar v. Malayandi Appoya Naik (3), the generality of the words "under any desree" cr order made therein in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Ast, upon their face, lend no support to the argument that a consent desree does not fall scope. It is well known that a judgment by consent or default is as effective as an estoppel between the parties as a judgment whereby the Court exercises its mind on a contested case; see South American & Mexican

Oo., In re (11), Bellcairn (The) (12), Nicholas v. Asphar (13), Rajlakshmi Dasse v. Katyayani Dases (14) and this is so, even though, as pointed out in Wentworth v. Bullen (15) and in Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (16), the consent order is in essence only the order of the Court sarrying out an agreement between the parties. The essence of the matter is that a desree is none-the. less a desree as defined by the Code of Civil Procedure, because it is based on a compromise, and the legal effects of the decree contemplated by Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, do not differ from the legal effects of a decree where the suit has been fought to the end. When the Court makes a decree by consent it performs not a ministerial but a judicial function; the Court must be satisfied that the agreement or compromise is lawful, and although the Court must record the entire agreement or compromise, it can pass a decree in accordance therewith only in so far as it relates to the suit. Concemently, the fast that a deeree is given in accordance with terms which have been come to between the parties ddes not provent the decree from being the formal expression by the Court of an adjudication on a right claimed or a defence set up conclusively determining the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, within the meaning of the definition contained in section 2 (2), Civil Procedure Code. Section 96 (3), on the other hand, makes it elear that a decree passed with the consent of parties is a dcoree within the meaning of the Code. It may also be maintained that, unless a compomise is collusive, the very fact that there is a empromise shows that the suit was in its origin and nature contentions, otherwise there would be nothing to compromise. In our opinion, a songent decree falls within the scope of the rule of lis pendens snuneiated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property

A similar view was adopted in the Morris (17) where of London v. Shadwell, V. O., held that a decree taken pro confesso was binding on a purchaser who had entered into a contract after the filing of the bill, and this was subsequently approved by Lord Brougham, L. C. See also Windham v. Windham (18). A similar rule has been recognised and frequently applied in the Courts of the United States, not as based on psculiarities of statutory provisions, but as founded on well-established principles of public policy, namely, that the plaintiff would be liable to be defeated by the defendant's alienation before the consent judgment or decree and would be driven to commence his precedings de noto, subject again to be defeated by the same sourse of proceeding. On this ground it has been repeatedly ruled that one acquiring interest pendents lite in a proceeding which is lis rendens is bound by the decree without regard to its form, or whether it is erroneous, and it is immaterial that the relief granted in the suit is the result of agreement or compromise, except where it is the result of fraud or collusion between the parties, Norris v. Ile (19), McIlwrath v. Hollander (20), Partridge v. Shephard (5), Turner v. B. bb (21).

Reliance has finally been placed on behalf of the appellant upon the rule enunciated in the following terms by Sir Richard Coach, C. J., in Kailas Ohandra Ghose v. Fulchand Jahuri (22), as to the liability of a purchaser pendents lite : "With regard to the question of lis pendens the dostrine appears to be this, that the aliense is bound by the proceedings in the suit after the alienation and before he becomes a party. Then the question is by what proceedings in the suit is he bound? Is he bound by the proceedings which arise from the nature of the suit, and from the case set up, and the relief prayed in the bill, or is he to be bound by any order which the Court may be induced by the parties to make in the course of the suit? I can find no authority which goes to the extent of saying that, because he does not thirk fit to become a party to the suit, he is to be bound by any order whatever that may be made. It seems to me that he ought only to be bound by proceedings which, from the nature of the suit, and the relief prayed, he might expect would take place and if there had been no notice in this case, it might have been necessary for us to determine what is the precise effect of lis pendens. But this need not now be determined. Practically, there is no substantial difference between lis pendens, and having notice of the suit. He would be equally bound by them, and not more by one than by the other."

These observations were quoted with approval by Pontifex, J., in Kasumunnissa Bibee v. Nilratna (23), and by Banerjee, J., in Kishory Mohun v. Mahomed Muzaffar Hossein (24) which, it may be noted, was decided on another ground on appeal to the Judicial Committee: Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (25). With regard to the role enunciat. ed by Coneb, C. J., in Kailas Chandra Ghose v. Fulchand Jahuri (22), two points must not be overlooked. In the first place, the case was decided long before the Transfer of Property Act was placed on the Statute Book, and it would be opposed to well recognised principles of construction Statutes to attempt to engraft on section qualifications or restrictions justified by its language but discoverable from pre-existing judicial pronouncements. Such an attempt would be open to emphatic condemnation; see the judgment of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (26) and the judgment of the Fall Bench of this Court in Uttam Chandra v. Haj Krishna (27), in the second place, as las been frequently pointed out, for example, Annamalai Ohettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (3) and Tinoodhan Chatterjee v. Trilohya Saran Sanyal (6), the rule laid down by Couch, C, J., is not in accord with the earlier decision of this Court in Naduromissa Bebee v. Aghur Ali Ohowahry (7), and indeed a different rule was subsequently laid down by Couch, C. J., himself in the case of Raikishen Mooker ee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (8) where the doctrine of his pendens was applied to a purchase pending a suit which terminated in a sonsent decree.

But if, notwitetanding the comprehensive terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, we adopt the restricted rule enunciated by Sir Richard Couch in Raslas Chandra Ghose v. Fulchand Jahuri (22) and embark upon an enquiry as to whether the decree made by consent was such as the plaintiff might, from the nature of the suit and the relief prayed for therein, expect would take place, the result is of no avail to him. The deeree which was actually made on compromise was in essence a decree which might, even after contest, have been made in favour of the plaintiff in that suit (now the first defendant in this livigation). He sought to recover the Raipur Zemindari on the allegation that the Rathis and the Dutta were in occupation under a title inoperative against him because ereated by a limited owner, as Nilkumari was, with or without the concurrence of a future possible elaimant, in the position of Mohar Singh. A suit of this description may well be regarded as a case of excessive alienation by a limited owner, and may terminate in a decree for possession in favour of the ultimate owner, subject to recoupment, partial or entire, of the advances made by the creditor. Instances of such decrees may be found in the decisions Moulvie Committee in of the Judicial Mohamed Shumsool Hooda V. Showukram of (28),Commissioner Deptuy v. Khan an Singh (29) and Bhagwat Dayal v. Debi Dayal (30). & Thei substance of the matter is that the compromise decree was of the same type as the conditional decree, such as may be and is often made in suits by reversioners, where the alienation by a limited owner is set aside on equitable terms. We are of opinion, consequently, that even according to the test formulated by Sir Richard Couch, the plaintiff must be held bound by the dostrine of lie pendens.

If, then, there is no essape from the conclusion that the plaintiff is bound by the rule of lis pendens enunciated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Ast, the mortgage ereated in his favour by the first d-fendant on the 14th September 1906, after the latter had instituted the suit for establishment of title on the 12th January 1906, must be deemed to have been affected by the consent decree made therein. That deeree gave effect to the mortgage of the 28th January 1908 which was a component part of the decree even though not made enforceable thereby. This is elear from decisions of the Judicial Committee in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (31) and Hemasta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindari Oo. (32). Indeed, to validate the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, quite as much as the mortgage in favour of the Rathie and the Datts, it was essential that the title of the mortgagor should be established, and that result was accomplished only by the consent decree of the 31st March 1908, which affirmed the agreement of the 28th January 1908, inclusive of the mortgage comprised therein as an integral component element. As between the plaintiff and his mortgagor (the first defendant) the principle of estoppal may apply and the after asquired title of the mortgagor may be made to inure to the mortgages, but the case is otherwise as between the first defendant and the Rathis and the Dutts mortgagees. The case of a mortgage given back by the purchaser to the vendor of an estate stands upon a footing of its own. While it is true that, where money is loaned or something equivalent done, upon the security of a mortgage in fee with general warranty, the mortgagor cannot set up an after acquired estate against the unsatisfied mortgagee; it is equally true that, where the transaction is simply a purchase, with such mortgage back to secure payment of the purchase money, the rule does not We are, consequently, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the mortgage in suit must be postponed to the mortgage in favour of the Bathis and the Datts. The plaintiff, it is satisfactory to find, eannot make a real grievance of this conclusion; for, as the Sabordinate Judge has observed, there is overwhelming evidence that the compromise was brought about by the plaintiff himself: it was he who was the virtual plaintiff in the other sait in the cloak of Balabhadra and employed his own men and money actively to prosecute the suit, The compromise which he thus brought about iceluded the mortgage with its express recital that the charge thereunder would priority over all other charges. The plaintiff eannot now very well complain when it transpires that this is precisely the result of the application of the rule of lis pendens.

In view of our decision upon the question of lis pendens, it is unnecessary to express an opinion upon the question of the applicability of the principle of subrogation, which has not received adequate consideration from the Sabordinate Jadge. We may add that if it were necessary to determine the question of subrogation, a fuller investigation of the relevant facts than what is contained in the judgment of the lower Court would be essential.

The result is, that the decree of the Sabardinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. The cross-objections cannot be seriously maintained and are dismissed without costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 35, 40 to 43-Judg. ments not inter partes, recitals in, admissibility of.

A recital in a jugment not inter partes of a relevant fact is not admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. [p. 232, col. 1; p. 285, col. 1.]

Kasi Nath Pal v. Jagat Kisore Acharjee, 35 Ind. Cas. 298; 20 C. W. N. 643; 23 C. L. J. 583 at p. 585 followed.

Case-law considered.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Ganjam, at Berhampore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 82 and 55 of 1918, respectively, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ganjam, at Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1916.

These second appeals soming on for hear. ing on the 29th of April 1921, and on the 3rd and 4th of May 1921, upon perusing the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Mesers. K. P. M. Menon and C. Sambasiva Roo, for the Appellant in both eases and of Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar. the 9th Respondent Second in for Appeal No. 3:3 of 1920 and of Mr. H. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents Nos. 1 to 9 and 11 in Second Appeal No. 383 of 1920 and for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3 to

12 in Second Appeal No. 334 of 1920 and the 10th Respondent in Second Appeal No. 383 of 1920 having died and his legal representative not having been brought on record within the time allowed by law and the 2nd Respondent in Second Appeal No. 384 of 1920 not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the cases having stood over for consideration till the 9th day of May 1921 the Court (Ayling and Olgers, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The only question argued before us in these second appeals is, whether the lower Appellate Court was right in treat. ing as inadmissible in evidence a judgment in certain summary suits (Exhibit B). These suits were not between the present parties or their predesessors in title and the only importance of the judgment consists in a recital therein that a certain R. Chendramma died on 3rd May 1904. There is nothing in the judgment to show on what this recital is based. The fact of Chendram. ma's death was undisputed and it may be that both sides agreed as to the date. But the date itself was immaterial for the suits turned on the simple question of whether Ohendramma had, while alive, alienated her property to third parties so as to deprive the plaintiff in that suit of the right of succession. The date of R. Chendramma's death is relevant to the question of limitation raised in the present second appeals : and Mr. K. P. M. Menon for appellant contends that the resital in the judgment is admissible in evidence under section 35, Indian Evidence Act, as an entry in an official resord made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty.

The general rule as to the relevancy of judgments is contained in section 43, Indian Evidence Act; Respondents Vakil arguer, relying on this section as well as on the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Kosi Nath Pal v. Jagat Kisore Actaries 1), that recitals in a judgment not inter parter are not relevant. He has also drawn our attention to a recent case, Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (2) in which their Lordships of the Privy Conneil appear to take the same view. The passage referred is at page 726 of the report and there has been some discussion before us of its meaning: but we understand their Lordships to say that a resital in the Magistrate's judgment of a relevant admission is not relevant evidence of the fact of that admission. If that be ac, the same principle would cover the present case.

This is the view to which we incline, but Mr. Menon has pressed us with the decisions in Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (3) and in three cases of this Court Eyathamma v. Atulia (4), Thama v. Kondan (5) and Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rajagopala Ayyangar (6).

If the Calentia case stood alone, should feel no great difficulty. It is not binding on us; and its correctness has been doubted in subsequent desisions of the same Court [Vide Ram Sunder Gope v. Haribala Dhubi (7)]. It is, moreover, possible to distinguish it on the ground that the entry of an abstract of the pleadings in the deeres in that ease (which it was sought to put in evidence) was enjoined by specific Circular Orders binding on the Court which passed the decree. In our case, the only provision as to the contents of the judgment is that of section 68 of the Rent Recovery Act, which simply says that the judgment shall contain the reasons for the same. It would be difficult to bring this resital of date under the head of reasons for the judgment.

The decisions of our own Court, however, stand on a different footing; and even if it were possible to distinguish them we think the point is of such general importance that its decision by a Full Bench is desirable.

We find some difficulty in understanding the first case, Byathamma v. Avulla (4). The learned Judges say that the decision in Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (3) applies, and name section 35 as the section under which the entry is applicable but the reasoning at the top of page 24 applies rather to section 13 and this is the section dealt with in the Madras case which they rely on [Ramasami v. Appavu (8)].

The judgment in the second case [Thama v. kondan (5)] does not discuss the point but follows the earlier decision and states the recital of an admission in a judgment is relevant under section 35, i. e., to prove the admission.

The judgment in the third ease [Krishna-sami Ayyangar v. Rojagopala Ayyangar (6)] is to the same effect.

It has been suggested that the ease of admission may be different from that of other relevant facts; but we can find no basis for such a distinction in section 35.

We, therefore, refer the following question for the decision of a Full Bench:-

Is a recital in a judgment not inter partes of a relevant fast admissible in evidence under section 35, Indian Evidence Act?

These second appeals came on before a Full Bench on the 16th and 18th December 1921.

Messre. K. P. M. Menon and O. Sambassva Rao, for the Appellant.—Under section 35 of the Evidence Act the recital as to date of a person's death, though not interpartes is admissible. A judgment is a public record prepared by the Judge. Statements in the judgment are akin to entries made by public servants in public records. The admissibility of recitals in judgments do turn on whether they are interpartes. Parbutty Dassi v. Furno Chunder Singh (3), Byathamma v. Avulla (4), Thama v. Kondan (5), Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rajagopala Ayyangar (C).

Mesers. C. S. Venkatachariar and H. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.—
We have to look to sections 40 to 43 of the Indian Evidence Act to determine the relevancy of statements contained in judgments. Judgments not inter parter are not evidence. Section 35 has no application.

OPINION,

Scaware, C. J.— In this case I had the opportunity of reading the judgment of Mr. Kumaraswami Sastri, J., and I agree with him entirely.

COUTTS TROTTES, J .- I agree.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J .- The question referred to us for determination is, whether a recital in a judgment not inter partes of a relevant fact is admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act, The suit was filed by the plaintiff appellant to resover the immoveable properties specified in the plaint on the ground that he purshased them from the reversionary beirs of one Adinarayana on whose death his mother Chandramma succeeded to a limited estate conferred on her by Hindu Law as mother of the last male owner. Chandramma alienated the properties and the suit to recover the properties from the aliences had to be filed within twelve years from the date of Chandram ma's death under Article 141 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908 As the defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, the date of Chandramma's death became material and the plaintiff alleged that she died on the 3rd of May 1904, while the ease for defendants was that she died in February 1904, and not in May 1904, and that the suit was barred as it was filed more than 12 years from February 1904. On Chandramma's death the father of the second defendant in this suit filed a suit in the Revenue Court against sertain tenants for the purpose of acceptance of pattas and muchilikas under the Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1:65. The suit was dismissed, but in the judgment there is a statement made by the Judge that Chandramma died on the 3rd of May 1904. The only evidence let in by the plaintiff as to the date of death of Chandramma was the statement in the judgment, which is filed as Exhibit B in the case. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that this statement was relevant to prove the issue as to the date of death of Chandramma and, acting upon it, he held that Chandramma died within twelve years before the date of the suit and that, there. fore, it was not barred by limitation. On appeal, the District Judge was of opinion that the statement in a judgment not inter partes was not evidence. He believed the evidence of the defendants' witnesses and dismissed the plaintiff's suit as barred by limitation. In second appeal the point raised is that the recital of the date of death in the judgment was evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act and that the District Judge was wrong in rejecting it as irrelevant. The contention of Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the appellant is that a judgment is a public record within the meaning of section 74 of the Evidence Act, that a Judge is a public servant and when he writes a judgment, he makes a public record, and that a statement in a judgment is, therefore, an entry made by a public servant in a public record, which, if it relates to a relevant fact, would be evidence under section 35, irrespective of whether the judgment in which the statement occurs, is or is not between the same parties. In support of his argument be refers to the decisions in Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (3), Byathamma v. Avulla (4), Thama v. Kondan (5) and Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rungopala Ayyangar (6). For the respond. ents if is contended that the relevancy of judgments is governed by sections 40 to 43 of the Evidence Act and that a judgment not inter partes is not evidence. Reference has been made to Kasi Nath Pal v. Jagot Kisore Acharges (1) and the observations of the Privy Council in Ram Parkask Das v. Anand Das (2). I am of opinion that section 35 has no application to judgments and that a judgment which would not be admissible under sections 40 to 43 of the Evidence Act would not become relevant merely because it contains a statement as to a fact which is in issue or relevant in a suit between persons who are not parties or privies. Sections 40 to 44 of the Evidence Act deal with the relevancy of judgments in Courts of justice. Section 40 enacts that the existence of any judgment, order or deeree which by law prevents any Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial is a relevant fact when the question such Court ought to take whether eognizance of such suit or to bold such trial. Section 41 deals with final judgments, orders and decrees in the exercise of Probate, Matrimonial, Admiralty or Insolvency jurisdiction, or what is known as judgments in rem and states that such judgments, orders or decrees are conclusive proof of the matters specified in the section, and, by virtue of that section of the Act, evidence would not be allowed to disprove those matters. Section 42 refers to judgments relating to matters of a public nature relevant to the enquiry and states that such judgments, though evidence, are not conclusive proof of what they state, thus allowing evidence to be given to disprove facts found in the judgments. Section 43 states that "judgments, orders or decrees other than these mentioned in sections 40, 41 and 42 are irrelevant unless the existence of such judgment, order or deeree is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of this Act," e. q., section 13. Section 44 enables a party to show that any judgment, order or decree which is relevant under see tions 40, 41 or 42 was delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it or was obtained by fraud or collusion. It appears to me that these sections sodify the law to the admissibility of judgments ID evidence. It is not suggested that, under the provisions of these sections, a judg. ment, unless it be a judgment in rem, would bind third parties who are not parties to the judgment or elaim under those who are parties. Other judgments would be res inter alios acta and would not be admissible in evidence. The same is the law in England, and I need only refer to Natal Land and Colonization Company v. Good (9). Section 35 of the Evidence Ast, which enacts that an entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties or by any other person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact, deals with a distinctly separate class of easer, namely, entries made by public officials acting in the exercise of a statutory duty or power conferred by special enastments which regulate matters of public or quasi public interest It would be straining the language of section 35 to hold that a Judge, when he writes a judgment, is making entries in a public or official book, register or reserd, and that every statement made in (9) (1868) 2 P C. 121; 5 Moo. P. C. (N. s.) 132; 16 W. R. 1086; 16 E. R. 465.

a judgment is an entry in such book, register or resord. If section 35 is applicable to judgments and if the contention of Mr. Menon is assepted, the result will be that every judgment would be admissible in evidence to prove a relevant fact if it contains any etatement as to a fast in issue or relevant fact, even though that judgment may be between persons who are total strangers to the litigation in which it is sought to be filed as evidence. I find it difficult to bold that the Legislature, which in sections 40 to 44 has earefully defined the limits within which judgments are admissible in evidence, would have, in a previous section, practically nullified the provisions as to the relevancy of jadgments by including judgments in the eategory of public or other official books, registers or resords. I am unable to agree with the desisions relied on by Mr. Menon. In Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (3) the suit was for the possession of a fishery and the plaintiff wanted to let in evidence of an admission alleged to have been made by a predecessor in title of the defendants in the written statement in a former suit. This would be evidence under section 21 of the Evidence Act. The written statement was not forthcoming as it was destroyed and the only evidence of the admission was that contained in a deeree in the former suit which began by giving a short statement of the pleadings in the suit. The rules of Court required every decree to contain an abstract of the pleadings. Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ., held that the statement in the decree was evidence of the admission made under section a5 of the Evidence Act. The learned Judges begin by stating that the original containing the admission of the defendant's predecessor in title could not be produced as it was destroyed and that, under a Circular issued by the Sudder Court, it was the duty of the Court to enter in the decree an abstract of the pleadings, and they relied on section 35 as authority for the view that the admission sought to be proved can be proved by the abstract prefixed to the decree. At the end of the judgment, however, they go on to state that the admission in the decree would be binding only if the person who is alleged to have made the admission was the predecessor intitle of the defendents and observe : "Whether the defendants are bound by the state. ments of Rashmoni depends on the question TRIPURANA SEETHAPATI ROO DOBA U. ROKKAM VENKANNA DOBA.

whether Rashmoni was their predecessor-intitle; and this point has not been decided by the Subordinate Judge. If he holds that defendants do not represent Rashmoni, neither the decrees nor the admission can be admissible against them. On the other hand if he holds that the defendants do represent Rashmoni ther, in our opinion, so much of the decrees as purports to give the statement of Rashmoni is admissible in the present case. The amount of weight to be given to such statement is a matter to be desided by the Court below." Lekraj Kuar v. Mahipal Singh (10), to which the learned Judges refer. was a case not of a judgment but of a statement made in a Settlement register, and their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that being an entry in a register kept by a public servant under statutory authority it was admissible under section 35 of the Evidence Act. It seems to me that if the learned Judges were of opinion that any statement made in a judgment would be a statement made by a public officer in a public resord and would bring it under section 35, all the discussion as to the duty of the Judge to make an abstract of the pleadings in the decree, the destruction of the original plead. ings containing the admission and as to its relevancy depending upon whether Rashmoni, the person who is alleged to have made the statement abstracted in the decree, was the predecessor in title of the defendants would be immaterial as a statement recorded under the circumstances mentioned in section 35, would depend for its relevancy on the mere fact that it was made by a public servant in the discharge of his duty apart from the sources of his information or the relationship of the persons giving the information to the persons who were interested subsequently in the matter. The correctness of this decision was doubted in Sunder Das v. Fatimul ul nissa Begam (11) and Romsunder Gope v. Haribala Dhubi (7). In Baythamma v. Atulla (4) the question was whether the parties were governed by Makkattayam or Marumakkatta. yam Law and it was sought to prove that in a previous claim petition to which a preceding Karnavan was a party, he acted in the capacity of a Karnavan, thus showing that the parties were governed by the Marumakkat. The order of the District tayam Law. Munsif resiting the petition of the previous Karnavan was sought to be put in to prove the allegation made by the previous Karnavan and it was held, on the authority of the 9 Calcutta case [Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunter Singh (3) , eited above, that it was admissible under sestion 35 of the Evidence Act. As printed out by the learned Referring Judges, the reasoning in this case would apply to section 13 rather than section 35. Rama Swami v. Appasu (8), which is referred to by the learned Judges, related to the relevaney of judgments under sections 13 and 42 of the Evidence Act and had nothing to do with section 35. The 15 Madras case cited above, Thama v. Eondan (5), was a suit to redeem a Kanom. The Kanom document was lost and the judgment in a previous suit brought by a previous Jenmi to redeem the same Kanom in which it is stated that defendants admitted their position as Kanomdars was sought to be put in evidence. learned Judges, following Learni Kuar v. Mahipal Singh (10), Farbutty Dassi v. Purno Ohunder Singh (3) and Byathamma v. Avulla (4), eited above, held that the judgment was admissible and that the resital in a judgment of the admission of the relevant fast would be evidence of the Jenmi's title under section 35 of the Evidence Act. As the second suit to redeem was between the same parties as those to the first suit, it is difficult to see why recourse should be had to section 35 for the purpose of rendering the previous judgment admissible in evidence, as the matter could well have been brought under sections 40 to 43 of the Evidence Act. Neither in this case nor in the case reported at page 19 of the same volume is there any discussion of the authorities and the Judges simply follow the decision in the 9 Calcutta case [Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Sing's (3)] eited above. I think the correct poinciple has been laid down by Mookerji, J., in Kasi Nath Pal v. Jagat Kishe Actaries (1), where the learned Judge held that, "although a judgment not inter partes may be used in evidence in certain cirumstances as a fact in issue or as a relevant fast or possibly as a transaction, the recitals in the judgment cannot be used as evidence in a litigation between the parties."

The judgment of the Privy Council in the 43 Calcutta case [Ram Parkath Das v. Anand Dos (2) eited above also makes it clear, The question there was whether a person was disqualified from being a Mahant by reason of his having been married. Evidence was sought to be let in of a recital in the judgment of a Magistrate of an admission of the marriage made in the course of proceedings before him. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the judgment was rightly rejected as not by itself cyidenes of the facts recorded therein. It is argued by Mr. Menon that what their Lordships rejected was not the judgment but a statement by one Hanuman Lal, made on oath, that the Mahant was married; but a reference to the passage in which the observation of their Lordships occurs makes it clear that they were referring to the judgment. It is unnecessary in this reference to consider whether, if admissions made by parties to a suit or their predecessors in title are relevant and the originals containing the admissions are not forthcoming, secondary evidence of such admissions can be given by reference to extracts from judgments. The answer to the question will turn not on section 35 but with reference to the provisions of the Act relating to the relevancy of admissions and the sections relating to recondary evidence. On a consideration of the authorities and the provisions of the Evidence Act, I am clearly of opinion that section 35 would not render a judgment not inter partes evidence. I would answer the question referred to us in the negative. M. C. P.

GANGA RAM-DEFENDANT-RESPONDENT,

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1867), Sch. II, Art 8—Suit for interest on mortgage-money, cognisance of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit—Sufficient cause.

A shop was mortgaged to the plaintiffs with possession and the mortgagee agreed to pay a certain sum yearly as the munaja profits) of the mortgage money, and in case of default this sum was to carry interest Plaintiffs sued to recover a sum less than Rs. 500 as the munaja for three years and interest thereon in the Court of a Munsif with 2nd Class powers:

Held, that the suit was one for interest on the mortgage-money and was one triable by a Court of Small Causes and that, therefore, no second appeal lay in the case. [p. 286, col. 1.]

It is not a sufficient cause for allowing a suit for interest on a mortgage to be withdrawn under Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, that a subsequent suit for principal, if brought, would be barred under the provisions of Order II, rule 2 of the Code. [p. 282, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Kangra at Dharmsala, dated the 17th January 1921, reversing that of the Honorary Munsif, Second Class, Bijapur, District Kangra, dated the 17th June 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Jogan Nath; for the Appellants.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT,—Plaintiffs' suit, which was for munofa due under the terms of a mortgage deed and for interest thereon, has been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it was not proved that there is any subsisting mortgage in plaintiffs' favour. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court and have asked that, if no second appeal lies, the case may be heard as an application for revision.

The suit was for a sum of money less than Rs. 500 and was heard by a Munsif with 2nd Class powers, and the first appeal was heard by the Subordinate The first ground of appeal to this Court is that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge's Court and that he had acted without jurisdiction in hearing it. The original mortgage deed has not been produced but a copy of it is on the record and it shows that a shop standing on a certain specified spot of land was mortgaged with possession to the plaintiffs by one Lachbi Ram who agreed to pay Rs. 144 yearly as munafa of the mortgage-money, and on failure to pay this amount it was to sarry interest. The present suit is for three years munofat and for interest. Now, on bahalf of the appellants it is contended that what was PARDUMAN CHAND E. GANGA BAM.

mortgaged was a vacant site and a shop and that the suit is for the profits of immoveable property, and, therefore, excluded from the augnizance of a Court of Small Causes, No doubt a vacant site is des. eribed in the beginning of the mortgage. deed, and it is clear from the dimensions of the shop that it does not cover the whole plot. The only thing specifically mortgaged by the deed was the shop and if the suit be considered as one for the rent of the shop it was not excluded from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. But the suit is clearly one the profits of the mortgage-money; in other words, it was one for interest on the mortgage-money, and, therefore, it was one triable by a Court of Small Causes and the appeal was properly heard by the Subordi. nate Judge and no second appeal lies.

An application was made to me that the appellants should be allowed to withdraw the suit under Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code It is not stated that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or that there is any other sufficient ground of a like nature for allowing the plaintiffs to institute a fresh suit in regard to the subject matter. The reason urged before me in arguments is that contained in ground 4 of the application. The present suit was merely for interest and the plaintiffs were afraid that a second suit for principal, if brought bereafter, may be beld to be barred by Order 11, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. This, however, is not a sufficient cause for allowing the present suit to be withdrawn. The plaintiffs having brought the present suit for interest only the defendants have a very good defence to a subsequent suit for principal, namely, that it would be barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and to allow the plaintiffs at this stage to withdraw the suit would be to deprive the defendant of that ground of defence.

The other ground urged, namely, that there are important questions of law and that, whatever the desision of this Court may be, there would probably be an appeal under the Letters Patent, is no sufficient ground for allowing the withdrawal and I have, therefore, rejected the application.

In support of the prayer that this Court may interfere on the revision side, it is nrged that no issue was framed as to whether the original deed of mortgage had been lost and that the plaintiffs were thereby prejudiced. A perusal of the record shows that at the very first hearing the defendant pleaded that the original mortgage deed should be produced and the Court also recorded an order to the same effect. It was not till many months later that the plaintiff's Mukhtar told the story about the deed having been handed over to Lachbi Ram, the mortgagor. No issue was framed as to whether this was correct or not, but the plaintiffs apparently knew that they had to prove it because they produced Nebal Chand, Dittu and Khana as witnesses to the fact. In my opinion, therefore, they were not prejudiced in any way by the omission of the Trial Court to frame an issue on the point. These witnesses have been disbelieved by the lower Appellate Court, which finds that the plaintiffs have not proved that the deed was last.

In the fifth ground of appeal it is stated that the lower Appellate Court has erroneously supposed that the deed was with the mortgagor and, therefore, it should be presumed to have been discharged. This ground is based upon the following sentence from the lower Appellate Court's judgment: "The story seems to be very improbable. It was a very valuable security worth Rs. 1,500. It is extremely unlikely that the mortgagees should part with it to the mortgagor, the very person who even (sic) denying it, without a receipt asknowledgment. and without an presence of the deed with the mort gagor is a very strong proof of its discharge. Therefore, as a rule, the deed is the last thing which a mortgagee would part,"

I do not think that from this the lower Appellate Court meant that the deed in this case was with the mortgagor. What it meant was that mortgagees, as a rule, would not part with their deed, especially to the mortgagor, until it is paid because the presence of the deed with the mortgagor is a strong proof of discharge. It made these remarks in order to support its view that it was extremely unlikely with the deed to the mortgagor without receiving payment from him. I agree with the lower Appellate Court that the appellants have not proved that the deed was lost and I do not consider they are entitled to have the case remanded so that they may produce further evidence.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs on the ground that no second appeal lies and I decline to interfere on the revision side.

z, K.

Appeal dismissed and interference in revision declined.

PLAINTING RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 188'), ss. 95 (a), 97 — Court of Wards' power to sue—"Estate," meaning of — Accretion—Re-formation—Limitation, special law of — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 908, s. 8 — General rule as to plea of limitation—Rennell's map, evidentiary value of Presumption of continuity—Accuracy—Evidence Act (I of 1074), s. 83.

Section 97 of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives the Court of Wards power to sue in the case of an estate which comes to it under the provisions of section 95 a; of the Act. [p. 292, col. 1.]

The word "estate" in section 95 (a) of the Bengal.

Tenancy Act means all that the holder is entitled to by way of re-formation or accretion. [p. 298, col. 1.]

The Court of Wards has the same power to sue when the estate comes to it indirectly through the mechanism of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it has in a case which comes directly under the provisions of the Court of Wards Act [p 292, col. 1.]

In the case of a suit alleged to be barred under a special law of limitation, the party setting up the plea is not entitled to deduct the period of two months for service of notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 297, col. 1.]

It is necessary that limitation should be pleaded in all cases in which the suit is alleged to be barred. But particularly this is so where the bar is alleged under some special law. [p 297, col 1]

The general rule is that points of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where they involve a decision upon questions of fact [p 29i, col. .]

Points of limitation should not be decided against the parties unless attention has been drawn to the question of limitation and an opportunity given them to meet it on the evidence. [p 297, col. 1]

here limitation has not been pleaded and where no issue has been raised, the ourt cannot make any assumptions with regard to it. If limitation is urged as a bar the facts on which it is barred must be proved after an issue has been framed. [p 297, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a book was not referred to in the lower Court, may not of itself be a good objection in appeal. If, however, the book was used to establish the existence of facts which the appellant had no opportunity of meeting and which he desired to rebut, the admission of the book in the appellate stage might involve a remand. [p 298, col. 1.]

Whatever else may have been the purpose of the preparation of Rennell's map, that purpose included the delineation of roads and waterways and so it may be used to ascertain the position of a river shown therein [p 295, col. v.]

Although Rennell's map was not contemporaneous with the Permanent Settlement, it having been made some 22 years or so before the Decennial Settlement on which the Permanent Settlement proceeded, it may be used, on the presumption of continuity, as evidence of a state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement [p. 298, col 2.]

The presumption of continuity is one which varies with the circumstances of each case and is applicable to things which are continuous in their nature. If they are that, then the Court may presume that they continue in the state in which they were last known, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. [p. 298, col. 2.]

Where Rennell's map is referred to as evidence there is a presumption of its accuracy under section 8s of the Evidence Act in respect of such matters as to which it is admissible in evidence. [p. 300, col. 1.]

Appeal from the original decree against that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Backerganj, dated the 18th November 1918.

estates Nos. 1763 and 1764 respectively on the revenue roll of the Bakargani Collectorate. The plaintiffs Nos 1 to 34 are also lessees of the estate No. 1764 under a patta from the thirty-fifth plaintiff. The two estates together constitute the Zemindari of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur, No. 1763 and the lease-hold are in the management of a Manager under the Coart of Wards and this suit is brought by him on behalf of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 34 and by the plaintiff No. 35. The subject. matter of this suit are two island churs at present known by the names of Chur Botham and Chur Harikishore and certain lands described in schedule A to the plaint. The question is, are these lands re-formations of the plaintiff's permanently settled estates as the plaintiffs allege, or are the two churs new formations in a navigable river and the other lands assertions to the permanently estate assessable to additional settled revenue. The land settled was, as we have said, Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur. regards the northern and the southern boundaries of the Pargana there is no dispute. As regards the west, the plaintiffs say that the Pargana was bordered by the Betus River. The respondent says that it was bounded by other settled estates.

The question in dispute is, where is the eastern boundary of this permanently settled estate. It is undisputed that the eastern boundary of the settled Pargana was the western bank of the river Sahabazpur. The question is, whether the western bank of Sahabazpur river as it was at the time of Permanent Settlement and as depicted in Rennell's map forms the eastern boundary of the Pargana. It is both parties' case that the western bank of the Sahabazpur river is the eastern boundary and the point to be decided ie, where was that western bank at the time of the Permanent Sattlement. We have to deside whether the lands in suit fall within the boundaries of the estate in respect of which the plaintiffs have been paying revenue to Government.

It is necessary, particularly with reference to the issue of res judicata, to give a short resume of the previous history on th subject, and with reference to the objection that there has been an abatement or remission of the original revenue consequent on the reduction of the area, to give a short previous history; of the Pargana.

In the year 1847, two churs, named Bhasan Tezamaddi and Dampier, formed in the Sahabazpur river. In the year 1880-81, there was a Deara Survey and the Deara Superintendent of Surveys took possession of these two islands on behalf of Government. He disallowed the respondents' contention that these churs were re-formations on the sites of their diluviated permanently settled lands and that the sites were dry lands, according to Rennell's map of 1764-73 at the time of the Pormanent Settlement. He relied on Kelso's map which was prepared in 1847 48 and held that the churs were new formations on the bed of a navigable river and belonged to Government. The respondents who objected to the decision claimed them as being within their easterm boundary. The decision of the Deara Superintendent was in 1883 and was, as we have said, based upon Kelso's map which he held showed that the lands in question lay outside the boundary of the permanently settled estate. An appeal was made to the Commissioner by the respondents and the Commissioner in his order of the 26th March 1884, after stating that Rennell's map showed that shortly before the Permanent Settlement where the lands had re-formed was part of Sahabazpur and that subsequent to the Permanent Settlement the Pargana suffered severely from diluvion all along its eastern face as was shown by a comparison of Kelso's and Tasin's map with that of Rennell, expressed his opinion that the lands were elearly re-formations of the appellant's permanently settled estate and reversed the order of the Dears Superintendent assessing them with revenue and ordered the islands to be released. From that decision of the Commissioner, the Government appealed to the Board of Ravenue and, in their grounds of appeal, amongst other matters, they alleged that Rennell's map was incorrect and . contended that a comparison of Kelso's map with the locality showed that the chur was thrown up in a big navigable river and was' not included within the Pargana, The Board of Revenue rejected the appeal of the Government and referred them to their remedies by a civil suit. On the 6th of October 1893, a: Civil Suit (No. 76 of 1893) was filed by Government for declaration of title and

U. W.

Vol. LXVI] SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA C. ANNADA MOHAN BOY. possession of Chur Dampier. It is to be observed that no sivil proceedings were taken with respect to the other chur, namely, Bhasan Tazumaddi, and assordingly the plaintiffs in this suit allege that the Government acquiess. ed in the decision of the Commissioner of Revenue and the Board of Revenue in respect of that chur. That suit was subsequently transferred to another Court and re-numbered as No. 90 of 1895. The Secretary of State in his plaint in that suit alleged that estates Nos. 1763 and 1764 were owned by the defendants in the first paragraph of the plaint mentioned and that together they constituted the Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur and that a wide channel, an arm of the sea locally known as Dakhin Sahabazpur river, lay to the east of the Pargana Dakbin Sahabazpur and formed the eastern boundary of that Pargana. Then the plaint set forth the proceedings to which we have referred and alleged that the chur was formed in a wide navigable river and was not a re-formation on the original site of any lands of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur, that the map of Major Rennell did not represent the state of things existing at the time of the Permanent Sattlement, that it was drawn on too small a scale to admit of any satisfactory comparison and that there were reasons for holding that it was not accurate. The plaintiff accordingly prayed for a desree deslaring that the lands in dispute being an island formation in the bed of a big navigable river belonged to him and that the elaim of the defendants that they were re formations in situ was without foundation. The respondents filed a written statement in which they alleged that the disputed chur having formed on the original site of diluviated lands permanently settled with the proprietors of Pargana Dakhin Sahabszpur, the plaintiff had no right, title or interest in such newly formed lands. They contended that, though the map of

before the Permanent Settlement, yet in the absence of evidence of change the position of the land and water ought to have been presumed to continue. They alleged that this map had been acted upon by the Govern.

ment in several instances and, on the basis of that map, the Revenue Authorities had released newly formed lands to private parties and private parties had also in several instances obtained decrees against Government for newly formed lands in Stie Civil Court on the basis of this map. They denied that it was inaccurate. Then, in paragraph 11, a statement was made which is important upon the issue of abatement of revenue now sought to be raised. Paragraph 11 of the written statement alleged that after the Permanent Settlement the river lying to the east of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur gradually encroached upon it and diluviated its land to the extent of nearly eight miles in breadth for which the present Zamindars or their predecessors-in-interest obtained no reduction of revenue and, as the present chur was a re-formation on the site of the diluviated lands, the plaintiff had no right thereto. This statement that there had been no reduction of revenue was not, we may here observe, contested in the suit, and no issue was raised with reference thereto. The suit was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Barisal who gave his judgment on the 12th of December 1895. A number of issues were raised of which the most important were the 4th and the 5th, namely, (4) "Has the land in dispute been formed in a large and navigable river or an arm of the sea existing at the time of the Permanent Settlement?" and (5) "Whether the land in dispute is a re-formation on the original site of the defendants' Pargana Dakhin Sababazpur and whether it is an ascretion to the same?" We shall refer later when dealing with the issue of res judicata to the findings of the Subordinate Judge in that suit. The conelusion, however, to which he came was that Rennell's map should be followed and that the eastern boundary of the Pargana as it existed at the time of the Permanent Settle. ment was shown by that map. He found that the map could be re-laid and that the correct starting point was the south west angle of Fort William. He, however, also found that a portion of Chur Dampier fell beyond that line and was an ascretion to the Pargana for which the defendants were liable to pay additional revenue. That portion is marked by the letters A, B, C on the map. He assordingly dismissed the suit except as regards the small triangular portion to which we have referred which was declared to lie outside the boundary line of the Pargane and was, therefore, liable to assessment. In the present suit, the same question has some up again with respect to the property now in dispute and the two issues which have been framed are (5) "Are the plaintiffs entitled to all lands and churs to the west of the eastern boundary of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur as shown in the map annexed to the decree in Suit No. 90 of 1895?" and (6) "Is the defendant entitled to dispute the said eastern boundary?"

Touching the issue of abatement, the following facts must be noted. From an early date the Salt Department occupied lands belonging to the Zemindari. At first the Salt Department appear to have paid Rs. 12,208 (Siesa) for their use and occupation and the Zemindars paid the full revenue of Rs. 57,435.13.4. After that, the sum was not paid but was called "suspended." That is, it was deducted from the total revenue. Zamindars paid Rs. 44,413 15 5 only. In other words a book transfer was made of the amount due to the Zeminder as rent by the Salt Department. In 1833 the manufacture of salt was discontinued. The Government offered to give back the lands held by the Salt Department on the Zemindars agreeing to pay in future the sam previously deducted from the revenue payable, in other words, the revenue originally fixed. The respondents did not agree to go back to the old state of affairs alleging that the "suspension" of jama was allowed not only on account of rent but also in consideration of sundry cesses of which the Zemindars had been deprived. They pointed out what appears to be the fact, viz., that a large portion of the lands relinquished by the Salt Department had been resumed by Government and separately assessed. In Exhibit KK Mr. H. Ricketts' (the Commissioner of Chittagong) letter, it is stated that some Salt Mokams had been wholly washed away. A survey of the lands was made in 1848 by Mr. Kelso to ascertain the extent and locality of the resumed lands. whether lands held by the Salt Department were in possession of the Zemindars and, to quote Mr. Ricketts' letter, "to ascertain the extent of the Zemindari which pays the reduced 'ama of Rs. 44,413 15 5."

Mr. Ricketts points out that the Government had resumed lands of the area there stated—the aggregate area of resumptions actually exceeding the area of the estate held by the Zemindars. He states that the assessment of the resumed lands was already Rs. 33,513 and would in a few years equal the sadar jama of the original estate. The jama then paid by the estate was stated to be R. 44,4 3 cn 102,095 aeres culturable. This, he observes, was a high jama for an estate settled in perpetuity, especially when it was considered that much of the land was held by Talukdar under the Zemindars at a very The Collector had proposed that low rate. the question of re-imposition of the suspended Rs. 13,021 should be adjusted by composition on the terms mentioned in the letter which it is not necessary to recapitulate. Mr. Ricketts, however, states that these terms were not acceptable to the Zamindars who represented that the jama then paid (Rs. 44,413) was a heavy burden on the lands remaining to them and that to re-impose the suspended jama without restoring all the privileges they possessed previous to the introduction of the salt manufacture would be unjust. He points out that the Zamindars could show that the Government had by means of 35 resumption suits reparately resumed 151,862 agree assessed at Rr. 33,513, that portion of the land resumed was certainly the land held by the Salt Department, that some Salt Mokams had been destroyed by diluvion, and that the land which then comprised their Zemindari was not in extent and produce disproportionate to the jama already paid, namely, Rs. 44,413. Oa the whole, he concludes as follows: "Assuredly, the long array of resumptions would induce a bias in favour of the Zemindars and I by no means feel so assured of our equitable right to re-impose the suspended jama as to recommend that the extreme measures of re-imposition and sale by Court of the estate for arrears should be resorted He recomended, therefore, as an alternative, that all intentions of re-imposing the suspended Rs. 13,021-13 11 should be abandoned. After this, on the 11th September 1850, the Revenue Secretary to the Government of Bengal wrote to the Sadar Board of Revenue stating that the plea of the Zemindars against re imposition of the sum deducted on assount of the salt manufacture had been proved to a great extent to the satisfaction of Mr. Ricketts and that, "taking into consideration the great extent of the resumptions that have been made in this estate and the vast increase of actual jama derived therefrom, His Honour is pleased, in accordance with the recommendation of SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA U. ANNADA MOHAN BOY.

Mr. Ricketts, to authorize the abandonment of the suspended amount and the proposed reduction in the sadar jama of the estate." We may here observe that it would seem that from the year 1802, if not from 1793, the actual amount of revenue which had been paid by the Zemindars was the sum of Rs. 44,413.15 5 pier, which represents the sadar jama as originally fixed less the deduction made on account of occupation of land by the Salt Department. From this letter it would seem clear that the reason for a reduction of the revenue paid by the estate was that a portion of the estate had been resumed by Gavernment.

the estate had been resumed by Government. A preliminary objection was taken in the written statement on the ground that the Manager of the Court of Wards had no power to bring a suit for khas possession in an attached estate. This objection, we may obsarve at the outset, is relevant only so far as the plaintiffs Nos, 1 to 31 are concerned who are described as 'Wards of Court by the General Manager, Court of Warde." It does not apply to the 35th plaintiff, Bat it is contended that if the objection is good against the Court of Wards representing the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 34 the suit fails as regards the plaintiff No. 35 also on the ground that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 34 are subordinate holders under him and that he has no present right to sue. The facts as regards this are that the District Judge exercised the jurisdiction vested in him under the Bengal Tenancy Act and acted under the provisions of section 95A of that Act which provides in section 97 that "in any case in which the Court of Wards undertakes under section 95 the management of an estate or tenure, so much of the provisions of the Court of Wards Ast as relates to the management of immoveable property shall apply to the management" In the ease of the appointment of a Manager by the District Judge under section 95, section 98 contains the provisions applicable to the Manager and, amongst other such provisions, the Manager has "the same powers as the co-owners jointly might but for his appointment have exercised." The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the word "management" in section 97 relates to Part VI of the Court of Wards Ast which is so entitled, and that that part of the Act does not give powers for the institution of a suit. There is no reference in section 97 to Part VI of the Court of Wards Act, but the argument is based on the fact that l'art VI of the Court of Wards Act deals with management and on the contention that that part contains the whole of the powers of management which are conferred in the case of the Court of Wards taking over a property under the provisions of section 95 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that, though it cannot be said that the plaintiffs are disqualified proprietors, the case must be treated in the same way as if they were such and that, under the provisions of section 97 of the Beugal Tenancy Act, it is not merely Chapter Vi of the Court of Wards Act which is made applicable but all sections of the said Act which have any reference to management and there are provisions relating to management which are not included in that part; that the effect of taking over a property by the Court of Wards is to prevent the proprietor from managing it; that it is not the intention of the Legislature that the Court of Wards managing a property which has been made over, to it under the provisions of section 95 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act should have any less powers than a Manager appointed by the Judge under the provisions of section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that, as in a case which comes directly under the provisions of the Court of Wards Act, Manager has the the power suit, it must reasonably be held that the same power of suit exists as a part of the general management in the case where the management of an estate has been made over to it under the provisions of section 95A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It must, we think, be taken to be a reasonable interpretation that when the Bengal Tenancy Act gives the District Judge the power to direct that an estate be managed by the Court of Wards in such case that body has the same powers as it has in regard to other estates directly coming within the provisions of the Court of Wards Act. In the latter case, there would be a power of suit in the Court of Wards. Should we say then that, because an estate comes to the Court of Wards not directly but through the meshanism of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the manager has no such power? As regards the manager appointed under section 95 (b), it has been held that he is competent to sae to recover possession of land: Sibo Suntari v. Ra Mohun (1). In our opinion there is no ground or reason for holding this and at the same time holding that there is no power of suit in the case of an estate taken under esetion 95 (a). We are of opinion that section 97 gives the Court of Wards power to sue in the oase of an estate which esmes to it under the provisions of sestion 95 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is argued that under section 95 (a) the estate to be managed is that which is handed over and was handed over before the churs in suit formed. But the word "estate" there means we think all that the holder is entitled to by way of reformation or appration. The lands which were handed over to the Manager were the whole estate in which subsequently the lands in sait are said to have re-formed. If there had been no dispute between the parties as to the title to these lands, it sould not, we think, be sontended that the Court of Wards had no power to take steps to manage these lands as churs which had formed within the ambits of the estate made over to their management. It is not contested that where an estate directly comes to the Court of Wards, it has power to sue, and this appears to us to be part of its powers of management. our opinion, it has the same power when the estate comes to it indirectly through the mechanism of the Bangal Tenancy Act. Possibly, the Legislature in enacting section 97 of the Bengal Tenancy Ant intended to draw a distinction between the management of the property of the co-owners and the care of their persons. It is admitted that there is no decision to the contrary effect and we hold, therefore, that this objection fails.

Passing from this preliminary objection we will deal, first, with the contention that there has been an abatement or reduction of revenue in respect of the estate and that, therefore, the plaintiffs must show not merely what were their lands at the time of the Permanent Settlement but that the lands in suit are re-formations of lands of which they have been paying revenue since such alleged abatement. No such case was made in the written statement, though the materials upon which it is based were in the possession of the Government. It was put forward for the first time after the evidence had been olosed on both sides. The learned Judge refused at that stage and under the circumstanses of the case to allow this issue to be raised. He, however, permitted the defendant to argue the point on the plaintiff's evidence and held that there had been in fast no abatement. It is objected that the Court should have allowed the issue. For the purpose of this judgment we may assume (without so deciding) that the Court should have allowed the issue to be raised. It is, however, a different question whether the appellant is entitled to a remand to obtain evidence on this point. Dr. Dwarks Nath Mitter who appeared for the Government in the lower Ocurt and before us admitted that he did not ask to give evidence on this issue in the lower Court and that he was then willing to have the point determined on the record as it then stood. Bafore us, however, the learned Advocate General asks for a remand. But it is quite clear that he has not in mind any definite evidence, which is known and can be produced. He stated that he wished to have an opportunity to examine the resumption records in order to see how matters stood as regards the lands resumed and whether they or any other lands had diluviated. He spike of "being in the dark" es regards these matters. It is obvious that, whilst it might have been a matter of doubt whether when a particular piece of evidence was put forward as available, the Court should allow a remand seeing that no evidence was offered in the lower Court, it is also elear that such a remand should not be allowed at the present time after so long a trial merely for the purpose of making an ecquiry whether there is any evidence to be produced. The judgment was given in November 1918, and, if there were any evidence, steps should have been taken meanwhile to ascertain what it was. Had the appellant then some to Co rt and said: "Here is the evidence I want to provo. I ask for a remand in order that I may prove it," there would at least have been a matter for consideration. But here all the evidence that there may be is in the Government's possession and has been so all along. Not withstanding that the point was not taken in the pleadings till after the close of the evidence and since then nothing has been apparently done to ascertain the facts. It is, to our minds, quite clear that no remand should be allowed and we refuse the same. will, for the purpose of this judgment, (and without so deciding), assume that the objection may be raised notwithstanding that it was not taken until after all the eviderse had been given and the case closed, and will consider the question on the evidence as it is now before us. The facts of this question of abatement have been already fully stated. If an abatement were established, then undoubtedly the plaintiffs would have to show that the land in suit was not merely a re-formation of the lands settled with them in 1793 but of lands other than those in respect of which abatement was made and of lands for which they have been and are now paying revenue. It has been contended by the appellant that there had been an abatement of some Rs. 13,000, that is, that the revenue is paid at the rate of Rs. 44,413 15 5 instead of Rs. 57,435...3 4 and that this abatement was allowed not only as regards the lands resumed but in respect of diluviated lands also. For the respondents it is argued that they never asked for an abatement and that all that happened was that they refused to assent to the arrange. ment proposed by the Government as set out in Mr. Ricketts' letter which we have mentioned and that it must in consequence be assumed that the state of things as it existed prior thereto continued up till the present date, namely, that the revenue was Rs. 57,435 13.4, a deduction being made in respect of lands taken possession of by Government and which the respondents refused to take back on the terms offered to them by Mr. Ricketts, It is further contended that abatement is only evidence of relinquishment of lands and that there has been none. There was, it is said, no request to deduct or agreement to deduct. For the Crown it is argued that, after this length of time, it must be taken that, though the respondents may have refused to accept Mr. Ricketts' offer, there has been an asquiessence in the Government resolution allowing a deduction of revenue.

It is not necessary to decide whether there has been an abatement of revenue or not because in this case we assume (without deciding it) that there has been such an abatement without such conclusion affecting the decree which the plaintiffs have got, for, we are of opinion that, as is clearly shown by the letter from the Secretary to the Bengal Government to the Board of Revenue, the alleged abatement was giver, as was expressly stated, not in respect of any diluviation but in respect of resumption of lands, though it is a fact that the diluviation was mentioned in Mr. Risketts' letter. The lands so resumed in respect of which the alleged abatement was given are shown to the west of Keles's line. It is suggested that there may have been some diluviated land to the east of Kelso's line which had been lost previous to the making of his map. This hypothesis seems to be unfounded on the facts, for, if abatement had been given for diluvion as well as resump. tion that would have been stated in the final order of the Government of Bangal. Tas letter to the Board doss not so state but explicitly says that the abatement was given for the resumed lands. If this so, as we find it to be, it is immaterial whether there were any diluviations. What is important and relevant is to accertain the position of the resumed lands in respect of which, according to the letter we have mentioned, a reduction of revenue is alleged to have been given. These lands are shown to the west of Keleo's line and as the lands in suit are to the east of that line and to the west of the line of Rennell's map which (as later held) shows the eastern boundary of the Pargans, it follows that the lands in suit cannot be the lands in respect of which abatement, if there was any, was allowed, but are, if Rennell's line be the true eastern boundary, re. formations of land for which the plaintiffs have paid and are paying revenue. The question then whether there was or was not an abatement is in this view of the case immaterial. Whether Rennell's ligs is the eastern boundary of the Pargana depends on our finding as to whether the preceding desision of 1895 on this point is see ulionta, and, if not, whether the line of Rennell should be accepted as established on the evidence given in this suit.

Passing to the issue as to res judicata it is the case that the subject-matter of the suits is different but the identity of the property in the two suits is not necessary. What is contended is that the eastern boundary in 1793 of the Pargana in which the lands formerly and now in suit were and are is the eastern boundary as shown in Rennell's map. It is not contended that there is a res judicata upon the question whether Rennell's map was correctly laid in the map in the former suit all along the eastern boundary, that is, beyond Chur Dampier. A distinction must be drawn between the question whether the eastern boundary is that depicted in Rennell's map and whether that map was correctly laid in the previous suit beyond the astual boundary then in question. The eastern boundary had to be assertained before it could be found whether Chur Dampier was in the Pargana or not. It was necessary to decide the eastern boundary of the Pargana in the previous suit and the same has been found, it is said, to be necessary in the present case on the issue dealing with the merite, the bulk of the evidence dealing with the question whether Rennell's or Kelso's map should be taken to depict the eastern boundary. We think this contention is sound as also the argument that even if it were not necessary (which we think it was) the question of the eastern boundary was submitted for decision and decided. We have in the statement of facts fully set out those which bear on this point. It is the ease that there was no formal issue as to the eastern boundary of the Pargana but the whole history of the proceedings prior to the suit of 1895, the pleadings in that suit, the judgment and deerse show that the question which was agitated between the parties was whether the eastern boundary of the Pargana was the line of Rennell or of Kelso. This was the groundwork of the judgment. the latter it was stated that it was necessary for the purpose of the issues to find out what was the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement, that is, whether the spot on which Chur Dampier formed wa land or water at the time of the Permanent Settlement. How was the Judge

(we refer to the particular circumstances of this ease) to arrive at this conclusion but by assertaining the eastern boundary of the Pargana? The judgment further stated as follows : - "Both parties ask the Court to presume that the eastern boundary of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur as found in the maps upon which they respectively rely (that is Rennell and Kelso) existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. It was also stated that at the request of the plaintiff and with the consent of the defendant the Amin was directed not to go to the spot but to draw the lines of the several maps on the cadastral survey map so that the limits of Pargana Dakhin Sahabazpur may be easily ascertained." His report refers to the line of the Sahabazpur river according to the maps prepared by Rennell and Kelso and the testing of the correctness of Rennell's map. The Judge then fully examined the question whether Rennell's or Kelso's map should be accepted and the conclusion was "Rennell's map should be but guide in deciding the dispute." The decree, of course, is given directly only as regards the lands then in dispute but reference is there made to the boundary of Pargana Sababazpur. As regards this decision there was no appeal. From the order sheet it appears that in the petition of the defendant a map of the disputed land was directed to be kept with the record as part of the decree. In our opinion the only way whereby either in the past or present suit it was or is possible to decide whether the property in suit belongs to one party or the other is by settling the eastern boundary.

And, clearly, the eastern boundary could not be settled until the Judge had determined which boundary line he should accept that of Rennell's or that of Kelso's. Until this point had been determined not an inch of the boundary line could be ascertained.

The Subordinate Judge has held that from the extracts of the former judgment the finding of what was the eastern boundary of the Pargana—whether according to Rennell or Kelso—was the very first necessary step: then that line had to be relaid; and the third step was to ascertain the position of the land then in dispute in order to find out what portion of it, if any, was the Pargana land and what portion was navigable river at the time of the Permanant Settlement. He holds that the determination of whether Rennell's map shows the eastern boundary of the Pargana at the Permanent Settlement was really the foundation or the groundwork of the former judgment. In his opinion, it was impossible to find out the boundary line of Char Dampier without, first of all, determining whether Rennell's or Kelso's was the eastern boundary of the Pargana at the Permanent Settlement: that was the only means of finding this out; the eastern boundary had long been washed away and there was no landmark either in Ohor Dampier or elsewhere from which it could be ascertained and that in short, finding that Rennell's western the boundary was the eastern boundary of the Pargana at the time of the Permanent Settlement is eliminated from the judgment, there is nothing to sustain it. He assord. ingly finds that the decision of the former suit as regards the eastern boundary is res judicata and that that boundary was shown by Rennell's map. With this conelusion we agree.

It is further sontended and denied that the question of abatement is res judicata; that is, the Government cannot raise the question that there has been an abatement of revenue, seeing that in the Suit of 1895 it was expressly alleged by the respondents and not denied by the Secretary of State that the lands had been held without dedustion of revenue. The question, therefore, it is said, is constructive res judicata. This raises several questions of difficulty. It is not, however, necessary to deside them because, even if this question of abatement is not res sudicata as the appellant contends and even if there had been an abatement of rent in fact as he also contends, the question is not of practical importance seeing that the lands in respect of which abatement is alleged to have been given are, in our opinion, resumed lands shown in Kelso's map and these lie to the west of his line with the result that the lands in suit cannot be reformations of lands in respect of which the plaintiffs have been allowed the alleged abatement.

was correctly plotted in the former suit. In the Suit of 1895, the Amin prepared a map. In that suit, the Court deputed the Amin to compare Rennell's map, Kelso's map and others on the spot; but, at the request of the plaintiff, namely, the Government, and with the concent of the defendant's Vakil, the Amin was directed not to go to the spot but to draw the lines of the several maps (one of which was Rennell's) on the Cadastral Survey map so that the limits of the Pargana Sababazpur might be easily ascertained. The Amin accordingly prepared a map show. ing the limits, amongst others, according to Rennell. The learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out that this map was prepared in the presence of the representatives of the parties and was signed by the Kanungo deputed by the Government for the purpose. When this map was filed in Court, neither party objected that it was incorrect in any respect. The suit was disposed of accepting the map as correct and the whole line of Rennell war, without objection on the part of the Government, demareated upon the map annexed to the decree. In the plaint in the present suit reference is made in para. graph 13 to Rennell's map as being correctly drawn and in paragraph 22 it is alleged not only that the map was accurate, that is, represented the eastern line of the Pargana but that it had been correctly plotted in the previous Sait of 1895. Now, the Government in their written statement, whilst denying that Rennell's map was accurate, did not deny the allegation that, whether accurate or not, it had been correctly plotted in the suit of 1895. Then, the 5th issue raised in this suit is: "Are the plaintiffs entitled to all lands and churs to the west of the eastern boundary of Pargana Dakhin Sababasour as shown in the map annexed to the decree in Sait No. 10 of 1895 ?" The form of this issue, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, also indicates that up to the time when the issues were framed the defence did not dispute the correct plotting of the eastern boundary. No objection, he says, was taken to the form of this issue when the issues were reconsidered and a new issue was framed at the beginning of the trial. The question of the plotting of the map is further discussed in Order No. 104 of the order-sheet dated the 9th September 1918 where the arguments of both parties have PECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA U. ANNADA MOHAN ROY.

been given. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge who has held that this is not a mere matter of evidence but is an essential and material fact touching the title. He has held that the correctness of the plotting must be taken to be admitted by the defence, though at the trial an attempt was made to dispute it. It is true, as we have eaid, that the accuracy of Rennell's map was contested but not the question whether it was correctly plotted and we think that the argument raised in the suit on behalf of the Crown and also repeated before us that Rennell's map was incorrect implies also that it was incorrectly plotted is not sound. for, the two matters are entirely different. We are of opinion that there is no ground for reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge upon this point. We would add further that if there were any substance in this contention, one would have expected that the Government would have, during the two years which have clapsed since the date of the deeree, had a map prepared which would have shown whether or not Rennell's map had been correctly plotted or been prepared to show by expert evidence that it could not be re-laid. This could have been produced or stated and the Court might have been asked to allow evidence to be given to prove what the map to prepared showed or the evidence would prove. We do not say that such an application would necessarily have successful but, at any rate, it would have made the position of the appellant stronger than it now is; for, he is asking for a remand upon a fast which the learned Judge bas held must be taken to have been admitted and he is not even now in a position to show to us by a map prepared by an expert in what respect the previous plotting was erroneous. As it is thus established that the line of Rennell is the eastern boundary of the Pargana by virtue of the previous decision in the Suit of 1895 and as it must be taken that that boundary was correctly plotted in the map in the Suit of 1895, and as it is an admitted fact that the lands in suit lie to the west of that eastern boundary and to the east of Kelso's line, it follows that the lands in suit must be taken to be re-formations of land in respect of which the plaintiffs have been and are now paying Government revenue.

These findings dispose of the arreal but having regard to the fact that possibly our propose to deal also with the issue of the eastern boundary as a question of fact independent of the findings in the previous suit which we have held to be res judicita.

The preceding portion of the judgment was delivered on the 23rd May 1921, to which date the case was adjourned in order that we might determine whether we should go into the facts of the case in the event of its being found that the issue as to the eastern boundary was res judicata. On that day and about a month after, the appeal was first opened, a new objection was taken to the suit by the learned Advocate. General on the ground that as regards a portion of its subject matter it was barred by a special law of limitation, namely, section 24 of Regulation II of 1819. The portion of the suit said to be barred is that for land other than the two island churs taken possession of by Government to which a period of twelve years is applicable and as regards which, therefore, no question of limitation arises. In paragraph No. 18 of the plaint it is stated that the proprietors appealed to the Board of Revenue and the Board by its order dated the 9th March 1915 confirmed the proceedings of the Collector and rejected the appeal. Paragraph No. 3-A of the written statement runs as follows:-

"The suit is barred by limitation." In the issues framed on the let November 1916, the fourth issue is: "Is the suit barred by limitation?" New issues were framed on the 9th January 1917 and those issues did not ecutain any issue raising the ground of limitation. It is suggested on behalf of the appellant that this was due to the absence of the Government Pleader, a suggestion which it is said is supported by Order No. 13, in the order cheet, dated the 10th January 1917. However this may be, new issues were settled in lieu of those framed on the 1st November 1916; and amongst those issues there is no issue raising the when the Now. ground of limitation. bearing of the appeal is well through it is argued that the suit is barred as regards the land, other than the two island chure, because it was not brought within one year of the date of the ecommunication of the Board's order. The order of the Board is dated the 9th March 1915. It is alleged to bave been communicated to the respondents on the 12th April 1915 and the suit was brought more than a year after that date, that ie, on the 17th May 1916. For it has been held that in the case of a suit alleged to be barred under a special law of limitation, the party is not entitled to deduct, as the plaintiffs have attempted to do in this case, the period of two months for service of notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. This ground, as we have stated, is raised for the first time almost at the conclusion of the litigation. It is necessary that limitation should be pleaded in all sases. But particularly this is so where the bar is alleged under some special law. The general rule, we think, is that points of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where they involve a desision upon questions of fast. In this case a question of fact is involved, namely, whether or not the Board's order was communicated, if so, on what date and whether the persons who are alleged by Government to have received notice were authorized agents of the respondents for that purpose. In our opinion this objection which is not contained in the grounds of appeal should not be allowed to be taken at this stage. It is said that the fact that the case is barred sufficiently appears without necessity for remand on the evidence, though that evidence was not given on this issue. We do not think that points of limitation should be desided against the parties unless attention been drawn to the question of limitation and an opportunity given them to meet it on the evidence. Even if the objection could be taken, the evidence is not enflicient to support it. The evidence upon which the appellant relies is to be found in the record of the Daara Settlement proceedings from which it appears that notices were served on one Nabin Chandra Guha an am mukhtear on behalf of Ananda Chandra Roy on the 11th April 1915 and on Shyama Charge Chakravarty, Manager the of Court of Wards estate the 12th April 1915. Beyond these facts no others are given bearing upon this question of limitation. They are obviously insufficient. There was, for instance, no proof of the signatures of Nabin Chandra Guba or S. C. Chakravarty and it is not shown that the receipts which these persons are said to have signed are for a letter communicating notice of the Board's decision. Possibly this may be the fact, but we eannot, where limitation has not been rleaded and where no issue has been raised, make any assumptions. If limitation is orged as bar, the facts on which it is parred must be proved after an issue has been framed. As stated, there is no question as regards the two island churs to which admittedly limitation for the period of twelve years applies. The objection fails. Under the eirenmetances, it is not necessary to consider whether, if the point could be taken, section 24 of the Regulation has applicability to the present case.

We proceed now to determine on the facts and irrespective of the decision in the suit of 1895 what was the line of the eastern boundary of the plaintiffs' property at the time of the Permanent Settlement which includes the question whether Rennell's map may be taken as showing this. The question before us in its most simple form is this. The plaintiffs bave a permanently settled estate. There is no dispute as to the northern and southern boundaries and only in a secondary way as to the For, according to the plaintiffe, West. Western the boundary at the time of the Permanent Settlement was water: according to the appellant it was dry land, The primary question is as to eastern boundary. It is admitted that the western bank of river Sahabszpur was the eastern boundary of the respondents' estate. The question then is, what was the position of the river in 1789, the date of the Deeannial Settlement for the Permanent Settlement of 1793 is based upon the prior one. If the lands in suit are on the west of the river, they fall within the plaintiff's estate. The plaintiff contends that this is shown by Rennell's map, if it is to be accepted as admissible and accurate.

The onus is, of course, on the plaintiffs though once they have started their case so as to sufficiently raise an inference in their favour they may (as in fact they do) rely on the fact that evidence which if it is in the possession of any one is in the possession of the Government, is not produced.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA U. ANNADA MOHAN ROY.

The onus is sought to be discharged by means of Rennell's map and some Settlement reports and books of reference The ease in the main rests on the map. But we will first deal with objections taken to the reports.

The Settlement Reports are, it is argued, not evidence, and reliance is placed upon the decision in Garuradhwoja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (2), As regards Mr. Beveridge's history of the District of Bakargani, it was not referred to in the lower Court, and its use here is objected to on this ground. The mere fast that the book was not referred to, might not be, of itself, a good objection. If, however, the book was used to establish the existence of facts which the appellant had no opportunity of meeting and which he desired to rebut, the admission of the book now might involve a remand. cordingly, the claim to refer to this history was not pressed. As regards the Settlement Reports, it is to be observed that the appel lants' map (AA) was prepared (according to the evidence) on reference to Mr. Jack's Calendar. The case to which ference has been made does not support the exclusion of the reports here referred to and we think that they are evidence. If evidence, the appellant desires to make nie of them. As stated, the respondent does slaim the support of other evidence. but even if he did not the question whether the map is sufficient must depend on the facts of the particular case. Here they are pesuliar in that the whole case is bound up in the decision of the eastern boundary of the estate and that eastern boundary is a river the position of which was one of the purposes of Rennell's map to locate. So that when we know that the eastern boundary of the permanently settled estate was the western bank of the river and when we know what the position of that river was at the date of the Permanent Settlement we are in a position to decide the issue before us.

For the appellant it is next contended that the onus cannot be discharged by conclusions drawn from, practically, the map alone.

Major Rennell, the Director of Survey. made his celebrated maps between the years 1764 and 1773. It is stated that the map which is used in this case was made sometime after 1767. There is no need to disense the value of Rennell's map in respect of boundaries, location of villages and the like. Here Rennell's map is used for the purpose of ascertaining the position of a river. Whatever else may have been the purpose of their preparation that purpose undoubtedly included the delineation of roads and waterways, and, so their Lordships of the Privy Conneil in Haradas Achariya v. Secretary of State (3) adopted the position of the river therein question as shown in Rennell's mar.

Rennell's map, however, was not contemporaneous with the Permanent Settlement, It was made some 22 years or so before the Decennial Settlement on which the Permanent Settlement proceeded. On this ground, therefore, the appellants object that it cannot be evidence of a state of things a considerable number of years after its date. If they are right on this then the suit on the facts must fail for the only evidence is Rennell's map. There is no sontemporaneous map and subsequent maps are no evidence of the previously existing state of things. The respondents in reply invoke the presumption of continuity. This is a presumption which varies with the circumstances of the case and is applicable to things which are continuous in their nature. If they are that, then the Court may presume that they continue in the state in which they were last known in the absence of evidence to the contrary. It may be said (as it is in fact argued here) that a river such as the Meghna is not continuous in its nature but continually variable. Reliance is placed in this connection on the observations in the order of Mr. Strong, the Collector, in a proceeding under section 76 of Act IX of 1847 that the Island Dakhin Sahabazpur is notoriously subject to diluvion and alluvion and that in the period which elapsed between Rennell's Survey and the

Permanent Settlement half the Island might bave been diluviated and have re-formed in the shape of new island churs. And in the order of the Board of Revenue it is stated that: "Rennell's survey was made more than 20 years before the Decennial Settlement and in a tract such as this, which is situated on the Bakarganj littoral and is subject to violent fluvial and tidal action it furnishes no safe indication of the actual position of Morzahe at the time of the Decennial Settle. ment." In the judgment in the 1895 suit, the learned Judge stated, "that from time immemorial the Meghna has been continually diluviating its right bank along the eastern boundary of Dakhin Sahabazpur Pargana and that a considerable portion of it is now under water."

In a petition filed by the manager of the Court of Wards to the Deputy Collector it is stated that the petitioner was surprised and alarmed that the Revenue Authorities were making attempts to assess all the lands ontside the Revenue Survey lines although up till then it had been admitted by the Government that a considerable portion of the Zamindaris Nos. 1763 and 1764 permavently settled in 1793 had been washed away by the Dakhin Sahabazpur river before the Revenue Survey was made. With the exception of the last-mentioned petition the other statements are strictly not evidence in the case on this point. As regards the jadgment in the 1.95 suit it is either res judicata as we have held, in which case the present question need not any longer be disenseed, or if it was not res judicata the observations of the learned Judge are not evidence. No attempt was made in the lower Court to call evidence on the subject of the variability of this river. We have, however, the fact that resumption proceedings did take place in the years 1840 to 1847, with reference to diluvious referred to in Mr. Rickett's letter dated the 30th November 1848. Further, there are the proceedings as regards Hassan Tajuddin and Dampier Churs.

The respondents admitted that there was diluviation on the east of the Pargana after the date of the Permanent Settlement and some changes on the western side of the Paragana prior to that date. On the other hand, it is submitted that, so far as the evidence before us shows, no claim was made or proceedings taken as a consequence of changes in the river prior to the resumptions sommensed in 1840 and continued until 1847 after which in the year 1248, survey of such resumptions was ordered. Part of the land was in possession of the Salt Department, and if there had been loss of land by flavial action the Salt Department might have claimed an abatement of rent; but they did not do so. Moreover, it is said that if there he any evidence of what occurred between the date of Rennell's map and the Permanent Settlement, such evidence must be in the possession of Government but it has not been produced. and that, therefore, we are entitled to assume that Rennell's map in a sufficient and substantial way indicate the position of things at the date of the Permanent Settlement.

The question is one which is not without difficulty. The facts establish that between tha date of Rennell's map and the Permanent Settlement there were considerable changes on the western side of the Pargana in the form of silting up. In fact, such silting up is relied on by the respondents to explain certain facts which the appellants put forward to show the inaccuracy of Rennell's map. It is also sommon ground that there has been extensive diluvion on the east after the date of the Permanent Settlement. If we are to consider both these facts it may be argued that they dispose of any presumption of continuity. But the question here is a narrower one, namely, the position of the eastern bonndary line. Are we to presume that that remained unchanged from the date of Rennell's map until that of the Permanent Settlement ? The only evidence on this point is as to a period subsequent to the Permanent Settlement. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary as to the state of affairs between the date of Rennell's map and the Permanent Settlement, we think we should assume that on the eastern side Rennell's map may be taken to represent the state of things there at the time of the Permanent Settlement In fast it seems established that it is since that time that a strong drift of the river towards the west with diluvion of the eastern boundary has been observed. Whether Rennell's map is otherwise good evidence and accurate is of course another question with which we deal later. All that we now hold on this point is that the map is not exeluded on the ground that it is not contemporaneous with the Permanent Settlement because, as regards the eastern side of the Pargana, with which we are almost directly encerned, the state of things appearing in Rennell's map may be deemed to have continued until the Permanent Settlement. Whilst it appears to be the fact that changes did meanwhile take place on the western side this is not inconsistent with the eastern boundary having remained during the same period substantially unchanged. There is perhaps the less chance of error in this case that is of giving the plaintiff; more land than that to which they are entitled because it is admitted that the river has been diluviating his estate on the east since the Permanent Settlement, and as to the anterior period ap to the date of Rennell's map either we must assame that things remained as they were, or if not it is natural to empose that the admitted and constant nature of the dilavion after the Permanent Sattlement is an index of the nature of the dilavion in the anterior period mentioned. If, then, we may refer to Rennell's map as evidense, there is a presumption of its assarasy under section 83 of the Evidence Act in respect of such matters as to which it is admissible evidence. Under that section the Court shall presume that maps or plans purporting to be made by the authority of Government were so made, and are accurate." It is thus not necessary to refer to or to rely upon statements made in this suit or in the Suit of 1895 as to the value, and, therefore, assuracy of Rennell's maps for the purposes for which they were prepared; namely, amongst othere, the delineation of rivers and other water. ways. It is for the appellant in this ease to rebut the presumption of accuracy of the map in relation to the fasts of this particular case, and this be bas, in fact, attempted to do.

Rennell's map is admissible in evidence of the state of things at the Permanent Settlement. But if this is done, it will be assumed to be accurate unless the contrary is shown by the respondents. Before dealing with his criticism on the assuracy of Rennell's map we will first refer to another matter.

An objection was taken that the may on which the Amin worked in the previous case as Rennell's map has not been produced and that it is not shown to be Rennell's map. There does not appear to be any ground of appeal on this head. Paragraph 60 of the memorandum of appeal to which we have been referred, deals with another matter, namely, "that no decree should have been granted to the plaintiffs on the basis of Rennell's map alone seeing that Rennell's map was never compared with local conditions and never checked by measurement in the locality by any surveyor whether of experience or otherwise." That is not the point raised by this objection. The point here is that the map (Exhibit No. 23) is inadmissible, and indeed irrelevant, because it has not been shown that it was made with reference to Ronnell's map. It is true that objection was taken to the admission of this map in the lower Court but not on the ground which is here urged. No sush ground ear, in our opinion, be urged now; for if such objection had been taken in the lower Court, the plaintiffs might have met it by re-platting the borndaries with reference to a cory of Repnell's map as to which there could be no dispute. It is true that the plaintiffs contended that the correstness of the plotting in the previous suit was admitted and should not be gone into again. But if the objection had been taken then, which is taken before us now, to the admission of the map (Exhibit 23) and such objection had been decided against the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs might have asked to re plot the boundaries with reference to some admitted copy of Rennell's map. Moreover, the admission that the plotting in the previous suit was correct, assumes that Exhibit No. 23 which shows such plotting, was made with refereree to Rennell's map. Otherwise, the plotting would not be correct. In fact, this objection is only another form of that with which we have already dealt, vis., the correstness of the plotting of Renneli's line in the map of the previous suit. The Amin also says that he was given a copy of There does not appear, Rennell's map. therefore, to be any substance in the contention that the Amin in the previous suit proceeded upon the basis of some map other than Rennell's or that, at any rate, it had not been shown that the map on which he did proceed was Rennell's map.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA U. ANNADA YOMAN EOT.

We hold that the Amin did work with reference to Rannell's map.

We next deal with the grounds which have been put forward to rebut the presumption of accuracy of Rennell's map assuming it to be admissible.

The appellant contends, in the first place, that Rennell made a mistake of some 5 feet 45 inches in the longitude of Fort William Semaphore Station, Calcutta, the starting roint of his survey, and hence argues that the map as re-laid by the Amin in 1895 must be some 6 miles too far to the east. It ie, however, quite immaterial in the present ease whether Rennell did or did not know the correct longitude of the Samaphore Station for Rennell has taken the Semaphore Station as zero and has calculated his longitudes from the Semaphore Station treating the station as zero. If we want to discover the longitude of any point on Repnell's map when referred to Greenwich all we have to do is to add the correst longitude of the Semaphore Station, to the longitude given by Rennell's.

What the Amin did was to enlarge Rennell's map to the same scale as the

He then superimposed the map on the Survey Map. This is quite easy as he knew what was the correct longitude of Rennell's starting point.

The main difficulty in re laying Rennell's map has been the determination of the starting point. This has been determined by the Survey Department to be Sama-phore Station.

It is quite easy to find the corresponding longitude of any place given in Rennell's map on the survey map by adding to the longitude of the place on Rennell's map the correct longitude of the Semaphore Station. The Amin who re-laid the map knew the correst longitude of the Semaphore Station as given in the survey map. What was important and absolutely necessary was to know the point from which Rennell started and the longitude of the point. It is immaterial once the point has been discovered that Rennell gave it an incorrect longitude for Rennell treated it as his asro. Rennell's error in the longitude of his starting point (the Semaphore Station) would only be of importance in determining what the starting point was,

Secondly, the appellants contend that Rennell himself never surveyed the island of Dakhin Sahabezpur but that it was surveyed by Richie. His contention is based on the fact that no mention is made of the survey of Dakhin Sahabezpur in Rennell's diary and also on the opinion of Major Hirst. But we have only got Rennell's diary up to 1767. It is possible that either be discontinued writing his diary or it has been lost, for his survey was continued up to 1773.

Moreover, it is really immaterial whether Rennell or Richie made the survey, for the presumption of accuracy under section &3 arises from the fact that the maps are made under the orders of Government and not that they were made by Rennell. Further, Rennell apparently supervised and corrected Richie's work.

We pass to Dr. Mitter's third argument to show that Rennell's map is inaccurate.

Rennell's map shows the western boundary of Dakhin Sahabezpur to be water. we re-lay Rennell's map on the present survey map we shall find that the western boundary is dry land and that there are permanently settled estates to the west of Dakbin Sahabazpur and immediately contiguous to it. These permanently settled estates must have been, therefore, part of the original island of Dakhin Sahabazpur at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Therefore, the island of Sahabazpur must he placed further to the west so that the western boundary coincides with what is the western boundary of the island of Sababaspur. Rennell had placed the island too far to the east.

The respondent contende, on the other hand, that the island was correctly placed by Rennell. That there are a number of islands shown by Rennell on west of Dakbin Sababazpur and that by accretion these islands have been joined together and now form solid land contiguous to Dakhin Sahabazpur island and the river Betua which is the western boundary of Dakhin Sahabezpur bas been growing smaller and smaller through silting up. He shows from Kelso's maps that even in 1840 the Betua was a big river perhaps two or three miles broad while now it is a narrow stream. That all the lands immediately to the west of the Betus as it of Rennell and that they were not permanently settled estate at the time of the Permanent Settlement. Even if at the time of the Permanent Settlement the western boundary of Pargana Sahabazpur was dry land that would not prove it was dry land when Rennell made his survey. The appellant, to show that the western boundary of the Pargana at the time of the Permanent Settlement was land and not water contends that two permanently settled estates were then actually contiguous to Dakhin Sahabazpur, viz., North Sahabazpur and Kristodaspur.

To prove that these two estates North Sahabazpur and Kristodaspur were contiguous to South Sahabazpur at the time of the Permanent Settlement he has relied on certain quinquennial returns filed by the Zemindar in 1802 which give, according to him, the list of the Kismats, etc., which formed the permanently settled estate in 1793 and more specially on the entries of Kismats Deguti, Gormani and Kathali to show that North Sahabazpur was contiguous in 1793.

The eastern boundary of one of these, viz., of Chur Gurmani, alone is given as Dakhin Sahabazpur. The importance of the others is to show the position of Chur Gurmani. This Gurmani is shown as a Chur and no revenue is assessed on it.

But this evidence does not put the case very high. At the highest, it would show that the Zemindar of North Sahabazpur claimed in 1802 as part of their permanently settled estate this Chur Gurmani. It would not prove necessarily that Chur Gurmani was in existence in 1793. That would only be proved by the papers of 1793. In 9 years many churs may have formed or disappeared.

Moreover, even assuming that Chur Gurmani was in existence iin 1793 and so that there was dry land contiguous to South Sahabazpur on its western boundary, that would not prove that Rennell in 1767 had not depicted correctly the then state of affairs. It is quite possible that subsequent to Rennell's Survey the islands shown by him on the west of Dakhin Sahabazpur became joined up together and joined up with Dakhin Sahabzpur. Thus it is quite possible that at the time of the Permanent Settlement the Western boundary of Dakhin Sahabazour Was no longer water but land. Bat there is nothing to show how much was water and how much land. Ohur Gurmani might be merely a small chur which temporarily connected Dakhin Sahabazpur with other estates That obviously would not of itself show that Rennell had incorrectly placed the island of Sahabazpur in 1767 or that the east. ern boundary of the island had changed between the time that Rennell depicted it and the Permanent Sattlement. We are not entitled to assume that because land had formed on the western boundary between Rennell's survey and the Permanent Settlement that land had diluvated from the eastern boundary, The same arguments apply to Churs Pata. Bedaralla, Subbi and Khalifa which plaintiffs included in their estate of Dakhin Sahabazpur at the time of the Permanent Settlement and which the appellant alleges are west of Rennell's line. They are possibly accretion to the island and may well have formed bet ween Rainell's Survey and the Permanent Settlement.

A glance at the map would show that most of the land west of Rannell's western line is chur. Some lands which appear to be of a more or less permanent nature correspond roughly with some of Rennell's islands which fact would go to show the correctness of his survey.

The appellant then argues that eartain four Churs Sibpur, Bedar, Medaphar and Sibsankar were resumed by Government in 1840, that these churs lie well to the west of the present line which the plaintiff claims as his boundary and so the appellant argues that the plaintiff by that admitted that the boundary line was Kelso's line. He would seem to contend that the plaintiff knew then where the boundary line really was as witnesses who had been alive at the time of the Permanent Settlement were then available.

It appears that in two cases Madaphar and Sibsankar the plaintiff did appeal to the Commissioner unsuccessfully. In the other two cases he did not contest them. No suit was brought to set aside the desision.

But the condust of the plaintiff proves little or nothing. It may well be that he had no material at his command then to prove where the boundary was. As far as can be seen

KOLHU C. BELSINGH.

Rennell's map, were not discovered till many years later. Moreover, these lands apparently formed part of the land that had been in the occupation of the Salt Department. It is quite possible that the Zemindar did not think it worth while to spend any money fighting the point with Government. Then it is to be remembered that, with regard to these resumed lands as they were called and revenue payable, the Zemindar was in communication with the Revenue Authorities and withheld payment of the sum of Rs. 13,000 formerly debited to the Salt Department with the result that the Government took action as stated in the letter of Mr. Rickett by subsequent correpondence to which we have referred. At this distance of time it is not possible to determine exactly what were the facts. We do not think that those above stated can be construed into an admission by the Zemindar that he knew quite well that the boundary line lay to the west of these churs. Farthermore, it must be remembered that until the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Lopes v. Muddun Mohun Thakocr (4) it had always been held that land reformed in situ belongs not to the Zemindar but the Government. It was Lopet's case (4) which set the point at rest.

Fifthly, the appellant has contended that certain villages, for instance, Colya, Govin dapur, Mendigange, are shown in Rennell's map and are now found to be at some miles distance. This we do not think is of much importance. In the first place, the object of Rennell's Survey was not the villages but the rivers and waterways, and he would not be very particular as to the exact site of the villages. Secondly, the villages from the nature of the country often shift. Thirdly, these villages are often long straggling villages and it is not possible to say what part of the village Rennell took for the dot which represents the village.

To sum up, we do not think that the appellant has succeeded in proving that Rennell's map incorrectly depicted the position of the island of Dakhin Sahabazpur in 1767 or that in 17.3 there was any change in the eastern boundary of the island from what it was in 1767.

We are of opinion that the appellant has not established sufficient grounds for a reversal of the decision now under appeal and we accordingly dismiss his appeal with costs.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 237 OF 1919.

September 11, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. O.

KOLHU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

APPELLANTS

versus

BELSINGH-PLAINTIFF- RESPONDENT.

Custom-tionds of Bhagi in Bhandra District-Guardianship of minor's property-Step-brother or mother-Rule of decision in absence of custom,

As regards guardianship, the Raj Gond family of Zemindars of the Shikmi Zemindari of Bhagi in the Bhandra District is not governed by the Hindu Law, and, in the absence of proof of any custom, a question of guardianship in that family must be decided according to justice, equity and good conscience. [p. O, col 1.]

Where certain minors of a Gond family with their mother are living jointly with their step-brother, who manages the whole estate, and is regarded by the family and all the world as the natural and rightful guardian of the minor's property, he must, according to equity and justice, be treated to be, as against the mother, a guardian both defacto and dejure, more so if the personal law of practically the whole population amidst which the family resides recognises a step-brother as the natural and rightful guardian in presence of the mother. [p. 309, col. 1.]

Appeal from appellate decree against a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 15th April 1919, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Bhandara, dated the 10th October 1918.

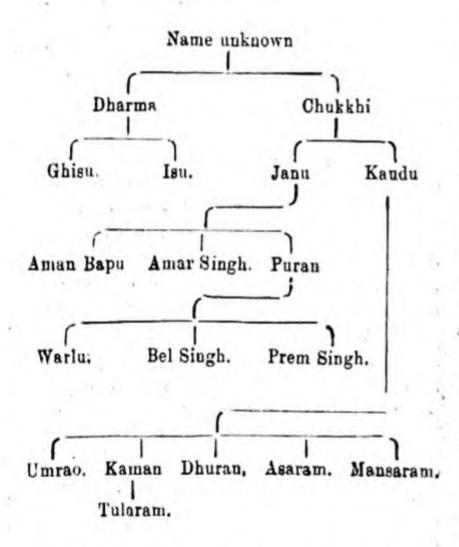

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants,

JUDGMENT.-It seems advisable to clear the ground by mentioning first inassurasy with which the extent of the various shares is described in this case. The system of annas and pies is convenient up to a certain limit, but the uneducated Indian mind is incapable of grasping the idea of anything less than a quarter of a pie, and in many cases cannot get beyond the idea of a pie. That, however, is no reason why the Court should be guilty of inassu. racies which might result in substantial injustice on further sub division of the shares so improperly described. Here we are at times dealing with a share of one-twentieth which in the anna pie notation should be represented by 9.3/5 pies, but almost invariably this is called 9\frac{1}{4} pies. So also the share that is really 2 annas and 1.3/5 pies in that system of notation is always called 2 annas and 1\frac{1}{4} pies. In this case it will be more convenient to refer to shares in terms of vulgar fractions.

2. This appeal arises out of one of a number of suits filed by the three junior members of the Raj Gond family of Zemindars of the Shikmi Zemindari of Bhagi in the Bhandara District. The following genealogical table of the family will assist comprehension of the facts:—

3. The Zemindari consisted originally of 12 villages. Ghisu and Isu alienated their half share in the two villages of Nakti and Megardhokra many years ago, and the half share in those two villages is no longer a part of the Zemindari. In 1895 they mortgaged their half share in the remaining ten villages to one Ramdayal Mawari of Dongargarb. He eventually sued them on the mortgage and obtained possession of their whole estate, the half share in the ten villages, in 1901. In 1905 the Zemindari, therefore, consisted of a half share in each of the 12 villages originally comprised in it. Aman, Paran and Umrao being dead, a quarter of this property belonged to Aman Bapu, another quarter to the three sons of Paran and the remaining half to the four surviving sons of Kaudu. It is admitted that, according to the personal law governing Raj Gonde, a son has no vested interest in the family property during his father's life, so that Tularam was excluded by his father Kaman. He tried to get over this difficulty by the statement that he was the son of Umrao who was then dead, but the entire falsity of this has been established and is now admitted.

In December 1904 some of the members of the family applied for assistance to R. B. Anantlal, Extra-Assistant Commissioner, who was in charge of the Debt Conciliation Board, certain arbitrators deputed by the Government who were formally appointed by the parties in each case and acted as a sort of informal Bankruptey Court to deal with argicultural indebtedness after the famine. Exhaustive enquiries were made, and no effort seems to have been spared to get good terms from the ereditors of the family and to resens it from the slough of insolvency into which it had fallen and set it on its feet. Ramdayal Marwari was indused to reconvey his half share in the ten villages in consideration of getting the whole of the village of Sirpur and Rs. 6,380. The amount of the desree under which he had forcelosed the half share in the ten villages was Rs. 6,313 and he also gave up his slaims under a decree for Rs. 1,155 and various bonds for Rs. 2,050 against Ghisu, together with established claims for Rs. 2,422 against Aman Bapu and the sons of Puran and for Rs. 488 against the sons of Kaudu.

5. Apart from these debts, the total amount due from the family was found to be Rs. 7,944 together with a sum of about Rs. 3,000 due for land revenue to the superior proprietor. In lieu of this the ereditors were induced to accept reduced sums aggregating only Rs. 3,465. Of this total debt of close on Rs. 11,000, the amount due by Aman Bapu and the three sons of Puran seems to have been not less than Rs. 7,000. In addition there was the Rs. 2,422, their share of debt wiped off under the Sirpur arrangement. We are now concerned in this appeal.

KOLHU U. BELSINGH.

only with Bel Singh and Prem Singh, the two younger sens of Puran, and the share of the total debt falling on their shoulders would be Rs. 3,140,

6. The money required for the payment of all these debts was proposed to be raised by a sale of the whole village of Toya Gondi (exclusive of the right to minor forest produce for the next 15 years) for Re. 3,325 and of the whole village of Bharregaon (with a reservation of right to collect Harra and gum) for Rs. 4,000, and a lease of the minor forest preduce of all ten villages for 15 At the same for Rs. 45,000. time, R. B. Anantlal worked out a scheme for the re-construction of the Zemindari which was then divided into inconveniently small shares among eight or nine people of whom he said that "most of them are a bad lot, addisted to drinking," to prevent the imminent extinction of the Zemindari, He proposed to leave at its head Aman Bapo, who was, in his opinion, the "only sensible person among the lot" as well as the head of the family. The proposal was that the sons of Kaudu should take the whole village of Salai in lieu of their share, and the three sons of Poran should similarly take the whole village of Bhagi, exclusive of the right to minor forest produce other than Mahua in lieu of theirs, and that the remainder of the Zemindari should be handed over to Aman Вари.

7. These proposals were examined by the Deputy Commissioner of Bhandars, the Commissioner of Nagpur and the Chief Commissioner, and were sanctioned. Six documents were executed on the 6th, 7th and 5th of May 1965 to give effect to this scheme. These were.—

(1) Sale deeds of Bharregaon in favour of Kolhu Mahajan, and of Toya Gondi in favour of Jaikishan Marwari, and of half of Sirpur in favour of the son of Ramdayal Marwari, executed by Aman Bapu, by the sons of Kaudu and by Warlu for himself and as guardian of his two younger brothers.

(2) A lease of the forest produce of all the villages in the Zemirdari for 15 years in favour of Jaikishan Marwari, executed by Aman Bapu alone.

(3) What are called "Farkat nama" or partition deeds in favour of Aman Bapu, one executed by the sons of Kaudu relinquishing their share in the property and taking the whole village of Salai instead, the other executed by Warla for himself and as grardian of his two younger brothers similarly relinquishing their share in the Zemindari and taking the whole village of Bhagi in exchange.

There was, presumably, also a transfer by Jagannath, son of Ramdayal Marwari, of the half share in the ten villages which he was then holding under his foreelosure decrea, but this has not been filed in any of the cases with which we are now dealing. There are two later transfers with which we are also concerned. On the 7th of February 1908 Aman Bapu sold the whole of the village of Rajimdongri to Nev Pawar and his three brothers, and on the 23rd of January 1909 he sold the remaining half share of Nakti to Tukaram and Sarwan Pawar.

8. The seven suits out of which these appeals arise were filed by Tularam, son of Kaman, and the two younger sons of Puran, Bel Singh and Prem Singh, on the 3rd and 7th of June 1917, in the Courts of the Subordinate Judge and the First Munsif of Bhandara. The plaintiffs sought to set aside every one of the eight documents mentioned above on the ground that the documents were executed while they were minors and were not for their benefit and that they were not properly represented by their guardians. One suit was against Aman Bapu and the other co-sharers for concella. tion of the two "Farkat nama" and this was decreed through obvious collusion between the parties. In the other six suits for the eancellation of the other six documents a part of Tularam's slaim was dismissed in the First Court and the rest in the lower Appellate Court and he has not appealed. We are, therefore, now concerned only with the claims of Bel Singh and Prem Singh. The former was born in 1889 and the latter in 1891, so that they were 16 and 14 years of age in 1905 and attained majority in 1907 and 1909 respectively. (I may remark! here that, in assordance with the very common but somewhat incomprehensible custom among Indian litigants, the filing of the suits was delayed to the last possible moment. They were filed in the last week of the twelfth year after Tularam admittedly attained majority, though he has been held to have done so before May 1905, and just over twelve years from the execution of the deeds).

9. The desisions of the learned District Judge as regards Bel Singh and Prem Singh in the consolidated appeals in his Court may be summarised as follows. In 1905 their brother, Warla, was their actual guardian but their legal guardain was their mother who was alive then. Unless legal necessity for them could be estab. lished the transfers of the minors' property were, therefore, absolutely void and neither Article 44 nor Article 91 of the Limitation Act would apply to their claim, as was held by this Court in Husen v. Rajaram (1). Proof of legal necessity might validate a transfer made by a person who was guardian de facto and not de jure, but in this case no legal necessity or benefit to the minors has been established. The period of limitation for the suits is that laid down in Article 144 of the Limitation Act, and they are all filed within twelve years of the attainment of majority by the two plaintiffs, Bel Singh and Prem Singh.

10. There has been no appeal against the decision in regard to the lagal necessity and the benefit of the minors, but the question will re-pay examination. It is not difficult to compare the position of the two minors before and after the composition with the ereditors of the family and the re-construction of the family estate. Their position before was that they owned a twelfth share in the twelve villages with a total area of 18,826 agres, a total sir area of 413'75 agres and a total assessment of Rs. 1,610. If we leave out of consideration the very great advantages of compactness, that may be taken as equivalent to a single village with a total area of 1,569 acres, a sir area of 34'43 acres and an assessment of Rs. 134, and on this property was a debt of which the share of these two minors was just over Rs. 3,000. In lieu of this, they got a twothirds share in the village of Bhagi which has a total area of 1,917 acres, includes 39 93 acres of sir and pays Rs. 100 as land revenue so that the two-thirds share represents a total area of 1,278 acres, a sir area of 26'62 and an assessment of Rs. 66-10-8. value of this is reduced by the pravious sale of the right to collect minor forest produce for fifteen years, but the price paid for that was Rs. 4,500 for all the ten villages and its value for Bhagi alone is certainly not more than Rs. 450 and is very probably much less, as it is the prineipal village of the Zemindari and the residence of the family with a considerable sir area, and is, therefore, almost certainly among the less "Jungly" villages. The facts are insufficient for the formation of any final opinion, but it seems to me, leaving the debts out of consideration, that the value of a share in one village representing 1,278 acres with 26.52 acres of sir and an assessment of Rs. 66-10-8 minus something less than Rs. 450 is itself greater than that of shares in twelve different villages representing 1,569 acres with 31.48 acres of sir and an assessment of Rs. 134.

But the fact that the whole of the debts due by the minors were eleared off puts it beyond all doubt that the arrangement was very much for their benefit. In paragraph 37 of his judgment the learned District Judge has arrived at the conclusion that the share of the debt for which Bel Singh and Prem Singh were liable jointly with their half brother Warlu and their uncle Aman, was only Rs. 1,550. Even then, they were liable for half of this, that is, Rs. 775. But the learned Judge has taken the whole debt to be the amount to which it was reduced by the negotiations and transfers by which the estate was re-constructed, though that reduction is clearly a part of the benefit they received. He has further excluded from the debts due by this branch of the family the sum of Rs. 6,380 which was a part of the consideration for the repurchase from Ramdayal Marwari of the half share in the ten villages originally belong. ing to Ghisu and Isu, on the ground that it was a debt due by Ghisu and Isu. The arrangement, however, did wipe off a debt of Rs. 2,422 which lay on Aman Bapu and the sons of Paran, as has been shown in paragraph 5 above, and this amount must be taken into consideration in comparing the situation of the minors before and after the transfers. Some debts due by Ghisq and Isu were included in the general com position with the oreditors of the whole family, but they have been omitted in my calculations of the burden on the rest of the family, and it is quite clear that the amount fairly debitable to Bel Singh and Prem Singh out of the debts due before the reconstruction of the Zemindari, was just over Rs. 3,000. The result of all this is, that in place of shares scattered over twelve villages representing 1,569 agres with 34.48 acres of sir and an assessment of Rs. 134, combined with a debt of Rs. 3,140, the minors got a compact chare in one village representing 1,278 acres with 26.62 acres of sir and an assessment of Rs. 6:-108 com bined with the equivalent of a debt of R3. 450.

12. It seems equally beyond doubt that the defendants in these suits were transferees in good faith for value. They knew that the transfers had all been examined by the Daputy Commissioner of the district, the Commissioner of the Division and the Chief Commissioner of the Provinces, and approved by them all. It is to be noted also that the plaintiffs have never said a word about giving back any of the benefits they have ressived under the arrangements they repudiate. On the contrary, in addition to the shares they say ought not to have been taken from them, they slaim the mesne profits of those shares for three years with interest thereon. For the transferees it was pleaded that before the plaintiffs could get back their twelfth share in the other villages they ought to give back the eleven-twelfthe of Bhagi which they got in exchange, with mesne profits, and ought also to compansate the transferees of the other villages for the improvements they had made in them. Their only reply was to deny that any improvements had been made in the other villages or that they were liable to pay for them if they had, These matters have not, however, been raised in the appeals in this Court and nothing more need be said about them.

13. The one question for decision, on which I think the appeals must succeed, is whether the minors were properly represented by their elder brother Warlu in the various transfers that are impeached. The learned District Judge discusses this matter in paragraphs 33 and 34 of his judgment, which are as follows:—

"Plaintiffs are Gonds and it has been held by Stanyon, A. J. C., that Gonds are not governed by Hindu Law Uityara v. Tilo. chan (2). Defendants have alleged that Gonds in this tract have adopted Hindu proof has been addueed but no to substantiate this allegation. I must, therefore, hold that plaintiffs are not governed by Hindu Law. They may be governed by their own sustom or by the Saccession Act. No proof has been adduced to show what enstoms prevail amongst them in regard to inheritance and guardianship. Under these circumstances, under section 6 of the Central Provinces Laws Act, the Court in desiding questions of inheritance, guardianship, etc., has to act according to justice, equity and good conssience. According to justice and equity and assording to all systems of jurisprudence, father is the natural guardian of his minor shildren, and on his death the right of guardianship devolves on the mother of the minors. In the present case, admittedly, the mother of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 was alive and was living with Aman Bapu, Warla Bapa and her sons when the transfers in question took place. She was the de jure guardian of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, but she did not represent plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in the transaction Aman Bapu, unele of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, and Warlu Bapu, step-brother of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, were the defacto and not the de ure gurdians of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 and one of them, vit, Warlu Bapu, represented plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 as their gardian in the several transfers in question.

"Thus, so far as plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are conserned, we have to deal with transfers made on their behalf by their de facto guardian and not by their de jure guardian. I shall later on show that the transfers in question are not for legal necessity and are not binding on plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. That being so, the transfers are wholly void and Article 41 of the Limitation Ast has no application? In the case of Husen v. Rajaram (1) the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has held that an alienation of the property of a minor by a person who is that minor's guardian de facto but not de jure, is not merely voidable but absolutely void and that Articles 44 and 91 of the Limitation Act do not apply to a suit brought by him on his attaining majority to recover possession of the alienated property; [cf. also Vithu v. Deridas (3) '. The transfer in such a case is either valid or void. If it is valid, i, e, when it is effected for legal recessity, it is binding on the minor; if it is void, as it is when it is effected without legal necessity by a person who is not a de jure but a de facto guardian of the minor, it is wholly unnecessary to sue to set it aside. suit is necessary to set aside a transfer which is voidable but not void such as a transfer by a de ;ure guardian without legal necessity. The transfers in question having been effected by a de facto guardian without legal necessity, it was not necessary to sue to have them set aside within three years from the date on plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 attained whish majority. The suits are governed by Article 144 of the Limitation Act and as they have all been brought within 12 years from the date of the transfer, they are clearly not barred by limitation."

14. It has been held by this Court in the case mentioned, which is Ujiyara Tilochan (2), that a Gond is not a Hindu and the onus of proving that a Gond family has accepted the Hindu Law and is governed by it rests on the party alleging it. The matter is by no means free from doubt, and the question is raised in the retitions of appeal here. It appears, however, that in the pleadings in the First Court it was admitted by both parties that, except in a few matters with which we are not now concerned, the plaintiffs are not governed by the Hindu Law, and the position now taken by the appellants was abandoned. The view, therefore, that in the absence of proof of any special custom the question of guardianship must in this case be decided according to justice, equity and good conscience is perfectly sound. Where the learned District Judge has erred is in the assumption that "asserdir g to justice and equity and according to all eyetems of jurisprudence" the mother is the natural guardian after the father, being led into the error by not baying a very elear distinction in his mind between a guardian for the property and a grardian of the person. We are here conserned with a guardian for the property only, and in neither of the two main systems of personal law with which we have to deal most frequently in India does the mother of a minor become his guardian in respect of his property next after his father. In both Hindu and Muhammadan Law the mother becomes the guardian of the person of her infant shild after the death of the father, but his property would still remain under the management of the karta of the joint family of which he was a member if he were a Hindu, and in Muhammadan Law the mother, being a "remote guardian," would only come in after the "near guardians," which term includes the father's executors. the paternal grandfather, his executors and the executors of such executors, in addition to the father.

15. Turning to one other system of jurisprudence, the English Common Law, we find that there, too, the mother does not necessarily follow the father as custodian of a minor's property, that in fact after the father there is nobody who can be said to be entitled to be such custodian or called a guardian of the property de jure, except in the case of daughters. In Chapter XVII of Blackstone's Commentaries (Book I) the learned author says:—

Of the several species of guardians, the first are guardians by nature, viz, the father and (in some cases) the mother of the child. For, if an estate be left to an infant, the father is by Common Law the guardian, and must ascount to his child for the profits. And, with regard to daughters, it seems by construction of the Statute 4 and 5 PH. and MAR. C. 8 that the father might by deed or Will assign a guardian to any woman child under the age of sixteen; and if none be so assigned, the mother shall in this case be guardian. There are also guardians for nurture; which are, of course, the father or mother, till the infant attains the age of fourteen years."

This point is made even elearer in the following passage from Stephen's Commentaries (Volume II, Book III, page 457):—

"The different Species of Guardians -The guardianships recognised by our law are of the following varieties: -

"(1) Guardianship by nature.—This is said to belong to the father in respect of the person of his heir apparent, or of his heiress presumptive; there being, properly speaking, no other kind of guardianship by nature than this. And the term 'natural guardian," as applied to the father or mother with reference to all their children, is rather a popular than a technical mode of expression. For when a father's right to the person of a child who is not his heirapparent is intended, his guardianship is properly that next to be noticed [Co. Litt. 83 b. And see Hargrave's Notes, 11, 12 (18th Edition); Rateliff's case (1593) 3 Reg. 38 b]. It has been doubted whether, since the abolition of tenures in chivalry, guardianship by nature can exist at all, in the strict sense of the term: (Maspherson, Infants, page 57).

"(2) Guardianship for nurture.—This is a species of guardianship that applies to all the children, extending to the person only. It belongs to the father, and, at his decease, to the mother; and it lasts both with males and females only to the contract of the contract o females only to the age of fourteen."

16. The two minors with whom we are now concerned were living jointly with their paternal ucele, Aman Bape, their grown up step brother, Warlu, and their mother, and the estate was being managed by Aman Bapu and Warlu jointly. Their mother had nothing to do with the management of the property. This state of things is probably due to their living among Hindur, but whatever the reasons for it may be, it undoubtedly did exist. And in matters conserning the share of the three sons of Paran, apart from that of Aman Bapu, Warla was the manager. It is stated in the pleadings by the plaintiffs themselves that women cannot even inherit, and in all the transactions of which we have any knowledge Warlu acted as the manager of the property of his two minor brothers. But, apart from the reasons for thinking it so, it is freely a lmitted by both sides throughout that Warlu was the de facto guardian of the minors in respect of their property, and, in the absence of any positive rule of law, the factum would go a long way towards implying the jue. Warla was the astual guardian of the property of his brothers, he was regarded by the whole of his family and all the world as the natural and rightful guardian, and he would be the natural and rightful goardian under the system of personal law governing practically the whole of the population in the milst of which the family lives, In these oirenmetanoss, it is elearly contrary to justice, equity and good ennieienes to regard anybody but Warla as entitled to by the guardian of the property of his two step brothers. I hold, therefore, that when the deeds which Bel Singh and Prem Singh seek to set aside in this suit executed, their step-brother Warlu was, in respect of their property, their guardian both de facto and de jure. Article 41 of the Limitation Ast, therefore, applies to all the suits, and the last day on which they could have been filed by the younger plaintiff alone was some day in 1911. All the suits are barred by time and must be dismissed. The desrees of the lower Appellate Court are accordingly set aside and all the suits will be dismissed. The respondents must pay all the costs of the various appellants in the whole litigation.

Custom - Adoption - Collateral succession,

In the case of an adoption made under the customary law of the Punjab it is to be determined whether it was intended that the adopted boy should be altogether taken out of his natural family and introduced into the adoptive father's family as his son; in other words, whether the adoption was a complete adoption having the effect of severing the connections of the boy with his natural family. [p. 21!, col 1.]

In the case of an adoption in a particular community, where there is no standard of formality and no precise customary rule as to what is to be done to produce all the effects of adoption, all that can be said is that where the adoption is as complete as an adoption in that community ever is, and where the intention to make a complete change of family is manifested, there for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration that Kanshi Ram, defendant, an appointed heir of Ram Ditta, was not entitled to succeed collaterally to the estate of Kharku and Fattu, brothers of Ram Ditta, and that he was not entitled to have 425 kanals 5 marlas of land, situate in Mausa Bains Khurd, re-partitioned, the land having been partitioned already.

In order to understand the facts of the case reference must be made to the pedigree table printed on page 6 of the paper One Dhuman had seven sons. book. Kanshi Ram was the son of one of these, namely, Sahiba. He was adopted by Ram Ditta, his unele. This fact is evidenced by a deed of adoption dated the 21st Oc. In this deed it is resited tober 1884. that the boy had been adopted at the age of two years and was taken out of the family of his natural father, Sahiba, and was brought up as his son by the The deed further recites that, adoptor. "how by this writing I deelare the said boy as my adopted son and provide after my death he will perform the kirya karam seremony and shall susseed to my property as my son." Ram Ditta, after executing the deed, died three days after, namely, on the 24th October 1884. Kanshi Ram succeeded to the estate of Ram Ditta Some half hearted as his adopted son, objections were made by some of the col. laterals but eventually they were all brushed aside and Kanshi Ram's claim to succeed to the full share of Ram Ditta in the joint holding was recognized. Subsequently, Sahiba, the natural father of Kanshi Ram. died leaving Kanshi Ram and four other sons. Kanshi Ram was excluded from the inheritance in the property of Sahiba, and the rest of his brothers succeeded to the entire estate. In 1891 Kharke, one of Ram Ditta's brothers, died and Kanshi Ram was allowed to speeed collaterally and his name was mutated in the same manner as the name of a natural born son of Ram Ditta would have been entered. In 1911 Fattu, another brother of Ram Ditta, died and Kanshi Ram was again allowed to succeed as a collateral. In 1916 Kanshi Ram applied to the Revenue Authorities for the partition of the ancestral holding. Waryaman, the grandson of Sewak, a brother of Ram Ditta, along with others filed objections against the application for partition presented by Kanshi Ram. The Revenue Court referred the parties to a Civil Court. Thereupon, Waryaman, along with some of his cousins instituted the present suit for declaration, ground upon which the suit was based was that Kanshi Ram was merely an appointed heir of Ram Ditta and as such he was not entitled to susseed collaterally in the family of his adoptive father according to the custom prevailing among the Hindu Jats of the Hoshiarpur Tabeil in the Hoshiarpur District. The suit was resisted by Kanshi Ram on the ground that he was the adopted son of Ram Ditta and that he was entitled to succeed collaterally to Kharku and Fattu. The Trial Court, after going into the evidence and the eireumstances of the ease, held in favour of Kanshi Ram and dismissed the suit. An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court which was dismissed and the decree of the First Court was upheld.

The plaintiffs have some up in second appeal to this Court and it has been argued by Mr. Sundar Das on their behalf that, according to the custom and decided eases relating to the enstom, Kanshi Ram being only an appointed heir of Ram Ditta was not entitled to sneeed collaterally in the family of his adoptive father. In the alternative, he has also argued that, even if Kanshi Ram be admitted to have been adopted by Ram Ditta, he was not entitled to succeed collaterally for the reason that his adoption was merely an informal adoption and it was not attended with the prevalent among the formal ceremonies The learned Hindu Jats. Judge of the Court below in his judgment makes the following observation :-

having no sons, appointed one of his nephews Kanshi Ram, son of Sahiba, as his heir. It is not disputed that this appointment was in reality an adoption. In fact, all along, ever sines that date Kanshi Ram has been recognised as the adopted son of Ram Ditta, and this point is not even now in dispute."

Apparently, the fact of adoption was never disputed in the Courts below, and it is searcely open to Mr. Sundar Das to argue that, in reality, there was no adoption and that it was merely an appointment of an heir. The real contention put forward, however, by Mr. Sundar Das is that, unless it is shown that Kanshi Ram's adoption was a formal adoption ascording to the authorities, he would not be entitled to succeed to the property collaterally. Now, it is difficult to understand what the learned Counsel meant by formal adoption. There are certain formalities and ceremonies provided by the Hindu Law for the adoption of a boy according to the Dattaka form. In the Punjab, however, no specific ceremonies or formalities are provided under the Oustomary Law for adoption. In this sense, all adoptions made under the custom must be looked upon as being informal. After a careful perusal of the authorities on this point it appears that, in an adoption made under the Customary Law, it is to be determined whether it was intended that the adopted boy should be altogether taken out of his natural family and introduced into the adoptive father's family as his son; in other words, whether a complete adoption adoption was having the effect of severing the connestions of the boy with his natural family.

In the case of Uttam Singh v. Wasir Singh (1), the Judges of a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court made the following observation :-

But in a Jat adoption where there is no standard of formality, no precise customary rule as to what is to be done to produce all the effects of adoption, it is impossible to say that any class of adoptions always carries certain consequences with it. All that can be said is that, where the adoption is as complete as a Jat adoption ever is, and where the intention to make a complete change of family is manifested, there the right of collateral succession may be presumed till the contrary is shown."

We have, therefore, to see whether in this case it has been shown that the adoption of Kanshi Ram was intended to be a complete adoption and had the effect of bringing about a complete change of family. Admittedly, there is no direct evidense on the record as to the adoption, and after the lapse of such a long period sines 1884 there is nothing strange if direct evidence is not available. The Court below, however, relying upon certain strong eirenmetantial evidence, has come to the conclusion that "Kanshi Ram was the fully adopted son of Ram Ditta." The onus of proving this adoption lay on Kanshi Ram and this, in the opinion of the learned Judge of the Court below, he has successfully dissharged. At this conclusion the Court below arrived from the following proved facts:-

That Kanshi Ram was an agnate being a nephew of Ram Ditta; that he was taken away from the family of his natural father and kept by Ram Ditta as his son from his shildhood, that in 1884 a formal deed of adoption was executed by Ram Ditta, under which Kanshi Ram who was described as his son, was directed perform his kirya karam eeremony after his death; that on Ram Ditta's death he succeeded to his lands and without any serious objection was recognised as his own son; that on the death of Sahiba. his natural father, he was excluded from inheritance, that after Kharku and Fattu he was allowed to succeed collaterally as the son of Ram Ditta to the properties those two persons; that, although Waryaman made a faint attempt to object to the right of Kanshi Ram to succeed collaterally, he did not press the objection seriously; that Kanshi Ram was made to contribute towards the discharge of debts due from Kharku and Fattu : that he was made to contribute ith of the mortgage money to redeem a mortgage of Fattu; and that in fact all along Waryaman and others treated him as the fully adopted son of Ram Ditta.

(1) 84 P. B. 1887.

HAR CHANDRA BOY U. MOHAMAD HASIM.

The learned District Judge has also referred to three decided eases which prove the custom set up by Kanshi Ram. It is not necessary to notice in any detail the particulars of the custom pleaded, for the findings of fact fully establish the enditions which, according to the argument of Mr. Sundar Das, are necessary for a complete adoption.

In our opinion the Courts below have arrived at a correct conclusion and this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, Acre. C. J .- This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit to enforce a mort. gage recurity. The mortgage was granted on the 9th February 1904 by a man named Terapali Bhunys, and the mortgage morey was re-psyable on the 17th October 1904. It is alleged that two, if not three, sums were paid in part satisfaction of the sum due on the mortgage. The plaintiff instituted the present sait on the 30th October 1916, against persone, who, they alleged, were representatives-in-interest of the original mortgagor. The defendants pleaded that all the beirs who were in enjoyment of the property left by the mortgagor had not been made parties to the suit and, consequently, the suit should be dismissed for non-joinder of parties. They did not, however, state the names and addresses of the parties who, in their opinion, should have been joined. Thereupon, an issue was raised to the following effect: "Is the suit bad for defect of parties?" The Subordinate Judge held on the evidence that a widow of the mortgagor named Aliman. nessa and a daughter who has died sines then, bad not been brought on the record, and concluded that as all the representatives of the mortgegor were not parties, the suit could not be maintained. On appeal the District Judge has taken the same view and has dismissed the spit. We are of opinion that the decree of dismissal cannot be maintained.

It is clear that the plaintiffe were, at the least, entitled to a decree for a proportionate ebare of the mortgage money as against the defendants who were on the record. Even if it be assumed that the persons who had been left cut, could, if joined, have enesses fully urged the plea of limitation, that would not afferd a deferce in favour of the persons who had been joined as parties within the prescribed time. This view is supported by the decision in Imam Ali v. Faij Noth Bam Sahu (1). In that case an objection was taken that certain parties had not been brought on the record in time and that if they were added as parties, the sait must be drened as barred by limitation as epainet them. It was roled that where a purchaser of a pertion ct the equity of redemption is added as a party (defendant) not by the Court but upon an application by the mortgages after the prescribed period of limitation, although the mortgage suit is barred as against the added defendants, yet such mortgagee is entitled to succeed in respect of a proportionate part of his elaim as against the remaining owners of the equity of redemption.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set saide and the ease remanded to him in order that he may make a mortgage-deeree in favour of the plaintiffe, against the defendants, proportionate to the share of the defendants in the estate of the mortgagor. The District Judge will either himself take or direct the Subordinate Judge to take evidence for the determination of such share. On the facts found by the Subordinate Judge, which apparently have been confirmed by the District Judge, the total sum due on the mortgage will be taken to be Rs. 1,000 with interest at 12 per cent. par annum with a deduction of the sums of Rs. 125 and Rs. 200. The plaintiffs will have their costs in all Courts in proportion to their success, and such costs will be added to the mortgage amount.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant,

Messrs. A. D. Dube and Suresh Churder, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.-The facts are these:-In Etawah city there is a bouse known as Bilas. wala. In the plaint it is stated that this house is in a dilapidated condition. Courts have not arrived at any finding whether the house is or is not occupied or when it was compied last. It is now agreed between the parties that the house was inherited in their equal shares by Ram Dayal, Gopi Nath and Gokul Chand, Chaube Brahmans, sons of Durga Prasad, and own brothers. It is not elear how they inherited the house. Possibly, they inherited it as sister's sons as their mother is said to have been the sister of a man called Bailas. This much is clear that Gokul Chand inherited a ard share, Gokul Chand has a son salled Atma Ram : Gokul Ohand is alive. Ram Dayal is dead. He has been succeeded by his two minor greatgrandsons, Udit and Perkash. Gopi Nath is dead. He is represented by his con Banarsi Das and his grandson Makscdap. On the 30th of November 1918 Gokul Chand agreed with Saktu Mal, Bania, to sell him the whole of Bilaswala house for Rs. 1,000 and took Rs. 25 sarnest money for which he gave a reseipt. The receipt was drafted by his son Atma Ram and was in the names of both Gokul Chand and Atma Ram but was signed by Gokul Chand only. Gokul Chand subsequently refused to take any further steps in the transaction. Saktu Mal then sued Gokul Chand and Atma Ram in the Munsif's Court of Etawah in 1919. He asserted in his plaint that the house in question had some into the possession of Gokul Chand and Gopi Nath's descendants in equal moieties, Ram Dayal's descendants having relinquish. ed all slaim to it, and he asked for specific performance of the agreement to sell to the extent of half of the house for Rs. 500 if the remaining co-sharers refused to sell their moiely, and in the event of the remaining co sharers being willing to sell their moiety, for the sale of the whole house for Re. 1,000. He asked in addition for any other relief which may be found due to him. The written statement find by Gokul Chand was to the effect that he had agreed to sell the house for Rs. 1.000 and had taken Rs. 25 as sarpest money. It continued that he,

SAKTOO MAL U. GOPAL CHAND.

Gokul Chand, had no rights of any kind in the house as he had given up his rights in consideration of receiving other land from Ram Dayal and Gopi Nath. It continued that he had been misled by the plaintiff into concenting to execute a sale-deed for the house and had had Rs. 25 as earnest money foreed upon him. Atma Ram's statement was that he owned nothing in the house in dispute and had taken no part in the agree-When the case came to trial the ment plaintiff produced two letters. One was a letter written to him by a certain Manni Lal and the other was a letter which Manni Lal enclosed, that admittedly had been des patched by Atma Ram to Banarsi Das, the son of Gopi Nath. Banarsi Das was at that time living in Gralier. The defendants admit that the second letter had been sent by Atma Ram to Banarei Das, but they contended that the letter had been sent by post, had been lost while in the possession of the Post Office and had been received by the plaintiff dishonestly with the full knowledge that it had been stolen. I am informed by the Counsel for the appellant that criminal proceedings were instituted by Atma Ram against the plaintiff under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and that those proceedings failed. But there is nothing to that effect on the record. In any circumstances, the letter was admitted to have been written by Atma Ram. This letter, it will be observ. ed, was being sent to Banarsi Das who, both sides agree, had a share in the house in question. It is to the effect that Gokul Chand and Atma Ram had been attempting to sell the Bilaswala house to a Brahman; that at first they could not get an offer for more than Rs. 800, but that they found the present plaintiff ready to give Rs. 1,000; that they had accepted his offer and by representing to Brahmans that the plaintiff was ready to give Rs. 1,000, they had hopes that they would be able to obtain an equal sum from two Brahmans, and that, in these circumstances, the best course appeared to be to repudiate the contract with the plaintiff. The plaintiff put this letter in and also put in evidence to prove that the house belonged solely to Gopi Nath and Gokul Chand. Gokul Chand produced two witnesses, Kishen Lal and Baij Nath. Kishen Lal deposed that thir y years before the date of the suit Gokal Chand, Gopi Nath and the son of Bam Dayal had made a family arrangement in respect of the Bilaswala house whereby Gopi Nath and the son of Ram Dayal took the whole house in equal shares, and Gokul Chandtook in lieu some other land belonging to the family. Baij Nath deposed to the same effect with the exception that he placed the date of the family arrangement at 15 to 2; years before the date of the suit. I observe that the English note of the evidence of these two witnesses gives very little elue to what they actually stated. The Muneif came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's witnesses were telling the truth; that the house was now the property of Gopi Nath's successors and Gokul Chand, and he direct. ed Gokul Chand to execute the sale-deed convey half to the plaintiff. The learned District Judge of Mainpuri arrived at the conclusion that Gokul Chand had lost all interest in the house. This is what he says :- "The oral evidence produced in this ease and the evidence in the case filed by Bindraban show that Gopi Nath and Kishore Chand, son of Ram Dayal, only had right in the house is suit and Gokul Ohand had no right in the house. Evidence on the record shows that Gokul Chand had got some chabutra land from his brothers in lieu of his share in the house in suit. So from all this evidence it would appear that Gokul Chand has no subsisting right in the house in suit and Atma Ram never had any right. He gives no reasons for That is all, rejecting the plaintiff's evidence. He gives no reasons for accepting the evidence produced by the defendants. He makes no attempt to resonable the discrepancy between the two witnessee, Kishen Lal and Baij Nath, one of whom places the transaction at 30 years before the suit and the other at 15 to 20 years before the suit. doubtful whether these defects would vitiate the finding as a finding of fact, but there is one element in the finding which vitiates it and that is the reference to the evidence in the case filed by Bindra. ban. I have been able to accertain to what the learned District Judge is referring. Bindraban lives in the neighbourhood of the Bilaswala house. He was construct. Some members of the ing a latrine. family complained to the Municipality who directed Bindraban to close that latrine.

CHIERO BHAGWANT U. SHIDNATH MARTAND.

Bindraban then summoned some membere of the family in a Criminal Court under section 352. They were acquitted on the ground that the case was false. dence produced in either of these proceedings was brought on the record, with the exception of the judgment of the Oriminal Court which was inadmissible in respect of the point in issue, this point being whether Gokul Chand had any connection, with the Bilaswala house. So this finding is vitiated by the fact that it proceeds in part upon inadmissible evidence. I do not propose to send the ease back. On the materials, I am in a position to arrive at the following finding. Gokul Chand had certainly a 1 3rd share in the house in question. The evidence produced by him is not sufficient to show that he has no longer any interest in the house in question. I do not propose to arrive at a definite finding for the following reasons: - Gopi Nath's descendants and Ram Dayal's descendants are not parties to the suit. I cannot adjudicate absolutely on Gokul Chand's title without entering into their title. It is inadvisable to be too definite at this stage. It is sufficient to say that Gokul Chand has not been able to establish that he has no title in the property which he purported to sonvey. In these sircumstancer, the plaintiff has a right to obtain a deed of sale from Gokul Chand and Atma Ram in respect of 1-3rd of the house. He has a right to obtain this deed from Atma Ram for Atma Ram, as the son of Gokul Chand, has joint interests in the share and Atma Ram slearly agreed to the sale. The decree will be as follows:-Gokul Chand and Atma Ram will execute a deed of sale of 1/3rd of the Bilaswala house within three months of the date of this decree sabject to the plaintiff pay. ing to them Rs. 2085-4 at the time of registeration in the presence of the Registration Officer and paying the costs of the conveyance. In view of the attitude taken up by Gokul Chand and Atma Ram, I direct that they pay their own costs and those of the plaintiff in all Courts. These costs will include fees on the higher scale in this Court. The appeal is allowed accordingly.

JUDGMENT.

Shan, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice allowing the plaintiffs' slaim for a declaration that the defendants were their annual tenants. It is not nesessary to set forth the previous history of this case. It is enough to point out that in November 1919 the case was remanded for the purpose of determining the nature of the defendants' tenancy, as to which the plaintiffs had sought a declaration. Both the lower Courts found that the tenancy commenced after the gift by the original owners in favour of the ancestore of the plaintiffe' predecessor in title. They applied the provisions of section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code and presumed that the tenancy was permanent, mainly relying on the observations in Ramchandra Narayan Mantri v. Anani (1).

When the second appeal came on for hearing, it was held that section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code did not apply, as the commencement of the tenancy was traced, and that it could not be said, as required by section 83, that by reason of the antiquity of the tenancy no satisfactory evidence of its commencement was forthcoming, having regard to the finding that the tenancy commenced after the gift in favour of the ancestors of the plaintiffs' predecessorintials in 1805.

The defendants who have appealed from this judgment, have contended that section 83 does apply to this ease. Though the learned Pleader has questioned the finding of fast that the gift in favour of Shantacharya's ancester was in 1805, and that the tenancy of the defendants commenced thereafter, I do not think that that contention could be allowed. Both the lower Courts have found that as a fact, and it is not shown, nor is it suggested in the memorandum of appeal, that that finding is not supported by the evidence in the case.

For the purposes of the mein argument, therefore, it must be accepted as a fast that the tenancy commenced in or after 1805. It is quite true, as found by the lower Courte. that thereafter the defendants have been in possession of the land on payment of a fixed sum of Rs. 8 either by way of assessment or rent. It is not possible, however, to apply the provisions of section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, as the commencement of the tenancy is traced. It seems to me that the view taken by the learned Chief Justice on this point is right, and the observations in Ramchandra Narayan Mantri v. Anant (1) must be taken to have been made with reference to the facts of that particular ease, and cannot be so read as practically to modify the terms of the section.

In view, however, of the observations of the lower Courts in their judgments we adjourned the hearing of the appeal on the last occasion to have certain necessary doeuments translated in order to see whether, spart from section &3, there was anything in the case to show that the tenancy in favour of the defendants was of a permanent sharacter. Having regard to the length of time for which they had been in possession on rayment of a fixed sum, it seemed to us necessary in the interests of justice to see whether the plea of permanent tenancy might be otherwise made cut. It must be said, however, with reference to this aspect of the ease, that no such point was taken either before the learned Ohief Justice when the second appeal was heard, nor is it taken in the memorandum of appeal now. After having read the dosuments, I am unable to hold that there is any real basis for the inference that the tenancy was of a permanent nature. Exhibit 76 is the most important document on this point. It has been read and discussed before us. I am satisfied that there is nothing in that document to support the inference that the tenancy was of a parmanent nature. On the contrary, it seems to me from the letter, the date of which eaunot be ascertained, that Shantacharys, who was the father of the plaintiffs' vendor, wrote to one of the defendants, representing the tenants, that it was not fair on his part merely to offer the assessment, but that he should hand over the land to him (Shantacharya), particularly when he or his ancestors had helped Shantacharya's ancestors in retaining the benefit of the gift which the other members of the Nadgir family had made in favour of Shantacharya's ancestors. The letter, as I read it, shows that Shants. charya then appealed to the Nadgir tenant that it was proper for him to hand over possession of the land to him. This position becomes intelligible on the footing that the Nadgirs were not the permanent tenants of Shantacharya and that they were liable to restore possession to him. On a consideration of this letter other documents, to and which we have been referred, I am satisfied that there is no sufficient basis for inferring that the defendants are permanent terants. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

PRATE, J .- I agree with the construction put upon section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and that the presumption under that section is not available to the tenants in this case. I agree also that the farther documents which we have had trans. lated for the purposes of this appeal do not disclose evidence that the tenancy was, 69 a matter of fact, a permanent tenaney. Shantasharya's letter, Exhibit 76, shows that he originally derived title to the land in suit from the ancestors of the present Shantacharya's title defendants. attacked by one Litaji Subappa, and the defendants' ansestors assisted Shantacharya in repelling that attack by suit. The defendBAJKALI U. GOPI NATH WAIK.

ants' ease is that as a reward for that assistance they were granted the tenancy of the land in suit. That is probably true. But the letter, Exhibit 76, does not show that that tenancy was a permanent tenancy. Fer contra in that letter Shantacharya seems to be protesting against the defendants retaining the tenancy. However, they did remain in possession as tenants, and the further documents, i. e., the rent-ressipt in 1899, Exhibit 79, and the notice, Exhibit 28, in 1901, go to further than to establish, what is in fact admitted, that the defendents had, as a matter of fact, paid rent at an povarying rate of Rs. 8 per annum ever since they got their tenancy. But it cannot be inferred from that that the tenancy is not annual. Therefore, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

1 100 GOPI NATH NAIK-PLAINTIPP -RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24-Remand of appeal by High Court to District Judge for re-trial-District Judge, power of, to transfer appeal-Jurisdiction.

In the absence of express terms to the contrary. an order by a High Court remanding an appeal to a District Judge to be disposed of according to law, has not the effect of placing any limitation on the powers of the District Judge, under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, of transferring the appeal for disposal by an Additional Judge of his Judgeship, and where such an appeal is so transferred, the order of the Additional Judge disposing of the appeal is not liable to be set aside on the ground that it was wholly without jurisdiction, [p. 81°, col. 2.]

. First appeal from an order of the Additional Judge, Gorakhpur,

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants. Mr. Shankir Saran, for the Respondent. JUDGMENT.

Pagarr, J .- This appeal somes before us under enrious and somewhat complicat. ed eirenmetanees. There was a suit instituted in the Court of the Sabordinate

Judge of Gorakhpur upon a hypothesation. band. The plaintiff filed a copy of the bond and pleaded loss of the original. The Trial Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove by cradible evidence the loss of the original, that the suit was not maintainable upon the copy and dismissed it accordingly. There was an appeal to the Distriet Judge of Gorakhpur and this appeal was heard by Mr. R L. Yorke, who then held the office of the District Judge. effect of his order was to set aside the finding of the Trial Court, although he did The operative not in terms reverse it. portion of his order was that he remanded the suit to the First Court to be tried out on the merits. This order was dated the 4th of September 1919 and against it there was an appeal to this Court. In the meantime, however, the Trial Court was proceeding with the suit, and, on the 19th of December 1919, it passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in the usual form. This Court's order on appeal was passed on the 21st of May 1920. For reasons given in the judgment, a Bench of this Court allowed the appeal, set aside the order of the Judge of Gorakbpur and directed as followe:-"that the appeal be and it hereby is returned to the Court of the said Judge to be re-admitted on the file of pending appeals and disposed of ascording to law." When this order reached the Gorakhpur District the office of District Judge was filled by Mr. Moir, and Mr. Yorke was holding, in the same Judgeship, the office of Additional Judge. Mr. Moir, no doubt believing that this Court desired and intended that the appeal should return, if possible, to the same officer who had passed the order of the 4th of September 1919, availed himself of his powers of transfer under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) to send the appeal to Mr. Yorke for disposal. The parties were represented by Counsel before Mr. Yorke and, although Coupsel for the defendants seems in the first instance to have stated that he had no instructions, the question in issue was argued before him. Mr. Yorke recorded a definite finding to the effect that the loss of the original document was proved and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain his suit upon a copy

RAJEALI O. GOPI NATH MAIR

He felt himself apparently in a difficulty as to the proper orders to pass in consequence of this finding, because it seemed useless to re-affirm his original order of remand when this had in the meantime been carried out by the Trial Court and had eventuated in the decree of 19th December 1919. It may be also that he relied upon a passage in the judgment of this Court in which it was said that if the District Judge on further consideration found that the loss of the original document was satisfactorily proved then an order of remand was correct." seems useless to speculate as to what the learned Additional Judge would have done if his attention had been called to a ruling of the Fall Bench of this Court in Uman Kunwari v. Jarbandhan (1), but he contented himself with passing an order which, as it stands, declares a certain sum of money to be due to the plaintiff as a mortgage charge upon certain property, but contains no specific directions fixing any date for the payment of the sum, or laying down the consequences that are to follow upon default of such payment. The District Judge probably believed that a final decree for cale would eventually follow, not upon this decree of his, but upon the Trial Court's decree of 19th December 1919. It seems to me, however, that we cannot possibly anticipate what complications may arise, or what difficulties the plaintiff may encounter upon making application for a decree absolute for sale. We have to deal with the appeal before us, which is an appeal by the defendants against the order of the Additional Judge dated the 21st March 1921, the effect of which has been stated above.

A preliminary objection has been taken to the effect that this order as it stands is not an appealable order at all. Technically, I am of opinion that this objection is well founded; although, if this were the only point to be taken against the appellants, I should have been quite prepared to consider the advisability of allowing them to make such amendments, and to take such other necessary steps as would convert the appeal before us into a second appeal from a decree. Taking this view of the matter, we have actually heard . the appellants on the points taken in their memorandum of appeal. clearly not entitled to attack the finding of fast arrived at by the Additional Distriet Judge upon evidence duly considered by him. The one point argued on their behalf has been that, inasmush Court's order of 21st May 1920 directed a remand of the appeal to the Court of the Judge of Gorakhpur (obviously meaning thereby the District Judge), that Court had no authority to transfer the appeal to the Additional District Judge for disposal and the subsequent proseedings in the Court of the Additional District Judge, up to and including the order under appeal, were without jurisdiction. There is some authority for this contention in the care of Sita Ram v. Nauni Dulaiya (2). Authority to the contrary has been quoted in some cases desided by the Calentta High Court, but I think it quite sufficient to point out that this very point was considered by a Single Judge of this Court in Pandohi v. Sheo Bharoie (3). learned Judge pointed out that there had been a change in the law in consequence of the re-drafting of the present section 24 of the Code of Civil Prosedure, correspond. ing with sestion 25 of the former Code of 1882. He held that the older decisions based upon the Code of 1882 were no longer applicable and gave strong reasons for his opinion that, in a case like the present, any order of remand passed by this Court would have no effect to limit the powers of the District Judge under section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless this Court's order were drawn up in express terms so as to diselose a elear intention of limiting those powers. the present instance the reverse is the The operative portion of Court's order merely directed the Distriet Judge to dispose of the appeal according to law. One of the ways in which a District Judge can dispose of an appeal according to law is to transfer it to the Court of an Additional Judge of his Judge ship for disposal. I have no doubt whatever, speaking as one of the Bench of Judges which passed this Court's order of 21st May 1920, that if the whole position had been laid before us we should have said that it was better, unless the parties could show cause to the contrary, that the appeal should go back to the particular officer, i.e., Mr. Yorke, who had passed the order of the 4th of September 1919. At any rate, I am satisfied that there is no force in the contention that the order now under appeal before us is one wholly without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside on that account. This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal before us and I would dismiss it with costs.

Walsh, J.—I entirely agree that the appeal fails. It seems to me that the points raised are unsubstantial and that, in any event, the appellant is debarred by having appeared and taken an order from Mr. Yorke at the second hearing without raising any objection.

As to the existing legal position of the parties it seems to me that there may be ground for future technical controversy and I, therefore, desire, with a view to assisting the parties, if possible, to express my opinion about it for what it is worth. If chronology alone is regarded, it might be argued that the decree passed by the First Court in the suit on the merits dated the 19th December 1919 was void and of no effect because the order of the 4th September 1919 which gave rise to it had been interfered with by the High Court in March 1920, and I can understand the ingenious suggestion that if the foundation is gone the fabrie which rests upon it, must be taken to have disappeared also. In my humble judgment that would be a fallacy in this ease. I have looked at the passages relied on in the judgment of the Fall Bench delivered by Mr. Justice Banerji in Uman Runwari v. Jarbandhan (1), particularly at page 483,* to which I will refer in a moment. and I have some to the conclusion that they are mere dicta which were not necessary for the decision of the case. To my mind, they go a great deal too far. The only point which the Full Bench had to decide was whether an appeal lay at all and if so whether it ought to susseed. In this particular case the remand order when interfered with by the decree of this Court was not necessarily erroneous and has never been declared to be bad. It was merely deslared by this Court Page of 30 A.-[Ed.]

to be premature. One is always entitled to look at the reasons in a judgment for an order or deeree which is passed, otherwise law reporting would be a superfluity. The remand order was set aside provisionally. The decree of this Court was absolute in terms but it invited the Judge below to re-consider the matter and it was distinctly held by the judgment, as my brother has pointed out, that if the Judge found the loss of the original bond proved an order of remand was correct. The learned Judge found on re-consideration which he had considered unnecessary in the first instance, that the loss was proved, and, therefore, his remand order became, in the events which happened, perfectly right. The present order ie, to my mird, a mere interim order completing that which the High Court had directed him to complete, namely, his decision upon the preliminary point. It is not a decision on the merits, and in my opinion the plaintiff would be wrong to treat it as a deeree in his suit. A deeree has been passed in the suit by the First Court. At the time the trial was held and that decree was passed, it was a perfectly lawful proceeding, More than that, it was conducted in obedience of the order of the lower Court remanding the suit to the First Court for trial. In the authority to which I have just referred it is said that the "jurisdiction to hear the suit a second time is derived solely from the order of remand. If that order is errone. ons and is set aside everything done in pursuance of the order must fall to the ground and be of no effect." Again, it is said if the remand order were wrongly made the deerse and, indeed, all the proceedings taken under the remand order are null and void. I think those statements are much too sweeping. It depends on the sircumstances in each case and on the nature of the invalidity of the remand order. If the remand order is finally set aside and is such an order as ought not to have been passed at all in any ease, it may be that the proceedings in the Court below fall with it. But in this ease, and it must have happened in many other eases, the proceedings taken in the First Court as a result of the remand order against which there is an appeal must be and ought to be held to be de bene case. The subsequent event in this case resulted in the remand order being shown to have been quite right. It seems to me that it would be turning the law into absurdity, and would amount to a denial of justice if a proper trial which has taken place under a remand order made by the Appellate Court and in obadience to such remand order, were held to be invalid when as the result of the High Court's own decision that remand order turned out to have been perfectly justified.

BHIMA DODDAPPA MALED-DEFENDANT - RESPONDENT.

Adverse possession-Decree for possession-Sym. bolical possession obtained in execution, effect of.

Where in execution of a decree for possession, symbolical possession is delivered to the decreeholder, such possession is sufficient to intercept any adverse possession prior to the date of the decree, more especially where the person setting up adverse possession was a party to the proceedings in execution of the decree.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 50 of 1920, confirming a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bail-Hongal, in Civil Suit No 337 of 1918.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for the Appellant. Mr. G. R. Madhbhavi, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J - The plaintiff filed this soit for possession and mesne profits. Trial Court dismissed the sait and an appeal from that decree was dismissed with costs. The question is whether the defend. ants could ausceed against the plaintiff who had obtained a decree for possession on the 28th February 1914. It was alleged that in execution of that decree the plaintiff was put in possession on the 5th February 1915. The learned Judge says, "the main question, as was frankly stated by the learned Pleader. is whether the possession delivered on the 5th February 1915 was symbolical posses. sion or real possession," and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the posses. sion was only symbolical.

In Mahadeo Sakharam v. Janu Namii (1), it was decided by a Fall Bench that merely formal possession of immoveable property by a purchaser at a Court-sale sannot prevent limitation running in favour of the jadgmentdebtor where the latter remains in actual possession, and the property is not in the ossupancy of a tenant or other persons entitled to occupy the same. Symbolical possession is not real possession nor is it equivalent to real possession under the Civil Prosedure Code except where the Code expressly or by implication provides that it shall bave that effect.

Bat in Radha Krishna v. Ram Bahadur (2), it was decided by the Privy Council that symbolical possession is sufficient to interrupt adverse possession where the person setting up adverse possession was a party to the execution proceedings in which the symbolical possession was given. Their Lordships approved of the decision in Juggobundhu Zuker ee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (3). This decision of the Privy Council appears to throw considerable doubt on the desision of this Court in Mahades Sakharum v. Janu Nam: (1) which may bave, when the oceasion arises, to be re-considered.

In my opinion, in this case it cannot be said that the question of adverse possession arises in the face of the plaintiff's decree of February 1914. That would put a stop to any adverse possession prior to the date of the decree, and even if that were not so, considering that the defendants were parties to the execution proceedings, the decision in Radha Kreshna v. Ram Bahadur (2) would be applicable. plaintiff, therefore, would be entitled to succeed, and the appeal must be allowed and a decree passed for possession with soats throughout. There will have to be inquiry with regard to mesne profits for the past three years before suit and also with regard to future mesne profits.

SHAH, J .- I agree.

EMPEROR-PROSECUTOR.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 63, 98, 108, 109— Overcrowding in trains—Passengers, right of—Pulling Alarm signal—Reasonable and sufficient cause,

Accused, a passenger by Railway train, complained to the Station Staff that the compartment in which he was travelling contained more than the maximum number of passengers allowed by the rules made under section 63 of the Railways Act, but his complaint was unheeded: after the train left the station, he felt a sensation of suffocation and pulled the communicating chain and stopped the train, in order to complain to the guard. He was convicted under section 108 of the Act for having, without reasonable and sufficient cause, pulled the communicating chain and so stopped the train:

Held, that, no hard and fast rule could be laid down as to what would constitute reasonable and sufficient cause, that each case depended upon its own circumstances, and that under the circumstances of the present case the accused was justified in pulling the communicating chain and stopping the train inasmuch as he had the right to have the compartment vacated so as to reduce the number of passengers therein to the prescribed limit. [p. 321, col. 2; p. 322, col. 1.]

Application against an order passed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Dhanbad, affirming the sentence passed by the Deputy Magistrate of that place.

Messrs. M. Yunus and Subal Chandra Masumdar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 108 of the Railways Act (Act IX of 1890) for having pulled the chain of his compartment which caused the train to stop.

The chain was intended to be used as an alarm signal. The reason for pulling the chain is said by the accused to be that the compartment had become over-crowded on account of 70 passengers having entered into it, whereas the compartment was marked for 27 passengers only. He states that the compartment in question was an Inter-Class Compartment, whereas most of the passengers had only third class tickets. He further states that at Dhanbad when his compartment became employees but received no attention, and then, when the train started, he felt sufficiating sensation and consequently he pulled the chain in order to stop the train. These facts are not disputed; but it is said that they do not exonerate the accused. The Magistrate evidently thought that there should have been a more serious case in order to entitle the accused to pull down the chain, such as that stated by the Guard, namely, murder or fire. Section 108 of Railways Act runs as follows:—

"If a passenger without reasonable and sufficient cause makes use of or interferes with any means provided by a Railway Administration for communication between passengers'and the railway servants in charge of a train, he shall be punished with a fine which may extend to Rs. 50."

It is evident that no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what must constitute reasonable and sufficient cause and that it must depend upon the circumstances of each case whether there was such a cause as to justify a passenger interfering with the pulling of the chain. No doubt, the ease of murder and fire stated by the Guard is an extreme case. In order to prevent any danger to the health and life of passengers the Act provides in section 63 that the limit of passengers to occupy a compartment must be fixed and must be exhibited in some conspicuous place inside or outside the compartment, and the Railway Company is enjoined to comply with the provisions of section 63 on pain of a fine of Rs. 20 per day under section 93 of the Act. A corresponding obligation has been east under section 109 of the Ast upon passengers to obviate entering a compartment which contains the maximum number of passengers exhibited therein or thereon. These provisions of the Act, therefore, confer a right upon the occupants of a compartment to resist the entry of passengers, and in the present case the compartment had already contained the maximum number allowed under the aforesaid rules. order to enforce this right every passenger is entitled to invoke the aid of the railway officers in any station, or of the officer in sharge of the train when it is in motion or is not in any station. In the present ease the petitioner's requests to the percons in charge of the Dhanbad Station proved abortive and, therefore, he had no a terrative but to draw the attention of the Guard when the train moved and when he found that he was packed to suffocation. He was, therefore, justified in pulling the chain and in stopping the train for enforceing his right to have the compartment vacated so as to bring down the numbers of passengers therein within the maximum limit prescribed. Therefore, in the sirsumstances of the present case, the petitioner did not act without reasonable and enffieient cause. Section 108, consequently, does not apply.

The conviction of the petitioner is illegal and is set aside. The fire, if already realised, should be refunded.

The railway people were guilty of negligence in not earrying out the provisions of the Act which are meant entirely for the eafety and comfort of passengers, and instead of thanking the petitioner for having drawn their attention to it they prosecuted him and thus transferred their own liability to the shoulders of the petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

Macico, C. J - The accused was charged with an offense neben esteefto 93 (5) of the Bumbay District Manieinal Act, III of 1901. The complainant, Mr. Sniade, the Sarretary of the Ghatkoper Kirol Municipality, alleged that the assessed bad commenced eresting a number of temporary hats on Sarvey No. 31 of Gratkoper village, situate within the limits of the Gratkoper Kicol Manieipality without having obtained permission from the Manieipality under clause (1) of section 95 and thus had committed an offence punishable under section 96 (5) of the Ast,

The Magistrate came to the conclusion that no offence had been committed under section 95 (5), but on the facts he dealt with the case as if the Munisipality had given notice to the accused under sestion 97, and that the assused not having obeyed the requisitions of the Municipality had committed an offenes under section 155 of the Act, and fined him Ra. 50, or in default simple imprisonment for one month.

On the 18th January 1921 the assused wrote to the Municipality that he was a registered cosupant of several pieces of land at Ghatkoper, and as such had applied for permission to the Salsette Davelopment Officer to appropriate the said lands to building purposes, and for the purpose of giving facility to the workmen and servants employed by him for developing the land and making roads and plots and for erecting buildings he had commenced creeting temporary sheds bas shops. would be removed after the buildings were erseted.

Then he made eartain inquiries with regard to the building rules and regulations which had been framed by the Municipality. But for the purposes of this case those inquiries are irrelevant.

In answer to this letter of the 18th, the Municipality, on the 25th of January, raplied that the permission of the Municipality was equally necessary before proceeding with the work mentioned in the letter under reply. The work in question was, therefore, purely unauthorized and was proseeded with not withstanding the repeated verbal as well as written warnings given to the accused's staff in charge of the work. Reference was then made to the Manieipal rules and byelaws, and the letter concludes: "Lastly, I may take this occasion to add that if these unauthorized structures are not removed within four days from the reseipt of this n itise nesessary action will have to be ad iptel against you under the provisions of the District Manieipal Act,"

On the 27th January 1921, at a meeting of the Managing Committee under the heading "Baildings erested without permission on Agra Road at Gratkoper by Mr. Matu. bhai M. Shab," it was resolved that Mr. Matubhai M. Shah be prosecuted section 93 (5) of the District Municipal Act for carrying out building work without obtaining previous permission of the Municipality.

It is obvious, therefore, that the Municipality treated the accused as having commenced to erect a building without giving notice as required by section 96 (1), or without furnishing the documents and affording the information prescribed by the section, EMPEROR U. ALI BAHADUR.

and that, therefore, he was liable to be charged under section 96 (5). The learned Magistrate said:—

"I agree with the learned Pleader, Mr. Shingne, in so far that section 95 is not applicable to hute and sheds although the word building includes hute and sheds as per section 3 of the Bombay District Municipal Act. If this section is made applicable to hute and sheds sections 97 and 98 will ever remain dormant and no Municipality will have occasion to use them, and that does not appear to be the motive of the Legislature."

I agree that the view taken by the learned Magistrate was correct. Although under section 3 (7) "building" would include any but, shed or other enclosure, whether used as a human dwelling or otherwise, it does not follow that whereever the word "building" is used in the Act it includes a but or a shed.

Sections 96, 97 and 98 come under the heading in Chapter IX of "powers to regulate buildings, etc." and it was clearly the intention of the Legislature that while the provision of section 96 should apply to buildings in the ordinary sense of the word, special provision was made for huts and built for temporary pursheds whether poses or for a more permanent object, so that when the accused wished to erect buts or sheds of his development scheme, he was bound to give previous notice to the Municipality. Then the Municipality might have made certain requisitions, and it is only when any hut or shed or range or block is built without giving proper notice to the Municipality or otherwise than as required by the Municipality, that the Municipality may give written notice to the owner or builder thereof requiring him within a certain specified time to take down or remove the same or to make such alterations therein or additions thereto as, having regard sanitary considerations, the Municipality may think fit; and it is only when the directions given by the notice have not been complied with that proceedings can be taken under section 155 against the person to whom notice has been given.

I do not think, therefore, that the Magistrate, once he had come to the conclusion that the proposed buildings of the accused did not some within section 96, could alter the charge and treat the offence as if it was punishable under section 155. All penal provisions of a Statute must be very strictly construed, and it is impossible to say that the accused in this case brought himself within the provisions of that section. I think, therefore, that the conviction was wrong and must be set aside, and the fine, if paid, refunded.

SHAH, J .- I agree. I desire to add that the proceedings in this case baying been started under section 96 (5) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, III of 1901, the proper course for the Magistrate was to decide whether the facts necessary to bring the case within the scope of that sub section were established. It is clear, however, that having regard to the nature of the building set up by the accused, the case would be covered by the provisions of section 97; under the circumstances, the prosecution under section 96 (5) would not be justified. The learned Magistrate has taken that view; but he has convicted the accused under section 57, read with section 155. I do not think that in these proceedings the facts necessary for that purpose have been established, nor is there anything in the ease to show that the accused had sufficient notice to meet the case under section 97, read with section 155. The present proeeedings must be treated as having been taken under section 96 (5) and disposed of on that footing. It may be that if the Municipality were so minded, they may be able to give a proper notice under section 97 and to take further steps against the accused.

DECNABAIN MARTO E. CHHATOO RAUT.

A Magistrate, after acquitting an accused person of trespass under section 447. Indian Penal Code, cannot proceed to pass an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code and put the complainant in possession of the land in dispute, inasmuch as section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives jurisdiction to the Criminal Court only when a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force.

Courts are not to deal with questions of abstract justice but are tied down by the wording of the Statute Law on the subject.

Reference by the District Magistrate,

Mr. H. N. Das, for the Complainant. Mr. Mahmud Beg, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT .- The Tabsildar Magistrate, after acquitting an assured person of trespass under section 447, Indian Penal Oode, proceeded to pass an order under section 522 of the Code of Oriminal Proeedure and put the complainant in possession of the land in dispute. The learned District Magistrate of Gonda has rightly submitted the order to this Court for revision. The wording of section 522 is very clear and gives jurisdiction to the Oriminal Court only when a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal fores. The Tabsildar-Magistrate places the assured Zemindar on the horns of a dilemma. If the Zomindar ejected the tenant he was guilty of trespass and if he did not eject then the Zymindar ought not to object to possession being maintained with the complainant tenant. We have, however, not to deal with questions of abstract justice but are tied down by the wording of the Statute Law on the subject.

I set aside the order of the Tahsildar-Magistrate under section 522 which was without jurisdiction.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 250
(a), 367, applicability of-Direction mandatoryFailure to comply, effect of.

The direction contained in proviso (a) to section 250 of the Oriminal Procedure Code are mandatory, and the failure by a Magistrate to record and consider each and every objection urged by a complain.

ant vitiates the proceedings.

The provisions of section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code apply to appeals against an order directing a complainant to pay compensation, and where an appellate judgment in such a case omita to set forth the points for determination, the objections of the appellant, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision, the judgment is not in accordance with law, and is liable to be set aside.

Application against an order passed by the District Magistrate, Muzaffarpur, confirming that of the Honorary Magistrate, Hajipur,

Mr. Nawal Zishore Prasad II, for the Peti-

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Opposite Parly.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of the Magistrate, dated the 9th August 1921, directing that the complainant should pay compensation of Rs. 10 to each of the seven accused, under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order was upheld by the District Magistrate on the 17th of September 1921.

The petitioner impugne the validity of both the orders of the Trial Court as well as of the lower Appellate Court. The order of the Trial Court is assailed on the ground that the Magistrate did not record and consider the objection urged by the complainant to his making the direction to pay compensation to the accused. While acquitting the accused the Magistrate called upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay Rs. 10 as compensation to each accused person. Cause was shown by the complainant by means of a written petition. The Magistrate did not state in his order what the objection of the complainant was, nor does he appear to have considered the objection. He simply says that, the complainant filed a petition showing cause and the cause shown is not reasonable at all."

The petition has been read to me and the complainant has provided therein a number of objections. None of these objections set forth in the petition seem to have been considered by the Magistrate nor have they been recorded by him. Provide (a) to sestion 250 of the Code clearly states that,

"the Magistrate shall record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may arge against the making of the direction."

The direction in the said proviso is mandatory, the non compliance whereof has vitiated the order of the Magistrate directing compensation to be paid by the complement. This was the view taken in the case of Sekh Janab Ali v. Hiralal Pashan (1) as well as by Heyward, J. O., in the case of Minhomal Lilaram v. Emperor (2).

The order of the lower Appellate Court is assailed upon the ground that the judgment written by the District Magistrate disposing of the appeal of the complainant is not in accordance with law. This ground appears to be substantial. The learned District Magistrate has simply stated that there was trouble between the complainant and the accused, Gokhul, and that after reading the judgment and evidence he considered that the decision of the lower Court was correct and the compensation was rightly awarded, This is not disposing of the objection of the complair ant as to the order of the Magistrate directing compensation to be paid by the ecmplainant. The judgment of the District Magistrate has failed to comply with the directions contained in section 267 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which applies by reason of section 424 to an appellate judgment also.

It has, however, been contended that both these testions 267 and 424 of the Code do not apply to a judgment passed by an Appellate Court in an uppeal from an order directing the complainant to pay compensation.

There is no substance in this contention, Section 250, clause (3), expressly provides for an appeal to the District Magistrate from an order of a Magistrate of the Second or Third Class to payecmpensation to an accused percon. The appeal to the District Magistrate was, therefore, presented under Chapter XXXI, which lays down the procedure for an appeal "from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court:" (tide section 404 of the Code). Section 423 lays down the power of an Appellate Court in dealing with an appeal from a judgment as well as from an Section 424 relates to a judgment passed by an Appellate Court dealing with either an appeal from acquittal or conviction or an appeal from an order, such as the one in question. The District Magistrate was, therefore, bound to record a proper judgment, setting forth the points for determination, the objections of the appellant, his decision thereon, and the reasons for his desision, The judgment of the lower Appellate Court in the present case lacks in all the aforesaid details and ie, therefore, not in accordance with law.

Therefore, the orders of both the Courts below are bad in law and must be set aside, and the case sent back to the Trial Court to be disposed of in accordance with law, as was done in the case of Minhomal Lilaram v. Emperor (2) referred to above.

Statements recorded tefore monegar-Corroborative or substantive evidence.

A statement made by a person before the moneyar of a village scortly after the commission of a crime cannot be used as substantive evidence against an accused person tried for such offence as it is not a statement recorded on oath in the presence of the accused by a Magistrate empowered to take down evidence

The only use of such statements is to corroborate or contradict statements made on oath at the trial.

Trial referred by the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division, for confirmation of the sentence of death passed on the prisoners in Care No. 58 of the Calendar for 1921.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 453 and 459 of 1921 by the prisoners against the said conteness.

Messrs, L. A. Govind tragavi Iyer and S. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Prisoners.

Mr. J. U. Adan, Public Prosessator, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT .- The seven ascased have been sentenced to death for the murder of one Venkatasami Naioken of Nagarakalandai. The only evidence to connect them with the erims is the statement of prosecution witness No. 2, who says he ascompanied the decrased to Malayandipaliem on the day of his death. The evidence of prosecution witness No. 3, who says be also went with the deceased, is useless for the purpose of connecting these accused with the crime, since he stated at the trial that he ran away as soon as he saw five or six persons at the madam without recognising any of them, The joint statement (Exhibit E) that this witness and prosecution witness No. 2 signed before the moneyar ounno be used as sab tantive evidence of this witness against the assure as it was not a statement recorded on oath in the presense of the accused by a Magistrate empowered to take down evidence. See Enperor v. Oherath Choyi Kutti (1). The only use of such a statement would be to corro. borate or contradict statements made on cath at the trial The evidence of proseaution witness No. 2 is to the effect that, before he ran away, he saw the first accused beat the deseased with a stick on his right ear and that the second accused stabbed him with a spear on his head.

Os the body at the post morten about six ireised wounds and about thirty one stick marks were found, the spleen was also ruptured, nine ribs were broken, and the lungs were pierced by pieces of broken ribs, but no nark corresponding to the blow with a stick dealt in the region of the right ear was noted by the Sab-Assistant Surgeon, and it would have been natural to expect punctured wounds rather than incised wounds to result from the use of a spear. This witness (prosecution witness No. 2) told the monegar that the other five accused came running taking sticks. He did not then mention that they committed any act which contributed to the deceased's death. The evidence against accused Nos. 3 to 7 is thus obviously insufficient to support their convictions. The body was eventually found by the acting moneyar lying outside the pen of fifth accused with a dead goat beside The fifth assured's father and a small boy were lying in a hut inside the pen. It is not reasonable to suppose that, if the asoused killed the deseased at the place where prosecution witness No. 2 says he first met them (i.e.,) at the Madam near the hill, and under the sirenmstances spoken to by this witness, they would have taken the orrpse to the fifth assused's pen and left it there. If the murder was committed by others, or if the deceased who, as the Judge observer. was known to be a cattle thisf had been caught in the act of stealing a goat and beaten to death, it would have been natural that his body should have been found where it was. If the accused murdered him and wished to avert suspicion from themselves. and at the same time to provide some justification for their act in case of detection they would have left the body at a distance and brought a dead goat and placed it along side.

Apart from the improbability of the prosecution story in this respect, the evidence of prosecution witness No. 2 is not, in our opinion, so reliable that it would be safe to base the convictions of the first and second secused on his word alone. It is proved by Exhibit II that first accused's father made a complaint against this witness three years ago, and his statement at the trial as to the number and identity of the persons recog-

It cannot, in my opinion, be said that the place in which the opium was found is not one to which several persons had equal right of access. If that be so, however the case may stand on law, it must be extremely difficult to convict the petitioner on facts. I am of opinion that, on the whole, the conviction ought not to stand. I would set aside the conviction and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded. W. C. A.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s. 9C-Exclusive possession -Place used by several persons.

Where the place in which an article is found is one to which several persons have equal right of access, it cannot be said to be in the possession of any one of them.

Messrs. Yunus and K. C. Roy, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted of an offence under section 90 of the Opium Act, I of 1878, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. It is admitted that the opium was found on the roof of the petitioner's cook room. The question, therefore, arises, can it be said that the petitioner was in possession of the opium? Now, on this point a passage from the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Jog iban Ghose v. Emperor (1) has been cited:

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J .- The first accused in this ease was convicted of an offence under section 467 of the Indian Penal Code, in that he received Rs. 38. which were despatched by one Hari Lahanu Sonar to his son Bhila by money order, by indus. ing the accused No. 2 to sign as if he were Bhila. The accused was asked by the postman whether one Bhila was living in his village, and the assused No. 1 then told the postman that accused No. 2 was Bhila. Whereupon accused No. 2 signed the receipt for the money which came to the hands of the first assased. There was no dispute as regards the facts and consider. ing the relations between the Post Office and the public there would be extreme difficulty for the first accused to satisfy the Court that he had no dishonest intention or no intention to cause damage or injury to the public or to any person or that, generally, the provisions of section 463, Indian Penal Code, would not apply. I doubt myself whether the assused in a case like this would be even entitled to urge that be committed no offence because what he did only resulted in money going straight to his pocket which would have eventually been given to him when paid by the Post Office to Bhila. Speaking for myself, I should say that when the accused induced the postman to accept the signature of accused No. 2 as the signature of Bhila. and by that action got the money the offence was committed. I do not think that we should interfere with the finding of the Judge that the first assused did not tell Bhila that the money was received. If, immediately, after receiving the money from the postman, the first accused bal told Bhila Hari that the money which was despatched to him by his father in order that it might be paid to the first aceased had been received, then the proof of that fact could certainly be urged in mitigation of the panishment. I do not think for a moment that that fast, even if proved, would be sufficient to justify the Court in desiding that there was no evidence at all of the offence having been committed. I think, therefore, the con-

The next question is, whether the sentence imposed by the Sessions Judge should be interfered with. On general principles I am very loth to interfer with the sentences given by the lower Courts unless it can be shown that a sentence has been imposed without any regard to the facts of the case or the nature of the offence, or is so out of proportion to the facts proved that no Judge would reasonably impose it. Considering that the Judge was of opinion that the first assused did not tell Bhila Hari that the money was paid, and there was even evidence which made it probable that the second payment had been made, although he has given the accused the benefit of the doubt with regard to that fact, I do not think that the sentence which was imposed upon the first accused was one which should be interfered with. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal. SHAH, J.-I agree that the appeal must be dismissed. The point which presents some difficulty to my mind is, whether it is shown that the appellant asted fraudulently so as to bring the case within the scope of the definition of forgery, It is essential, in my opinion, that the prosecution ought to establish that the act attributed to the assused was fraudulent or dishonest. If, in the present case, for instance, after receiving money, it was clear on the record that he had given intimation of the receipt of money to Bhila, and that in substance and in effect the money was received by the accused on behalf of Bbile. speaking for myself, I should say that the conviction would not be right. is far from clear on this record that after receiving the money he ever informed Bhila of the fact as he would have done if the postal receipt was not dishonestly or fraudulently signed. Bhila and his father denied that any such intimation was given to Bhila. It appears from their conduct in making inquiry at the Post Office after the payment was made that Bhila was not informed of the fact. This omission on the part of the appellant supports the inference drawn by the Trial Judge as to the frandulent intention of the assused. On these grounds I think that KANDAMANI DEVI U. ESPEROR.

the conviction of the appellant is right; and the sentence cannot be said to be unduly severe or inappropriate on the facts of the ease.

A Sessions Judge has powers under the provisions of section 353, Crimical Procedure ' ode, to dispense with the personal attendance of a purda-nashin accused and permit her to appear by Pleader during the Sessions trial inasmuch as in the interests of justice, purda-nashin ladies should not be compelled to appear in public at least until they are convicted.

Mr. Sambasica Row, for the Petitioner.

ORDER,-The third accused is a Gosha lady and belonge to a respectable Zamindar family of Ghumerr. I am of opinion that the Sessions Judge has powers to dispense with the personal at endance of the accu-ed and permit her to appear by Pleader during the Sessions trial. Section 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empowers a Magistrate to do so and section 353 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which refers to the mode of resording evidence in trials, it eluding sessions trials, states that evidence shall be taken in the presence of the assused except where personal attendance is dispensed with in which case it shall be taken in the preserce of his Pleader. I do not think that there is anything in the Code to prevent the Sessions Judge from doing what a Magistrate is empowered to do as regards attendance by the assused and section 353 impliedly gives the power, as Chapter XXIII, which relates the trials before the High Court and Courts of Session, is included in section 353. in Emreior v. O W. King (1) it was held that the High Court has power under the provisions of section 353 of the Code of Criminal Proeedure to dispense with the attendance of the accused during the Sessions trial. In Raj Raieswari Debi v. Emperor (2) Imam and Ohapman, J.J., directed purdu-nashin ladies to appear by Pleader toth in the Magis. trate's and Sessions Courts, subject to their baving to appear in Court to hear sentence in case of echviction.

Having regard to the habits and sustoms of the country and the social stigma that attaches to Gosha ladies breaking purda, I think it will be in the interests of justice that they should not be compelled to appear in public at least until they are eonvieted.

On the merite, I think that, having regard to the nature of the evidence against the petitioner in the Committing Magistrate's Court, I will be exercising a proper discretion in allowing her to appear by Pleader and dispensing with her personal attendance.

JUDGMENT.

Macreco, C. J .- The accured in this care were convicted under rule 27 (5) passed by the Government order the powers conferred by section 188, sub section (1), of the Bombay District Municipal Act. The facts are correctly stated in the petition which the assueed has made to this Court in revision. I need not set them out again. The accused had asked for permission in the proper form to build on his own land. He got what is called a model reply on the 5th November 1920 "permission refused," and it is necessary to point out that, although that model reply purports to have been sent assording to the provisions of rule 27 (3), all that the Committee sould do was to pass a provisional order directing that, for a period, which shall not be longer than one mouth from the case of such order, the intended work shall not be proseeded with. On the face of it, this order refusing permission was for an indefinite period.

Under sub rule (4), a person who has given notice under sub rule (1) may proceed with his building, if the Committee within one month from the receipt of the notice given under sub rule (1) have neither passed orders under sub rule (2), nor is used under sub-rule (3) any provisional order or any demand for further particulars.

The Committee had not issued proper orders under either sub-rule (2 or sub-rule (3), and consequently the petitioner was entitled to build. After the petitioner received the order of the 5th November, he called on the Chairman of the Committee and requested him to give the grounds for and requested him to give the grounds for refusing permission. Thereafter, the petitioner was informed by a letter dated the 20th November 1920 that permission to build was refused because there was no existing metalled road there and none projected, and also that a bungalow there would lead to undesirable congestion.

We have been shown a plan of the petitioner's land, and it shows that on three sides, there is a Gawan or eatile track about ten or twelve feet wide. On the other side of the eatile track to the south is the property of Mr. Guzdar, and the petitioner alleges that permission for him to build was refused because Mr. Guzdar was desirous of buying up petitioner's land. However that may be, it appears to us that naither of the ressons given in the letter of the 20th November was justified by the circumstances of the case or by the rules.

A reference was made afterwards to byelaw 38 which provides as follows: "notwithstanding anything contained in rule 27 (4) no person shall commence to erect any building which would not front on a public street unless he, having duly obtained the approval of the Committee under rule 22 B, has constructed a street in accordance with the orders of the Committee providing access to the building from a public street."

Nothing is said in the bye law about metalled roads, and if the provisions of that bye law had been followed, the Committee might have called upon the petitioner to provide assess to his building from the public street. We think, therefore, that there was no justification for the conviction under rule 27 (5) as the petitioner had given notice as required by sub-rule (1). He had furnished the documents and afforded the information which was required of him, and no legal order had been served on him which would prevent him from building. We think, therefore, that the conviction was wrong and should be set aside, and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1838), ss. 239, 537-Joinder of charges-Same transaction - Misjoinder - Illegality.

The foundation for the procedure sanctioned by section 239, Criminal Procedure Code, is the association of two or more persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. [p. 333, col. 1.]

A series of acts, however, separated by intervals of time are not excluded from the purview of section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, provided that those jointly tried have been directed throughout to one and the same objective. [p. 333, Emperor v. Datto Hanmant Shahapurkar, 30 B. 49; 7 Pom. L. R. 633; 2 Cr. L. J. 578, relied upon.

Four persons were discovered committing theft, They ran away and lay in wait, at a short distance, for the persons who had surprised them. When the latter passed near the spot they were attacked by the thieves, and one of them was killed by two of the latter. Subsequently three more persons came up and joined two of the thieves in beating the companions of the deceased and thereby committed riot :

Held, (1) that the riot did not form part of the same transaction with the theft and the murder, and could not be tried jointly with those two offences; [p. 838, col. 1.]

(2) that the four persons who had gone to com. mit theft were prepared to use force in the event of any interference with them, and that the fatal assault on the deceased was made simply because he and his companions had prevented the thieves from taking away their booty; [p. 333, col. 2.]

(3) that the two acts were connected together by proximity of time, community of criminal intent and the relation of cause and effect, and they constituted the same transaction: [p. 333, col. 2.]

(4) that, therefore, they could be tried jointly at one trial. [p. 338, col 2.]

The disregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity such as can be remedied by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, nor can it be cured by the consent of the accused. [p. 333, col. 2.]

Mr. Philip Morton, for the Appellants, Mr. H. A. Berbert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- After hearing the learned Counsel for both the parties, we are of opinion that the trial held by the Sessions Judge is bad for misjoinder of charges and must, therefore, be quashed. The relevant facts, as alleged by the procesution, are briefly as follows .- On the night of the 22nd/23rd February 1921, Diwan Shab, upon receiving the information that four persons, tiz, Hakam Shah, Bugga Shah, Sharaf Shah and Walli Shah, had gone to out gram in his field, went out in purenit along with three persons. When Diwan Shah and his companions were at a distance of about 10 karams from the field, the four thieves who had been outting the gram left the field away. Thereupon Diwan Shah and his party collected the out gram and started back for the village, two of his companions carrying two bundles of gram. They had not gone very far, when the four thieves suddenly sprang up attacked them. Diwan Shah, who leading, fled into a field followed by Hakam Shah and Bugga Shah who knocked him down and beat him to death. Two of Diwan Shah's companions attempted to go to his resoue but they were prevented by Sharaf Shah and Walli Shah who attacked them with sticks. Thus beffied, the three comrades of Diwan Shah ran towards the village, and they were pursued by Sharaf Shah and Walli Shah. After they had gone about 400 karams they were met by the three accused, Hussain Shah, Waleyat Shah and Diwan Shah, who were coming up from the village with sticks in their hands. They were thus caught between two parties and were beaten by them with sticks.

Now there can be no doubt that three different offences were committed; namely, theft, murder and riot; and the question for consideration is whether they constituted one transaction within the meaning of section 239, Criminal Procedure Code. facts, as stated above, make it perfectly clear that the three accused, namely, Hussain Shab, Walayat and Diwan Shah, who same up from the village and joined with Sharaf Shah and Walli Shah in attacking the companions of the deceased Diwan Shah had nothing whatever to do with the offences of theft and murder. The foundation for the procedure sanctioned by section 239. Criminal Precedure Code, is the association of two or more persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end, and it is obvious that the three accused, who came from the village did not in any way associate with Hakam Shah and Bugga Shah who did not participate in the riot, We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding, and indeed the learned Government-Advocate admits, that the riot did not form part of the same transaction with the theft and the murder.

The question whether the offences of theft and murder were committed in the same transaction is a debatable one. It is to be observed that the same four persons are accused of both these offences, which, however, were not committed at the same place and were also separated by a short interval of time. But we have no doubt that a series of acts separated by intervals of time are not excluded from the purview of section 239, Criminal Procedure Code, provided that those jointly tried have been directed throughout to one and the same objective, Vide Emperor v. Datto Hanmant Shahpurkar (1). Indeed, it often happens that two or more offences, which are admittedly committed in the same transaction, are separated by intervals of time; and it is nowhere laid down that unless the offences are committed at one and same time, they cannot be included in one indistment. It seems to us that the four persons, who had gone to commit theft, were prepared to nee force in the event of any interference with them, and there can be little doubt that the fatal assault on the deceased Diwan Shah was made simply because he and his companions had prevented the thieves from taking away their booty. The two acts were connected together by proximity of time, community of griminal intent and the relation of esuse and effect, and they constituted the same transaction.

The result is that, while holding that the charges of theft and murder could be joined in one trial, we are of opinion that there should have been a separate trial with reference to the charge of riot. As laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Eubrahmania Ayyar v. King. Emperor (2) the dieregard of an express provision of law as to the mode of trial is not a mere irregularity such as could be remedied by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The prosedure of the learned Sessions Judge was illegal, and that illegality could not be enred by the consent of the accused. We are accordingly constrained to quash the proceedings and, accepting the appeal, we direct the Sessions Judge to try the accused separately in the manner indicated above.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1:60), ss. 109, 3:9, 381-Theft, abetment of-Abetment, what constitutes-Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 2:6, 237, applicability of.

To sustain a conviction of abetment of theft, it must be shown that the accused was engaged in a conspiracy with the principal offender for committing the theft, the mere fact that he was standing by the principal offender is not sufficient.

The provisions of section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code which are controlled by section 23%, only apply when, from the evidence led by the prosecution, it is doubtful which of several offences has been committed by the accused. If that evidence leads to one conclusion only the provisions of that section would not apply.

Application against an order of the District Magistrate, Dhanbad.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar, for the Petitioner, JUDGMENT .- The petitioner, who was charged with having committed an offence under section 372, Indian Penal Code, bas been convicted of an offense under section 381 read with section 104, Indian Penal Jone, and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month. In my view the conviction is uncustainable on two grounds: first, on the ground that the facts found by the learned District Magistrate do not establish that the petitioner absited any offence by the principal offender, and secondly, on the ground that he should not have been convicted under section 381, read with section 109, Indian Penal Code, when he was not charged with having committed that offence.

On the first point, the evidence against him is that he was standing by the thief. Now there is no evidence at all to lead one to the conclusion that he was engaged in any compiracy with the principal offender for the doing of the theft, and I do not think that on the evidence the learned District Magistrate should have some to the conclusion that he was guilty of abotting the theft. The learned Magis.

"I cannot agree that a man who comes with a thief to steal an article and stands by to receive that article, is not aiding and abetting theft."

Now the only fact deposed to by the witnesses is that he was actually standing by the side of the man who ultimately turned out to be a thief. The learned District Magistrate has assumed that he was standing by to receive the article and that he accompanied the principal offender knowing that he was out to steal an article. I am of opipion that the conviction is unsustainable on facts.

In the next place, he should not have been convicted of an offence under section 381 read with section 109 since he was not charged with having committed that offense. I dealt with this print at some length in the one of theor ini v. Enperor (1). I pointed out in that case that "section 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code is limited by the express provision of that section only to the case mentioned in section 236," that is to say, to a case where it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute. In such a esse cestion 237, Criminal Prosedure Code, authorises the Court to convict a person for an offence with which he has not been charged but for which he might have been charged under the provision of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code. 1 pointed out that section 236 which must control section 237 only applies when from the evidence led by the prosecution, it is doubtful which of the offeness has been committed by the petitioner. Now, in this ease if the evidence which has been led by the presecution leads to one result only, it caunot, in my view, be said that it is doubt. ful which of the offences has been committed by the petitioner.

I hold that the conviction is unsustain. able and order that the petitioner be set at liberty.

Criminal Procedure Code 'Act V of 1898), ss. 249, 431-Withdrawal of complaint against some accused, effect of-Revision-Acquittal-Magistrate, power of-High Court, power of.

The withdrawal of a complaint against one person out of several accused does not amount to a withdrawal of the complaint against others.

A District Magistrate has no authority to set uside an order of acquittal by a Subordinate Magistrata in revision or to act otherwise than as provided by section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Lode. A High Court can take action of its own motion and set aside an order of acquittal and direct a re-trial.

Application against an order of the Distries Magistrate, Sultanpur, dated the 1sth August 1921 setting aside an order of the Magistrate, Third Class, Sultanpur Tahail, dated the 1st August 1921.

JUDGMENT .- The complainant, Makh. dum, charged Jagannath bingh and three others with offences under sections 447 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code. One of the persons charged was a boy named Ankns. He subsequently filed an application, stating that as Ankus was a minor he did not want to proceed with the case against him and his name might be removed from the complaint. The Court treated the application as che for the withdrawal of a compoundable ease against Ankus and directed that he be acquitted. The other accused persons thereupon asked that the case should be treated as withdrawn against them also. The learned Magistrate, following the decision in Skyam Behari Singh v. Sagar cingh (1) beld that the withdrawal of the case against Ankue operated as a withdrawal of the case against the remaining accused and he acquitted them all.

Section 248 of the Code of Criminal Prosedore leys down that if a complainant, at any time before a final order is passed in any case, satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his ecoplaint, the Magistrate may permit him to withdraw the same, and shall thereupon acquit the accu-ed. If a complaint is, however, made against several persons and the withdrawal is asked for against only one of them on some grounds which the Magistrate considers to be sufficient, it is open to the Magistrate to permit withdrawal against that person. The complainant did not intend in this case to withdraw the complaint as against the other persons and there was no anfilient reason for the Magistrate to have arquitted them without trial. The withdrawal of a complaint against one person does not amount to a withdrawal of the complaint against others for, as pointed out in Chandan v. Emperor (2), a complaint of trespass against four persons amounts really to a complaint of four sets of trespass, committed more or less simultaneously by different persons. In one sense the act complained of is a joint offence, because it is committed together or in complicity, but in another sense it constitutee separate acts of by each trespasser. In Muthia Naik v. Emperor (3) it was held that the composition of an offence with one of several persons does not effect the acquittal of others. Tho view taken in Shyam Behari Singh v. Sagar Singh (1) and Ohandra Kumar Das v. Emperor (4) cannot, therefore, be accepted.

The learned District Magistrate, who est aside the order of acquittal of the present applicants in revision, had, however, no authority to pass an order to the prejudice of the accused or to act otherwise than as provided by section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The omission to issue a notice to the accused was merely an irregularity; but he could not set aside the acquital. If he wanted to set aside the acquital, it was open to him to have made a report to this Court to that effect. This Court can, however, take action of its own motion and restify the error by setting aside the acquittal and directing a re-trial.

The application is, therefore, allowed, in so far that the order of the learned District Magistrate is set aside, but in the exercise of the revisional powers of this Court, the order of the Trying Magistrate is also set aside and the case is sent back to him with a direction to try it against the accused other than Ankus in the manner required by law.

Malicious prosecution - Appellate Court differing with Trial Court - Discretion, exercise of.

Although a Court directing prosecution for malicious prosecution is endowed with considerable discretion, yet it is neither safe, nor desirable, on the part of an Appellate Court to conclude malice where there is a split of opinion on the point between the First Court and itself.

Application against an order passed by the District Magistrate, Motihari, dated the 24th October 1921, reversing that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Bettiah, dated the 31st August 1921.

Mesers. Shiveshwar Dayal and Brij Kishore Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT .- This is an application in Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction made by one Raghupat Sabai under the following circumstances. He charged early in this year two men with having committed theft in his They were arrested and were convisted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Bettiah; however, they appealed and as a result of their appeal the District Magistrate of Champaran came to quite a different conclusion to that which had been come to by the Sub Daputy Magistrate of Bettiah and allowed their appeal and quashed their convictions; but he did rather more than that, for he formed the opinion that the applicant had commenced these prosecution proceedings maliciously, and subsequently indeed he issued notice on the petitioner to show cause why a prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code, should not be instituted against him. I dare say that there may be something wrong in the applicant's behaviour, but at any rate his proceedings against the two men were of such a character that he was able to convince one Court that they were guilty, whilst another Court, which did not see the witnesses but was an Appellate Court, came to the conclusion that they were innocent. The matter is a very petty one, and where one sees split opinions of two different Tribunals, it may be taken as generally a normally safe guide to suggest that definite expressions as to the malice of either party are probably somewhat undesirable. Of course, it must be realised that in giving instructions for a prosecution to be instituted against a person on a ground that he himself instituted malicious prosecution, the Magistrate, who directs the prosecution, is endowed with considerable discretionary powers. At the same time, this Court should not hesitate to exercise discretion in its revisional jurisdiction whenever eireumstances seem clearly to justify its so doing.

I must accordingly set aside the order of prosecution on the above ground,

Article 1 (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not apply to suits to eject persons who are not in law non-occupancy tenants [p. 31', col. ',]

The right of a non-occupancy tenant can only be acquired under Chapter VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as that hapter does not apply to private (ziruat lands, no such right can be acquired in such lands [p. 310, col 1]

Therefore Article I (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act would not apply to a suit by landhold r for possession brought on expiry of lease of private zirant land [p 41, col 1.]

The mere fact that a person has been for a term a tenant of private ziraat land, and has not been a raivat hilding at a fixed rate, or an occupancy tenant, does not raise any presumption that he has acquired the status or the rights of a non-occupancy tenant. [p. 841, col. 1.]

JUDGM ONT.

Sta John Engs .- This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 21th July 1917, of the High Court at Patna, which dismissed the plaintiff's suit to eject the defendant No. 1, Janki Singh, from certain land in Bihar. The suit was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that it had not been brought within time. The land in question is small in extent and in value, but the question of limitation involved is of importance in Districts to which the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1937, applies.

The land in question is within the meaning of section 1:6 of the Bengal Tenancy Ast, 1885, proprietor's private land known in Bengal as khamar, nij, or nij jote, and in Bihar as siraat, nij. sir or khamat. The plaintiff is the proprietor of the land, as was his predecessor in-title before him. Janki Singh held the land as a tenant under a lease which had been granted by the predecessorin title of the plaintiff for a term of nine years, which expired on the 31st May 1912. On the expiration of the term the plaintiff demanded possession of the land, but Janki Singh refused to quit and give up possession, hence the suit in which this appeal has arisen. The suit was brought on the 5th December 1912 in the Court of the Munsif of Begusarai, in the District of Basgalpur. The only question which it is now necessary to consider is-Was the suit brought within time? That question depends on whether the period of limitation applicable in this case is that prescribed by Article (1) (a) of Schedule III of the Bangal Tenancy Act, 1285, which for suits to eject a non-occupancy raigat on the ground of the expiration of the term of his lease," is six months from the expiration of the term, or is that prescribed by the Article 139 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1905, which is twelve years from the determination of the tenancy. In his plaint the plaintiff alleged that the land in question was his khudkasht land, prayed for a declaration that the land was his khamut land, and that he was entitled to possession, and asked for a decree possession, and for mesne profits, In his written statement Janki Singh denied that the land was khamat khudkasht land of the plaintiff, alleged that plaintiff's elaim for a deslaration that the land was his khamat khudkasht was barred by limitation, and alleged that the land was raigati mal land in which he had a right of occupancy. It is to be noticed that Janki Singh in his written statement did not suggest that he was a non occupancy raigat or had any right of a non-occupancy raigat to resist the plaintiffs' suit to eject him. Janki Singh in his written statement was apparently relying upon a failure of the plaintiff at the trial to prove that the land was the plaintiff's

JAGARNATH DAS U. JAHEI EINGH.

private land as proprietor, his khamat siraat land.

The fifth issue as fixed by the Munsif was, "whether any part of the claim is barred by limitation."

In his judgment the Munsif stated that the fifth issue had been "left untoushed in arguments' by Janki Singh's Pleader, and he desided the issue of limitation against Janki Singh.

The seventh issue, which was considered by the Munsif to be the most important issue in the case, was not directed to the question of limitation, but had indirectly a bearing on that question : it was, "Whether the land in suit is the khudkasht of the plaintiff, or the raivati jots of the defendant first party?"

The Munsif's finding on that issue was that the land in suit was "khudkasht of the plaintiff and not raigati-icte of Janki Singh. It is not quite clear what the Munsiff precisely meant by " khudkasht of the plaintif." He probably meant land cultivated by the plaintiff as his own. In the plaint the land in question was alleged to be the plaintiff's khudkasht kamat landthat is, khudk sht private land of the plaintiff as proprietor. In his observations on the sixth issue the Mansif apparently treated sirant and "khudkasht of the Maha th (the plaintiff) alone" as convertible terms. In his observations on the seventh issue the Mansif mentioned section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1825, which relates to the recording by a Revenue Officer of a proprietor's private land (khamar khamat, siraat, etc.). On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the Munsif by his finding on the seventh issue meant that the land in question was the proprietor's private land (khamat, ziraat), and was not land in which Janki Singh had, or could have, a right of occupancy. The Munsif had the Bengal Tenancy Act, 18:5, before him, and he should have used the terms specified in the Act and not terms which might be ambiguous. The Munsif, on the 31st March 1914, gave the plaintiff a decree for possession, and dismissed his claim for mesne profits.

From that deeree Janki Singh appealed to the Court of the Sabordinate Judge of Monghyr on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the land was not khamat (private, ciraat) land of the plaintiff. The plaintiff entered a crossappeal against the dismissal of his claim for mesne profits. The Additional Subordinate Judge, before whom the appeals came, found that the land was khamat land, and that Janki Singh had no right to hold over, after the expiration of the term of his lease. In his judgment he said:-

it is faintly urged that the suit is barred by limitation. But there is nothing to show that the rule of limitation of six months applies to the case. Moreover, the character of the land being khamat, no limitation arises in the case," and he, on the 2 th March 9.5, made a decree dismissing Janki Singh's appeal, and in the cross-appeal decided that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profit and directed the Munsif's Court to assess the mesne profits in the executing of the decree The rule of limits ion which the Additional Subordinate Judge held did not apply, as the land was khamat land, was that of Article 1 (a) of Schedule II of

deeree of the Additional From the Sabordinate Judge Janki Singh appealed to the High Court at Calcutta. The appeal came on for hearing as a second apoeal before Mr. Justice Atkinson in the High Court at Patna. The only grounds of the appeal to which it is now necessary to refer are that the suit was barred by limitation; that the land in question was not khamat land, and that the Additional Subor inste Judge had erred in desreeing costs and meene profits. The ground that the land in question was not khanat land was concluded by the finding of fact of the Additional Subordinate Judge. The ground that the Additional Subordinate Judge had erred in decreeing costs and mesne profits does not appear to have been supported in the High Court. In the course of the arguments in the appeal, a decision of Mockerjee and Beacheroft, JJ., in Ganpat Mahton v. Richal Singh (1), in which they had held that Article 1 (a) of Schedule Ill of the Bangal Tenancy Act, 1c85, did apply to circut land and the decision of Woodroffe and Chaudhuri, JJ., (overruling a decision of Newbould, J., in Dwarkanuth Ohowdhury v. Toficar Rahaman arkar (2), in which they had held that Article 1 (a) did not apply to khamat lands were sited. Justice Atkinson rightly regarded the deeision of Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ, as academical, as those learned Judges had already in the appeal before them decided that the land there in question was not ziraat land. Mr. Jastice Atkinson agreed with the decision of Woodroffe and Chaudhuri JJ., that Article 1 (a) of Schedule III did not apply to private land of a proprietor, and by desree of the 7th February 1:17 dismissed Janki Singh's appeal with costs in the High Court, in the lower Appellate Court, and in the Munsit's Court.

From that decree of Atkinson, J., Janki Singh appealed under the Letters Patent of the High Court, and as the appeal raised a question of limitation of considerable importance, it was heard by a Fall Bench of the High Court at Patos, constituted of Sir Edward Chamier, C. J., Chapman, Mallick, Ros and Iwala Prasad, JJ. Tuese learned Judges differed on the question of limitation, the Ohief Justice, Mallick and Roe, JJ., holding that Article 1 (a) of Smedule II of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 188, applied, dismissed the suit as barred by lim totion. On the other hand, Chapman and Jwala Prasad, Jl., hell that the Article did not apply. Each Judge gave his own reasons for his conclusion, and some of the judgments contain much historical information.

Although the question as to whether this suit, when it was brought on the 5:n Desember 1912, was or was barred by limitation must depend on the true construction of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, as amended by the Bengal Tenacey (Amendment) Act, 1507, some historical information as to the origin and development in Bengal of rights of ocenpancy in agricultural land held by raigule year." is interesting. It appears that in the Permanent Settlement of Bengal the proprietor's private lands (zirant, demesne lands), which were kept for his own and his family's calcivation, as distinguished from his lands which were usually let to raivits, were resognised; that it seems to have been the policy of the Government for many years that no rights of osenpaney in such private lands should be acquired by raigats, and that the Legislature for the first time by section 6 of Act X of 1959 defined how a right of occupancy could be acquired. By section 6 of Act X of 1259 it was further enseted, "but this rule (as to sequiring a right of occupancy) does not apply to khamar, nii jote, or sir land belonging to the proprietor of the estate or tenure and let by him on lease for a term or year by year" Tue Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, repealed Act X of 1859, and by Chapter V it was enasted how rights of cesupancy could be asquired by raigats. Chapter VI apparently erested the "non-occupancy-raigats," and for the first time conferred upon him, a status and rights, but by sestion 116 of that Act it was enacted :-

"116. Nothing in Chapter V shall confer a right of occupancy in, and nothing in Chapter Vi shall apply to a proprietor's private lands known in Bengal as, khamar, niv or new ote, and in Bihar as civaat, niver or khimit, where any such land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year."

By section 40 of the Bangal Tenansy (Amendment) Act, 1907, section 116 of the Bangal Tenancy Act, 1885, was amended, and, as amended, it is as follows: —

"11. Nothing in Chapter V shall earfer a right of occapancy in, and nothing in Chapter VI shall apply to, lands acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, 18.4, for the Government or tor any Local Authority or for a Ballway Company, or lands belonging to the Government within a Cantonment, while end I lands remain the property of the Government, or of any Local Authority or Ballway Company, or to a proprietor's private lands known in Bangalas kha nar, nit, or nit jots, and in Binar as sirant, nit, sir or known where any each land is held ander a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year."

Section 45 of the Bangal Tenancy Act, 1855, which was in Chapter VI as it stood before the Amending Act of 1907 was passed, was as follows:—

"45. A suit for ejectment on the ground of the expiration of the term of a lease small not be instituted against a non-ossupancy raivat unless notice to quit has been served on the raivat not less than six months before the expiration of the term, and shall not be institut.

JAGARNATH DAS C. JANEI SIFGH.

ed after six months from the expiration of the term."

As that section contained a prohibition against instituting a suit unless a notice to quit had been served six months before the expiration of the term, it was properly inserted in Chapter VI and not in a Schedule of Limitations. Section 45 was repealed and the period of limitation which had been prescribed by it, was by the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1907, inserted in Schedule III, as Article 1 (a). As section 45 stood in Chapter VI, no one could have doubted that the non occupancy raigat to whom it referred was a person who had obtained the status and rights of a nonocenpancy-raigat by reason of his having been a person upon whom that status and those rights had been conferred by Chapter VI.

But it would appear from the judgments of the Chief Justice, and Mullick, and Roe, JJ., that those learned Judges considered that the effect of the repeal of section 45 and the insertion of Article 1 (a) in Sche dule III was to extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non occupancy raigats within the meaning of section 45. It is quite elear that Article 1 (a) did not create or confer upon any one the status or rights of a nonoccupancy raigat, and did not extend the limitation of six months to suits to eject persons who had not been non-occupancyraigats within the meaning of the repealed non-occupancy-raigat of The section 45. Article 1 (a) must be a person who, before his term had expired, had acquired the status and rights of a non-occupancy. raiyat.

The erueial question in this case is—When, if at all, and how, had Janki Singh acquired before the 31st May 1912 the status and rights of a non occupancy-raiyat? He had not acquired that status or those rights under Chapter VI, as that Chapter does not apply to the private lands of a proprietor, and it appears to their Lordships that it was only under Chapter VI that the status and rights of a non-occupancy-raiyat could be acquired.

The learned Chief Justice apparently was of opinion that Jarki Singh had acquired the status and rights of a non-occupancy.

"tenant" in section 3 (3) of the Bencal Tenancy Act, 18-5, read in conjunction with section 4 (c) of that Act. As the decisions of the Chief Justice deservedly command respect, their Lordshins will now, in conclusion, refer to sections 3 (3) and 4 (c), Section 3 (3) is as follows:—

"3. 'Tenant' means a person who holds land under another person, and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to thet person."

That is merely a definition. That definition applied to the position of Janki Singh during the continuance of the term for which he held the land, and did not apply to Janki Singh's position after his term had expired, as, then, in the circumstances of this case, Janki Singh became a trespasser liable to be ejected.

Section 4 of the Act is as follows:-

"4. There shall be, for the purposes of this Act, the following classes of tenants (name-ly:—

"(1) Tenure-holders, including under-tenure-holders;

"(2) raiyats, and

"(3) under raigats, that is to say, tenants holding, whether immediately or mediately, under raigats;

and the following classes of raivate (namely':-

"(a) raigate holding at fixed rates, which expression means raigate holding either at a rent fixed in perpetuity or at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity,

"(b) occupancy raivate, that is to say, raivate having a right of occupancy in the land held by them, and raiyats not having such a right of cosu-pancy."

Section 4 was merely a section specifying the classes of tenants to which the Act applied: it did not confer upon any tenant a status or ary right, that, was done by Chapters III, IV. V, VI and VII. Sections 3 (3) and 4 did not separately or conjointly create or confer upon any one any status or any right. With reference to (0) and (b) of section 4 the Chief Justice correctly said that Janki Singh was not a raiyat holding at a fixed rate or an occupancy raiyat, and then continued: "Prima facie he was a non-occupancy raiyat." But the Chief Justice did not suggest how or when Janki Singh had obtained the status and any right of a non-occupancy raigat in the land in ques-The mere fact that Janki Singh bad been for a term a tenant of private land (riract land) of the plaintiff and had not been a raignt holding at fixed rates or an occupancy raigat did not raise any presumption that he had asquired the status or the rights of a non-occupancy raigat. It is obvious from a passage which occurs towards the conclusion of his judgment that the Chief Justice doubted that it had been intended that Article 1 (a) of Schedale III should apply to such a case as this. passage is as follows: -

"I think it is doubtful whether the Legislature intended by the amendments made in 1967 to compel a landlord to sue for ejectment of a tenant of his private land within six months of the termination of the lease held by the tenant, and it may be that the result of holding that a raigat of siruat land is or may be a non-occupancy raigat will be that landlords will be placed in a less favourable position than the framers of the Act intended, but we must take the Act as we find it, and on a consideration of the Act, as it now stands, it appears to me that the only possible conclusion is that Article 1 (a) of Schedule III applies to such a suit as the one now before us."

Their Lordships are of opinion that Article 1 (a) of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Ast, 18:5, does not apply to suite to eject persons, who were not in law non-oscupancy raivate of the land, and consequently does not apply to this suit, and that the suit was brought within time, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed: that the decree of the High Court of the 2 tth July, 1917, should be set aside with sosts; and that the decree of the 7th February 1917 should be restored. Janki Singh must pay the costs of this appeal.

Hindu Law-Inheritance-Sons of same father-Sons of same mother-Futher different-Sons, status

Under the Hindu Law of Inheritance sons of the same father are regarded as brothers, a distinction being made between sons by different mothers. But sons of the same mother by a different father, though born of the same womb belong to a different family, and as such are outside the category of the class of heirs under the heading of 'brothers.' [p. 84?. col. [

Therefore, according to the Hindu Law a brother by the same father though by different mother is entitled to succeed in preference to a brother by the same mother but by a different father, as such a

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J .- In this appeal we are concerned with the property of Jairam. the son of Ramji by his first wife Sadi. Ramji re married and had a son Totaram by his second wife who also was named Sadi. Totaram is the plaintiff and claims the property of Jairam as his heir. The first wife of Ramji was divorced by him: and she re-married one Parsharam; the had two sons by her second husband. The defendant No. 1 is one of these sons and the other defendants are the sons of the other son. They elaim the property of Jairam as representing the brothers of Jairam born of the same mother. It seems to me clear on these facts that, according to Hindu Law, the sons of Parshram belong to a different gotra altogether, and can have no slaim as brothers to the property of Jairam, in preference to the claim of the plaintiff, who is admittedly the half-brother of Jairam. The lower Courts have rightly disallowed their contention. Before us a feeble attempt has been made to suggest that the word * * (sodara) used in the Mitakehara is indicative of the brothers born of the same mother, though rot the same father, I do not think that in the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section IV, paragraphs 5 and 6 (Stoken' Hindu Law Borks, page 445) where the subject of the brother's right to inheritance is dealt with, any thing beyond the difference between brothers of the whole blood and brothers of the half blood is indicated. The brothers there referred to are all sons of the same father The contention of the appellants seems to me to be opposed to the basis principles of Hindu Law as to inheritance, and there is no provision in the Mitaksbara or elsewhere for treating the sons born of the same mother after ber re marriage being treated as brothers born of the same womb for the purpose of inheritance so as to be included in the meaning of the word * * (bhratarah) used in the texts. For the purpose of inheritance, sons of the same father are brothers and there is a distinction made between sons by different mothers. But the sons of the same mother by a different father though born of the same womb belong to a different family and as such are entirely onteide the eategory of the elass of heirs under the beading of 'brothers'. It is not so much the meaning of the word * * (sodara) as the context, coupled with the basic principles of Hindu Law, that is against the defendants' contention. I have no hesitation whatever in holding that the view taken by the lower Courts is correct. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

from a judgment of Mr Justice Greaves, in which he has held, on an application by the respondents, that the award made against them by the Bergal Chamber of Commerce Arbitration Tribunal on the 18th July 1919, at the instance of the appellant, is rull and void. The contract between the parties was under on the 1st August 1918 for the sale of '19 bales of theeting No. 3841, 36 inches by 38 yards at Re. 1912 0 per piece; shipment November and December 1918, delivery within 60 days from the date of arrival, payment cash, 2 months' late shipment accepted."

The contract contained an arbitration clause in these terms: "Any dispute as to damage, difference, inferiority, short quantity or measure or defect or amount of allowance to be referred, at seller's option, to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or other Arbitration Tribunal as specified thereunder." The question of the true scope of this clause came up for someideration by this Court in the case of Chandmull Goneshmull v. Nirron

BADHA BAN U, KRUSHI BAN.

Munkwa Kabushiki Kaisha (1). We were then disposed to hold that Mr. Justice Greaves had placed an unduly narrow construction upon the arbitration clause, especially as to the meaning of the words "difference" and "inferiority." In that case, however, it transpired that there had been no dispute between the parties euch as would entitle one of them to invoke the aid of the arbitration slause. In the care before us, the buyer appellant had the matter referred to arbitration and his grounds of complaint were stated in these terms : " That the goods are not in terms of the contrast and are not covered thereby. All these goods and similar goods were originally sold by the importing firm to Sakdeo Ramprosad (their biniage' firm); after such sale, how can the importing firm sell these goods to other parties, treating such goods as the property of the importing firm ? Correct shipments are not proved and it is not proved that the quantity of goods sold here, had been purchased and provided for in Japan, others are in the statement bereunder." It is plain that some of these grounds of complaint do fall within the scope of the arbitration clause; but it is equally clear that the other grounds are beyond the scope of the arbitration clause. Consequently, the true position is that the appellant invoked the aid of the arbitrators on grounds some of which did, while the others did not, justify the exersise of their jarisdiction. When the matter went before the arbitrators, they delivered an award, which set out the grounds of complaint (as mentioned above) and then proseeded to formulate the desision: "We have carefully examined all evidence put before us and a vard sancelment of contract. Mesers. the Japan Uotton Trading Co., Ltd., sellers, shall pay to Mesers. Harmakhroy Ram Ohunder, bayers, the costs of this arbitration amounting to Rs. 125" It will be observed . that the award does not state either the fasts found by the arbitrators or the grounds for their decision. It is, consequently, impossible for us to hold that the award proceeded solely on those grounds which entitled the arbitrators to exercise their jurisdiction under the arbitration clause, and not on any of the grounds which did not afford a basis the feet that the complaints, as summarised by the appellant, are all set out as a preface to the award, indicates, prima facie, that the award is based on all the grounds. In these circumstances, when we cannot hold with certainty that the arbitrators acted exclusively on grounds within their jurisdiction, we must apply the principle that if the bad is not separable from the good, the whole is bad, and pronounce the award null and void: Skipworth v. Skipworth (2), Storke v. De meth (3), Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works (4), Thorp v. Cole (5).

The result is, that the decree made by Mr. Justice Greaves is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law - Widow - Alienation - Accessity - Maintenance-Reversioners when bound.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiffs in this case are collaterals of Sukbu Mal whose widow, Musammat Jas Kaur, has sold the land in suit for Ka. 2,000. The plaintiffs ask for a declaratory decree to protect their reversionary rights alleging that the sale was not for consideration and necessity. The land was sold on the 8th May 1915. The saledeed mentions that R . 465 had been received in advance and that the remaining Rs. 1,535 were to stay in deposit with the vendee to be taken later on for purebasing a house. As regards consideration there is the finding of the District Judge that receipt of Re. 465 is proved. As regards the remaining Rs. 1,535 there is really no dispute, as we find that on the 9th July 1915 Musammat Jas Kaur bought a house from one Nathu for Rs 2,300. She paid him Ra. 1,600 cash and, as she had no more money with her, she mortgaged the same house with possession on the same day to Nathu Mal for Ra. 700. Later on, on the 17th November 19 5, she bought another house from one Doanwant Singh for Rs. 1,-00, but instead of paying him in each she gave him the equity of redemption in the house which she had bought from and subsequently mortgaged to Nathu. This house which she bought from Dhanwant Singh she lets out to tenants. The lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's elaim holding that the alienation was for necessity. The plaintiffs have lodged a second appeal to this Court urging that a widow cannot alienate in order to provide for future maintenance or to improve the estate. Bakbshi Tek Chand argues that, before it can be held that this alienation was for necessity, it should be established by the defendants that the widow had not soffisient means to maintain herself. He points out that she owned a shop from which, according to the judgment of learned District Judge, she was realising a rent of Rs. 6 per month. He also points to the evidence of certain witnesses which is to the effect that Musam. mat Jas Kaur's husband left property worth Re. 20,000 or Rs. 30,000 and he urges that possibly she may have other land besides that now alienated or other means of income,

It has not, however, so far as we can diseaver, been stated or even suggested anywhere throughout the case that she has any property or means of income apart from the land now in suit and the shop above mentioned. Her husband died many years ago. The yearly rent of the land was only Rs. 33 while the yearly Government revenue with cesses was Rs. 25 15 0 so that there was only an annual income of Re. 12 from the land. This, added to the income of Ra 6 a month from rent of shor, gave the widow an income only of Rs. 7 s month. This was a miserably poor sum on which to maintain herself and we think the lower Courts are right in holding that the widow was forced to take some steps to provide herself with suitable livelihood. We cannot regard this merely as a case of alienating for future maintenance. We regard it as a case of a widow being forced to alienate by the fact of her income being insufficient to maintain her. It seems to us absurd to expect that a widow, knowing that she has not sufficient income to maintain herself, should be obliged first to ran into debt and then to sell the land in order to discharge the debt with interest added. If by first selling the land she ean so improve the estate as to provide sufficient for her own maintenance we regard this not merely as a prudent arrangement but also as a necessary arrangement. Then it is nrged that the widow might have sold half of the land and that it was not necessary to sell the whole. But the widow seems to have done the best she could for herself and even now she gets apparently only Rs. 6 a month from rent of shop and about Ra. 4.80 a month from the rent of the house which she has purchas. ed. We do not consider that this is at all an excessive sum on which to maintain herself.

We uphold the decision of the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs,

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31—Suit for rectification of written instrument—Plaintiff, what to prove—Mutual mistake—Mistake in mortgage-deed reproduced in decree passed on mortgage—Court, power of, to rectify decree—Notice—Knowledge—Constructive notice—Notice by title papers in one transaction, whether notice in independent transaction—Decision of Court, basis of—Lis pendens—Misdescription of property involved in litigation, effect of—Person having knowledge or notice of true state of things, how affected.

Courts of Equity do not rectify contracts, they may and do rectify instruments purporting to have been made in pursuance of the terms of contracts. [p 349, col. 2]

A plaintiff who seeks the assistance of a Court under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act for the rectification of a written instrument must clearly prove that there was a prior complete agreement which according to the common intention was embodied in writing, but by reason of mistake in framing the writing this did not express or give effect to the agreement, it being immaterial by whom the actual oversight or error was made which caused the expression to be wrong. [p. 349, col. 2; p. 351, col. 2.]

It may or may not be that a mutual mistake of the agents of the parties is always necessarily a mistake of the parties, but undbubtedly this is the case where the error is committed by a writer who acted as common agent of both parties in drafting the instrument [p. 35, col. 1.]

A decision of a Court should rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. [p. 262, col. 1.]

The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind [p. 852, col 2.]

Notice, even when actual is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge, but the same effects must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge [p. 352, col. 2]

Whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in accordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice, the rules concerning it no longer apply, the very fact for which it is intended as a substitute has been more accurately accomplished in another manner.

Notice to a purchaser by his title papers in one transaction will not be notice to him in an independent subsequent transaction, in which the instruments containing the recitals are not necessary to his title but he is charged constructively with notice, merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the chain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link tonsequently, when one is purchasing a particular pice of real estate, and his title-deeds recite a charge upon, or equitable interest in another piece in favour of a third party, such recitals would not affect him with notice of such charge or interest in the event of his subsequent purchase from the holder of the legal title to the other property. [p. 3 in, col 1.]

If there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree passed in a suit upon the mortgage, equity may go back to the original transaction and re-form both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties concerned [p. 855, col. 2.]

In the case of a mortgage suit the lis pendens does not terminate till the security has been realised for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt. [p. 3:6, col. 1.]

The principle that misdescription of property involved in a litigation is sufficient to render the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable cannot be invoked by a person who has either knowledge or notice of the true state of things. [p. 356, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT,

Mooseries, J.—The subject matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is a share of an estate which bore Tarzi No. 93 on the revenue roll of the Collector of Hughli about the middle of the last century and was held by two proprietors, Ramsundar Bose and Harachandra Bose. The amount of revenue originally payable was fixed at Rs. 2,998 1 10; this was subsequently reduced to Rs. 2,971-1-11

BEPIN ERISHNA BAY U. JOGESHWAR RAY.

when part of the estate was acquired for public purposes under the Land Acquisition Act. On the 29th September 1864, upon an application made under section 10 of Ast XI, 1859, the share of Harabardra B sa which amounted to 8 as. 16 gds. of the entire estate (treated as 16 as.) was formed into a separate account and was described in the books of the Collector as Tazzi No. 93A with proportionate amount of revenue payable fixed at R. 1,548 15.5. Thenseforward Tazzi No. 93 became what is termed the residuary share and included only a 7 as. 4 gds. share of the original estate which was vested in Ramsundar Bose. To put the matter briefly, before the separate account had been opened under section 10 of the Revenue Sale Law the expression Tauzi No. 93 would be the fitting description of the entire estate, but since the opening of the separate account was sanctioned by the Collector, the term Tanzi No. 93 could be appropriately used to specify only the residuary share 7 as 4 gds. of Ramsundar Bose, while the term Tatzi No. 93A could be properly used to designate only the separated share 8 as. 16 gds. of Harachandra Bose. It is necessary to mention at this stage that Harashandra Bose left foor sons, Kailas Chandra, Makhan. lal, Benilal and Brajalal, each of whom inherited one-fourth of his properties, that is, each took a 2 as. 4 gds. share out of the 8 as. 16 gds. share which belonged to their father. It also transpires that these four brothers acquired from the represent. atives of Ramenudar Bose, I an. 13 gds. 1 ka. 1 kr. share (out of the 7 as. 4 gde. share), namely, 1 anna. 1 gd. 1 ks. 1 kr. share by a conveyance dated 19 h September 1862, an 8 gds. share by another conveyance dated 9th September 1873, and a 4 gds. share at an execution sale. Each of the four sons of Harachandra Bose thus acquired, in addition to his ancestral share, 2 as. 4 gds. in Tauzi No. 93A, one fourth of 1 anna 13 gds. 1 ks. 1 kr. share, that is, an 8 gds. 1 ka, 1 kr. share in Tauzi No. 93. The shares thus vested in Benilal Bose (the third son of Harachandra Bore) in the two Taczis mentioned, passed on his death to his son Ram. chardra Bose, the predecessor-in-interest of the first seven defendants in the present itigation. We row some to three tracsfers elieved by Remuliandra Bose, which are of vital importance in the determination of the questions in controversy in this suit.

Ou the 7th February 1901, Ramohandra Bose executed in fayour of Jazatiswar Ray. the predesassor in interest of the plaintiffs in the present lingation, a mortgage-bond to secure a loan of Ra 5,999; the property hypotherated was described as his own share of 2 as. 4 ada, which his father had possessed in "T.z: No. 93." It will be observed that, although the share inherited by the mortgagor from his father was originally included in Tacz: No. 93 (which comprised the whole estate), at the date of the mortgage that Taczi had been broken up into two fragments, namely. Tauzi No. 93A (which was the separate erede larteerna ent beholeni bna toncoca of the mortgagor) and Tauzi No. 93 (the residuary estate which insluded only the share of Ramehandra Bose). Consequently, if what was intended to be morrgaged was the ancestral 2 as. 4 gds. share of the mortgagor, the description that it was a share of "Tanzi No. 13" (which, at the date of the transaction, had not the same connotation as it had prior to the opening of the separate assount) might well lead to confusion: -indeed, as will presently appear, this has been the root of the present litigation.

The next dosument executed by Ram. chandra Bose which deserves attention is a conveyance dated the 11th April 1911, in favour of Bipin Krishna Ray, the eighth defeudant in the present litigation. Tais deed of absolute sale recites in full the history of the estate No. 93 and explains how the separate account Tabzi No. 93A was carved thereout and the residuary es. tate Tanzi No. 93 was brought into exist. ence. The document not only sets out the enecessive steps whereby the vendor had acquired an in erest in both the Tauzis,in the former by right of inheritance and in the latter by right of purchase, -but further mentions that on the 20th April 1858, a paini settlement was taken by Benilal Bose (one of the representatives of Harashandra Bose, the bolder of the separate account Tauz: No. : 34) in respect of 1 anna 1 gd. 1 ka. 1 kr. share out of the 7 as. 4 gds. shere which constituted the residuary estate; this lease, though taken in the name of Benilal Bose, was appaBEPIN ERIBHNA RAY D. JOGESHWAR RAY.

rently for the benefit of himself and his three brothers. The deed finally resites two insumbraness created by the vendor, namely first, a simple mortgage to Jagadiswar Kay of the 2 as 4 gds. share in. berited by him from his father and somprised in Tarzi No. 93A, and, secondly, a eand tional mortgage dated 14th November 1909 in favour of J. F. Danean of Calcatta, with respect to an 8 gds. 1 ks. 1 kr. share of his Zamirdari interest and 5 gds. I ks. I kr. share of his pains interest; these, as we have seen, were comprised in the residency estate Tauzi No. 93. conveyance, after these recitals, proseeds finally to transfer to the purchaser, for a consideration of Rs. 1,000, the Zamindari right in 8 gds. 1 ks. 1 kr. share of the original Tauzi No. 97, deducting the 2 as. 4 gds. share out of the 8 as, 16 gds. share of Tauzi No. 93A, and the patri right in the 5 gds. 1 ks. 1 kr. share, together with a 2 as. 17 gds. 2 ks. 2 kr. share in certain resumed Chankidari Chakran (service) lands. It is plain from the elaborate resitals in this document that the vendor did not keep back from the purchaser any relevant information relating to the history of the title to the estate conveyed by him, and the purchaser was apprised how the original Tanzi No. 53 had been broken up into separate assount, Tauzi No. 93A, (which was subject to the mortgage in favour of Jagadiswar Ray) and the residuary estate Tanzi No. 93 which was transferred in part to the purchaser, subject to the pathi lease in favour of Benilal Bose and the mortgage in favour of Daugan.

The third document executed by Ramchandra Bose which requires examination is a conveyance dated 19th September 1911, in favour of Bipin Krishna Ray, the eighth defendant in this suit and the transferes under the conveyance dated 11th April 1911, whose provisions we have just analysed. This second conveyance purported to transfer the 2 as. 4 gds. share inherited by the vendor from his father and included in the separate account recorded as Tauzi No. 93A comprising the 8 as. 16 gds. share originally held by Harachandra Bose (the grandfather of the vendor) The consideration was stated to be Rs. 5,000 and the vendor declared that he had not ensumbered the subject matter of the sale by mortgage or otherwise. This is remarkable in view of the statement in the previous conveyance of the 11th April 1911, that this ancestral share of 2 as. 4 gds. had been mortgaged with Jagadiswar Ray. We shall now proceed to describe the succession of events which have brought the contesting parties into Court.

On the 13th August 1909, the executors to the estate of Jagodiswar Ray (who had taken the mortgage of the 7th February 19.3), instituted a suit against the mortgagor Ramonandra Bose to enforce the security. The original mortgage bond was filed along with the plaint and in a schedule thereto the properties bypotheeated were described as appertaining to lot Srirampore "bearing Tauzi No. 93, of the 16 as. share thereof defendant's own share is 2 as. 4 gds. and the proportionate annual revenue Rs. 412 for the as. 4 gds. share is payable into the Collectorate," as the annual revenue of the said mahal is Rs. 2,972-1-10. payable into the Collectorate of Hughli. The snit was not defended, and on the 16th December 1509, the usual mortgage. decree was made, directing the sale of the mortgage properties; the description sopied from the mortgage deed and incerted in the schedule to the plaint was re-produced in the schedule to the decree. The decree. holders applied in due course for execution of the mortgage decree, the sale proclamation was issued and the bid of Rs 5.000 offered by the desree holders assepted on the 18th September 1911. At that stage, the decree-holders appear to have discovered that the property sold had been described in the sale proelamation as Tauzi No. 93 and they seem to have apprehended that this might lead to future dispute as to what had actually been sold. They did not accordingly deposit the poundage fee and applied to the Court to re sell the mortgage property after a fresh sale proclamation bad been duly pablished. The petition embodied the following prayer:

Harachandra Bose (the grandfather of the "Be it declared that the property which vendor) The consideration was stated to had been mortgaged by the judgment. be Bs. 5,000 and the vendor declared that debtor was a 2 as. 4 gae, share of Tarsi.

BEPIN RRIBHNA BAY U. JOGESHWAR RAY.

No. 93 of the Collectorate of this District and the judgment-debtor having opened a seperate account, the said 2 as. 4 gds. share is now included within Tauzi No. 93 A. For this, the above 2 as. 4 gds. shase of Tanzi No. 93 A belonging to the judgment debtor is liable to be sold by austion for the mortgage debt. The deeree. holders pray that the sale proclamation to that effect may be published." the 27th Ostober 1911 the judgment. debtor ledged his objection against the issue of a fresh sale proslamation in an amended form and urged that as Tanzi No. 93A had been formed, not after but before the mortgage, the proposed amend. ment would be contrary to the terms of the mortgage-decree which was in exact conformity with the mortgage-deed, whereby the mortgagor had hypotnessted, not his interest in Tanzi No. 93 A but only such interest as he possessed at the time of the transaction in the residuary estate Tauzi No. 93. On the 3rd February 1912 the matter same up for consideration before the Execution Court. Meanwhile, the mortgagor had, as we have already seen, executed in favour of Bipin Krishna Ray the conveyance of 19th September 191: which purported to transfer to him the 2 as. 4 gds. share of the vendor in Tanzi No. 93A deseribed as free from eneumbrances. Bapin Krishna Ray accordingly intervened in the execution proceedings; he contended that his position could not be prejudised by a summary order for amendment of the decree and the sale proclamation, and claimed the protection accorded to a bonz file purchaser for value without notice. The Execution Court held that the remedy of the decree holders was to obtain a rectification of the mortgage instrument and of the mortgagedeeree and that an amended sale proclamation could not be issued until such rectifisation had been made. The result was on the 3rd February 1912 the Subordinate Judge dismissed the application for sale of 2 as. 4 gds. share in Tauzi No. 93 A on the basis of an amend. ed sale proclamation. On the 27th Feb. ruary 1914 the executors to the estate of the mortgagee instituted the present suit for rectification of the mortgage dated 7th February 1903, and for incidental reliefs. The first seven defendants were the representatives of the mortgagor, Ramohandra Bose, who had died in the interval in the early part of the year 1913, and the eighth defendant was Bepin Krishna Ray who had taken a conveyance from the mortgagor on the 1th September, 1911. The representatives of the mortgagor did not enter appearance and the claim was contested by the eighth defendant alone. The nature of the objections raised by him are indicated in the isages which were framed in the following terms:

I. Is the suit maintainable in its present form and have the plaintiffs any cause of action for the suit?

2, is the suit within time?

3. Is the suit bad for misjoinder of parties and esuses of action as well as non-joinder of necessary parts?

The Subordinate Judge who tried the case in the first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation and did not express an opinion upon the merits. Upon appeal to this Court, Fletcher and Huda, JJ., held that as the question of limitation was not apparent on the face of the record, the case should go to trial on all the issues that had been framed in the suit between the parties. The appeal was accordingly allowed and the case was remanded for reconsideration. The Subcrdinate Judge has now held that the 2 as, 4 gds. share of Ramehandra Bose which at the date of the mortgage transaction was comprised in Tauzi No. 93A was really intended to be mort-gaged; and that the contesting defendant was not a bona fide purchaser of that share for value without notice. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has decreed the claim in the following terms:—

"It is declared that the 2 as. 4 gds. share in the Mouzas Nij Serampur, Gangarambati and Habra in lot Serampur comprised in Tauzi No. 934 of the Hughli Collectorate owned by the deseased Ramshandra Bose was charged with the principal and interest on the mortgage-bond dated 24th Magh 1309 and that the description of the propthe bond in WAR and the property really intended to be mortgaged by it was the said share in Tauzi No. 93 A: the mortgage bond and the decree in Suit No. 103 of 1909 be rectified assordingly."

The contesting defendant has on the present appeal assailed the decision of the Subordinate Judge as erroneous both on the facts and the law. On his behalf, we have been pressed to hold that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that what was intended to be hypothecated by the mortgagor and to be assepted as security by the mortgages was the 2 as. 4 gds. share held by the borrower Ramehandra Bore in the separate account Tauxi No. 93A. It has further been urged in support of the appeal that, even if the alleged contract be established, the mortgage instrument cannot be restified at this stage, after the security had merged in the decree, and the property had passed into the hands of a stranger who elaimed to hold bong fide purchaser for value without notice. The principles to be borne in mind in the determination of the questions thus raised are set out in section 31 of the Specific Relief Act:

When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, a contract or other instrument in writing dues not truly express their intention, either party, or his representative in interest, may institute a suit to have the instrument restified; and if the Court find it clearly proved that there has been fraud or mistake in framing the instrument, and ascertain the real intention of the parties in executing the same, the Court may in its discretion restify the instrument so as to express that intention, so far as this can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons in good faith and for value."

The first point for consideration is, whether, through a mutual mistake of the parties, the mortgage instrument in this case does not truly express their intention; in other words, the plaintiffs who seek the assistance of the Court for the restification of the written instrument must elearly prove that there was a prior complete agreement which according to the common intention was embodied in writing, but by reason of mistake in framing the writing, this did not express or give effect to the agreement. As James, V. O., tersely expressed the sabstance of the matter in Mackensie v. Coulson (1) Courts of Equity do not restify contracts, they may and do restify instruments purporting to have been made in pursuance of the terms of contracts." To the same effect are the observations of Ohelmsford, L. O., in Fowler v. Fowler (2): "The power which the Court possesses of re-forming written agreements where there has been an omission or insertion of stipulations contrary to the intention of the parties and under a mutual mistake, is one which has been frequently and most usefully exercised. But it is also one which should be used with extreme care and caution. To substitute a new agreement for one which the parties have deliberately subscribed ought only to be permitted upon evidence of a different intention of the elearest and most satisfactory description, Lord Thurlow's language is very strong on this subject; he says, the evidence which goss to prove that the words taken down in writing were contrary to the concurrent intention of all parties must be strong, irrefragable evidence; Shelburne v. Inchiquin (3). And this expression of Lord Thurlow is mentioned by Lord Eldon in Townshend (Marquis) v, Stangroom (4) without disapprobation. If, however, Lord Thurlow used the word 'irrefragable' in its ordinary meaning, to describe evidence which cannot be refuted or overthrown, his language would require some qualification; but it is probable that he only meant that the mistake must be proved by something more than the highest degree of probability, and that it must be such as to leave no fair and reasonable doubt upon the mind that the deed does not embody the final intention of the parties. It is olear that a person who seeks to restify a deed upon the ground of mistake must be required to establish in the elearest and most satisfactory meoner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued consucrently in the minds of all parties down to the time of its execution, and also must be able to shew exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought. For there is a material difference between setting aside an instrument and restifying it on the ground of mistake. In the latter case, you can only ast upon the mutual and concurrent intention of all parties for whom the Court is virtually making a new written argee. ment." The true position than is, that in every case where rectification is sought, it must clearly and satisfactorily appear that the precise terms of the contract been orally agreed upon and that the writing afterwards signed failed to be, as it was intended, an execution of such previous agreement, but, on the contrary, expressed a different contract. Tested from this point of view, the case for the plaintiffs is abundantly made out. In the first place, there is reliable oral evidence of the negotiations antecadent to the execution of the mortgage instrument, which shows that what was intended to be offered accepted as scenrity was the 2 as. 4 gds. ancestral share of the mortgagor in the original estate Tauzi No. 93 which at the time of the mortgage was part of the separate account Tauzi No. 934; oral evidence was plainly admissible for this purpose Balkishen Das v. W. F. Legge (5), Jiwraj Singhii v. Norwich Assurance Co. (6). In the second place, we have the admission mortgagor in the сопунуваен of the executed by him on the 11th April 1911 that he had mortgaged to Jagadiswar Roy the 2 as. 4 gds. share obtained by him from his father in Tauzi No. 93A. In the third place, the surrounding eireum stances point to the same conclusion. the date of the mortgage, the mortgagor did not possess a 2 as 4 gds, share in what was then Tanzi No. 93, that is, the residuary estate To hold that, notwithstanding this circumstance, he professed to hypothecate a share in excess of what he owned in fact, would be to attribute to him a design to d-fraud the mortgagee; there is no indication that he harboured such intention; on the other hand, the subsequent admission contained in the conveyance of the 11th April 1911 militates against a possible theory of fraud. Consequently, if we look at the surrounding eirsum tanses existing when the contract was entered into, the situation of the parties, the subject-matter of the contrast, the provisions and expreseions of the instrument, and if, further, we call in aid the acts done under the instrument, and contemporaneous writings made between the parties near or subsequent to the time when the deed was executed, we cannot but come to the conclusion that the evidence is clear and convincing that the mortgage instrument does not correctly describe the property which the mortgagor and mortgagee agreed should be given and accepted as security. Here then is an instance, not of mistake as to the identity of the property itself, but of a misdescription of it in the written instrument. This is precisely the class of cases where re-formation is decreed, provided the mis take was mutual: Walden v. Skinner (7), Adams v. Handerson (8), and examples are by no means rare where correction has been made in the description of the premises in deeds, mortgages, conveyances, particularly mistakes in the number of the township, section, lot, block, boundary line, or street. That the mistake was mutual in this case eannot we think be seriously disputed. Both parties, as is amply clear on the evidence, had the common intention that the 2 as. 4 gis. shere of the mortgagor inherited by him from his father should be hypotheested. That share, at the time of the transaction, was included in Tarzi No. 93A and not in Tarzi No. S3. The writer of the deed, bowever, described it as included in Tatzi No. 93. There is no direct evidence to show how this error was brought about, nor is it recessary to indulge in epeculation on that point. The only question is, whether the mistake was mutual, that is, a mistake reciprocal and common to both parties; in other words, whether each alike laboured under the same misconcep. tion in respect to the terms of the written instrument. To put the matter consider, was there a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistaken supposition that it was rightly expressed. The answer must be in the affirmative; for thie, it is not necessary to hold that a mutual mistake of the agents of the parties is always necessarily a mistake of the parties; but undoubtedly it would be in the case where the error was committed by a writer who acted as common agent of both parties in drafting the instrument. The essence of the matter is that, mutuality of mistake might arise from the fact that the mistake was made by a writer who acted as mutual agent of both parties in reducing the contract to the form of a written instrument. Where there is unilateral mistake, restification is refused on the ground that, if the Court were to re-form the writing to make it accord with the intent of one party only to the agreement, who averred and proved that he signed it as it was written, by mistake, when it exactly expressed the agreement as understood by the other party, the writing when so altered would be just as far from expressing the agreement of the parties as it was before, and the Court would have been engaged in what would be a singular task for a Court of Equity to undertake, namely, doing right to one party at the expense of a precisely equal arong to the other. such consideration obviously arises in cases of the type now before us, for it cannot be arged here that in granting relief to the plaintiff on the ground of his mistake, the Court would be imposing upon the other party the erroneous conception of his opponent. It may further be added that if the theory be adopted that the mistake was brought about deliberately by the mortgagor, his conduct might be deemed fraudulent, so that on establishment of fraud the mortgagee might claim restification mistake or no mistake. Consequently, where the defendant is shown to have been aware not only that the instrument did not express the real agreement but also that the plaintiff was ignorant of the disererancy between the instrument and the agreement, the case is clearly one for re-formation ! Olark v. G. dwood (9), Lovery v. Smith (10), Corley v. : t. ford (Lors) (11), Tucker v. Bennett (12), there is thus no except from the consinsion that the eireum. stances of the case before us attract the operation of the rule that, in order to justify restification there must be proof of a common intention different from the expressed intention and a common mistak n supposition that the intention is rightly expressed in the instrument; it matters not by whom the actual oversight or error was made which caused the expression to be wrong.

We have next to consider, whether the Court should refuse to rectify the mortgage instrument on the ground that restification will prejudice the acquired by a third person in good faith and for value. The Subordinate Judge bas answered this question against the eighth defendant. In his view, the purchase of the mortgage property by the contesting defendant was made neither in good faith nor for value. The evidence as to the pay. ment of consideration has been placed before us and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge bas been criticised on the ground that he has rejected postive testimony on mere suspicion, a course emphatisally disapproved by the Judicial Committee on more than one ossasion; as ob erved by Sir Lawrence Jenkine in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijcy Bingh (13) and by Lord Shaw in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (14), the decision of the Court should rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony; this follows the earlier dicta of Lord Westbury in Steemanchunder Dey v. Gopaulchunder Chuc erbutty (15) and Lord Hobbouse in Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (16). There is sonsiderable force in this contention. The evidence of payment of consideration by cheque on the Chartered Bank cannot be brushed aside, and there is no solid foundation laid in the evidence to support the hypothesis that the purchaser received back the money from the vendor. If that theory had been satisfactorily made out, there would be no real transfer at all; the transaction could then have been branded as fictitious, brought about by conspiracy between the vendor and the purchaser with a view to throw an effective obstacle in the way of the mortgagee. But the evidence does not prove conclusively that the sale was colourable, although the genuineness of the transfer is undoubt. edly open to grave suspicion. It is need. less, bowever, to diseass further, whether the transfer was for value, because there is no room for serious controversy that the purchase cannot be deemed to have been made in good faith. There is no satisfactory evidence that the eighth defend ant made the usual enquiries at the time of his alleged purshase. We have, further, the significant fact that the conveyence which he had taken five months earlier on the April 1911 actually contained a resital that this ancestral share of Ramaheen mortgaged to chandra Bose had Jagadiewar Ray. Direct evidence is not available to prove that he remembered this recital when he took the second conveyance on the 19th September 1911. If there had been such evidence, the proof of knowledge would have been at least as effective as notice and would thus have been completely destructive of the plea of purchase in good faith. The conception of notice was introduced into law and the rules concerning it were established, from considerations of policy and expediency based upon the common experience of mankind. Notice, even when actual, is not necessarily equivalent to knowledge; but the same effects must be attributed to it which would naturally flow from knowledge. It is treated as a representative of, or substitute for, actual knowledge, and is, therefore, in its essential nature inferior to knowledge. It necessarily follows that whenever a party has obtained a full knowledge, although not in assordance with the rules which define the nature of notice and regulate the mode of its being given and received, there is no longer any need of invoking the legal conception of notice; the rules someerning it no loger apply; the very fact for which it is intended as a substitute has been more assurately assump. lished in another manner. To som up in one statement, if the party has in any way obtained the full knowledge, those same results must necessarily and even in a higher degree, be attributed to it—the very substance itself - which are, from motives of general policy, attributed to notice as its representative and substitute. But it is not necessary in the present case to establish that the sontesting defendant had actual knowledge of the existence of the mortgage, for it is plain that the resital in the conveyance accepted by him on the lith April 1911 did in law constitute constructive notice. I am not unmindful that the conveyance of the 11th April 1911 related to a share of Tauzi No. 93 whereas the convey. ance of the 19th September 1911 was in respect of a share of Tazzi No. 93A two Tauzis, however, were not essentially distinet properties within the meaning of the well known principle enunciated by Lord Redesdale in Hamilton v. Royse (17) and quoted with approval by Smith, M. R., in Tressilian v. Oaniffe (18): "If a man purchases an estate under a deed, which happens to relate also to other lands not comprised in that purchase, and afterwards purchases the other lands to which an apparent title is made, independent of that deed; the former notice of the deed will not of itself affect him in the second transaction; for he was not bound to earry in his recollection those parts of a deed which had no relation to the particular about, purchase he was then to take notice of more of the deed than affected his then purchase." The principle in essence is that notice purchaser by his title papers in one transastion will not be notice to him in an independ. ent subsequent transaction, in which the instruments containing the recitals are not nesessary to his title; but that he is charged constructively with notice, merely of that which affects the purchase of the property in the shain of title of which the paper forms a necessary link. Consequently, where one is purchasing a particular piece of real estate, and his title-deeds recite a charge upon, or equitable interest in, another piece in favour of a third party, such resitals would not affect him with notice of such charge or interest, in the event of subsequent purchase from the holder of the legal title to the other property. He is not presumed to carry the knowledge thus imputed to him in the first transaction in his memory until the second purchase has been effected. The reason and limits of this rule were lusidly put by Rogers, J, in Boggs v. Varner (19), when he was asked to receive in evidence recitals in the title papers to a different piece of property from that in suit with a view to sharge a purchaser with notice of any antecedent unregistered instru ment or an equitable interest : "The evidense would lead to dangerous consequences, for it is impossible for any one to recollest the regials in deeds under which he may elaim. Let this be held to be admissible and competent to affect a subsequent purchaser with notice, it would follow that no man can safely purchase until a most careful examination and inspection of every deed to which he may be a party and under which he claims," The case before us is obviouly distinguishable and is not affected by these considerations. Under the Revenue Sale Law, notwithstanding that a separate account has been forened, the separate account and the residuary estate continue ultimately liable to the Sta e for the entire revenue, and in certain specified contingencies the entire estate is liable to be exposed for sale by the Revenue Authorities for the realisation of arrears. Consequently, in order to trace the history of either fragment of the estate, an examination of the antecedent dealings. in respect of both would be undertaken by the prudent investor. Thus, oridinary eireumstances, under KOOW. ledge acquired "in course of transactions with regard to either fragment of the estate may well be deemed as asquired in source of transactions with regard to the same property" or "in the investigation of the same chain of title. " The conclusion thus appears inevitable that the contesting defendant is not entitled to the protection extended to a pushaser in good faith and for value.

Finally, it has been urged, as a last resort on behalf of the contesting defendant, that even though it should be elearly established that through the mutual mistake of the parties to the mortgage contract, the instrument in writing did not truly express their real intention, the Court sannot, at any rate the Court should not, in its discretion, restify the mortgage-deed, inasmuch as a decree has already been made thereon by a competent Court. Such decree, it has been argued, has extinguished the mortgage-security, and reformation at this stage would in essense be restification of the decree of one Court by another, contrary to well established principles. In support of this agrament, reference has been made to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (20) and Matru Mal v. Durg: Kunwar (21), and of this Court in adho Misser v. Golab Singh (21), Jogeswar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (23), Chand Mea v. Asima Banu (24), Shonda Singh v. Dowlat Boy (25) and Kusadhai v. Braia

Mohan (26). Not one of these desisions, it has been conceded, is directly in point, and the which evente led up litigation in each of these cases bear no analogy to those antecedent to the present suit; but an attempt has been made to invoke the aid of the general principles which, it is said, may fairly be extracted from the cases mentioned. In Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (20) Viscount Haldane observed that the effect of a decree made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for the of mortgage property is to substitute the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage which are thereupon extinguished. This principle which was also recognised in Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (21) olearly does not touch the question before us, namely, the competence of a Court to direct restification of a mortgage instrument when the elements specified in section 31 of the Specific Relief Act have been established. No doubt, when such restification has been made by order of Court, what the effect thereof may be on the deeree previously made is a question which we shall presently have to sonsider. In Sadho Misser v. Gulab Singh (22) it was ruled that the only ways in which a decree may be set aside by a party thereto are by appeal, by proceedings under section 108, Civil Pro esdure Code (1882), and similar sections, and by application for review; if the deeree is not tainted by fraud, no suit lies to set it aside. In that case, an amendment had been made in the pleadings without notice to a party who had not entered appearance in the suit, and a decree was ultimately made in accord. ance with the amended pleading. The absent defendant thereupon instituted a suit to set aside the decree on the ground that as he had not been served with notice of the applition for amendment of the plaint, he was not bound by the deeree and was entitled to treat it as not affecting his rights. Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ., held that as no attempt had been made to set aside the decree as provided by law, the suit could not be maintained. In Jogeswar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (23) it was held that a suit lies in a Civil Court to restify a mistake in a decree. It appears that in a previous mortgage suit, a property which was correctly described in the plaint as property No. 4 was by mistake described as property No. 3 in the written statement. This property was ultimately released as to be foreelosed, but was liable described as property No. 3 in the judg. ment, and the error was reproduced in the decree. A suit was thereupon instituted for restification of the error. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On appeal to this Court Mitra, J., was pressed to follow the rule recognised in Ainsworth v. Wilding (27) and to hold that the suit could be maintained for rectification of the error. This contention was overruled. On appeal under the Letters Patent, Maelean, C. J., (Pargiter, J., concurring) reversed this decision and held that the suit lay to restify the mistake in the decree. The Chief Justice pointed out that the suit was of a civil nature within the meaning of section 11, Civil Procedure Code (1882) and was cognizable by a Civil Court, as there was no enastment in force to bar the suit, In Chand Mea v. Asima Banu (24) Ghose and Pargiver, JJ., referred to the decisions in Sadho Misser v. Gulab Singh (22) and Jogeswar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (23), and held that it could not be broadly laid down that any error in a decree may be challenged by a separate suit. There a deeree for ejectment had been made in a suit for rent, though there was no prayer for ejectment in the plaint. The defendant applied for review of judgment, but was unsuccessful. He then instituted a suit to set aside the deeree, The Court held that, in these eireumstances, a separate suit was not maintainable to set aside a decree not tainted by fraud, obtained in the presence of both parties and apparently conclusive between them. In Bhonda Singh v. Dowlat Roy (25). Brett and Carnduff, JJ., referred to the earlier cases just analysed and held that a suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court for amending the judgment and deeree previously passed in a suit between the same parties by another Civil Court of competent jurisdiction, on the ground that a mistake had been made by the Judge in his judgment It was observed that as the and desree. Court had jurisdiction and authority to make the decree actually passed, another suit could not be instituted to set aside or modify that decree on the ground that the Judge had committed an error; in support of this view, reference was made to the remarks of the Judicial Committee in Srs Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (28). In Kuso that ٧. Mohan (26) Jenkine, C. J., held that though a decree can be set aside by suit on proof of fraud of the required character, a suit does not lie to set seide a decree in a previous suit on the ground that the Judge in passing that decree had made a mistake. The decision in Jojeswar Atha v. Ganga Bishnu (23) was distinguished : it was also explained that the case of Ainsworth v. Willing (27) was an instance of a consent decree and consequently belong to the class of decisions typified by Hudlersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (29) and Wilding v. Saunderson (30). These saces show that an order made in an action by consent and based upon and intended to earry out an agreement come to between the parties, can be set aside on any ground (sush as mistake) on which an agreement in the terms of the order could be set aside. But these cases do not show that a decree after contest can be set aside or rectified in a fresh suit on the ground that the Judge was mistaken though his desree accurately expressed his intention: Presion Banking Oo, v. Allsup (31), Jenkins, C. J., added that if the alleged mistake of a Judge is to furnish a disappointed litigant with a fresh starting point for keeping his opponent in Court, then his misfortune would be gravely increased to the public detriment. These principles are elearly inapplicable to eases of the type now before us. Here the question of fundamental importance, stripped of all technicalities, is, whether the mutual mistake of the parties to the mortgage transaction manifested in the mortgage deed, which has extended into judicial proceedings, automatically as it were, without mistake on the part of the Judge, is still espable of rectification. On principle, the answer should elearly be in the affirmative, for, as Neville, J., observed in Thompson v. Bickman (32), to grant relief by way of restification where the error has erept into one document and refuse it where it is embidied in two, is inconsistent with equitable principles, for equity regards the substance rather than the form of a transas. tion. There is no substantial reason for instance, why we should not hold that where the same mutual mistake has been repeated in each one of a chain of conveyances, under such eirenmetances as to entitle any one of the purchasers to a reformation as against his immediate vendor, equity may work back through all, and entitle the last purchaser to a reformation against the original grantor. Similarly, it may be held as a general rule that if there is a mutual mistake in a mortgage in the description of property and the same mistake is reproduced in the decree, equity may go back to the original transaction and re-form both the mortgage and the decree so as to make them conform to the intention of the parties concerned; and this view was actually adopted in Balaprasad v. Kanoo (33). We do not overlook, however, that if the desree has been exesuted and title has passed to a purchaser, fresh considerations may arise and questions of some nicety which require examination from a new standpoint may prerent themselves solution. It may be contended, for instance, in such a case where the purchaser did not intend to buy land other than that described erroneously in the mortgage; that it would not be fair to restify the salecertificate. In such a contingency, comprehensive relief by re-formation of the description running through all the papers in the judicial proceeding may well have to be refused; the proper course for the party aggrieved may be to obtain re-formation of the mortgage and to institute new proceedings for the enforcement of the restified instrument. Cases of this description may give rise to questions of great complexity and have led to a marked divergence of judicial opinion in the Courts of the United States, as is amply indicated by the notes to the decisions in Stevart v. Wilner (34), Dillart v. Jones (35), Fisher v. Villamil (36). It is not necessary, however, for our present purpose to attempt an exhaustive formulation of the prineiples which may have to be invoked when the mutual mistake has been refrom porduced the mortgage-deed the mortgage deeree and thereafter into the certificate granted on the consequent public sale. The case before us is fairly simple; the parties have not yet reached beyond the stage of the mortgage-decree and the commencement of execution proceedings thereor. We are thus not called upon to restify the sale-certificate granted to a purebaser; and it cannot be urged that a decree granting such drastic relief the eale certificate rectification of would invest the purchaser with title to property which was hever advertised, offered for sale, or sold to him, and which might have been purchased by others at a bigber figure, had it been correctly deseribed in the sale proclamation. We are sorrequently of opinion that the mortgageinstrument should be rectified and that on the basis thereof similar restification should be made in the pleadings in the mortgagesuit, in the mortgage deerse and in the proceedings for execution thereof, which a result of the suspended 8.8 order of the 3rd February 1912 and will now stand revived and after amendment will be continued in assordance with law: Ct. The appellant cannot have any legitimate grievance against the application of the doctrine of lis pendens because the principle of the decision in Loke Nath Sahu v. The conclusion follows that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is substantially correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Sabordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 135 of 1919 (Appeal Suit No. 341 of 1918 on the file of the District Court), preferred against a decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 253 of 1917.

Mr. Y. Suryan trauana, for the Appellant. Mr. O. Madhvan Nair, Government Pleader, and Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Respondente.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that section 11 of the Salt Act applies to transfers by way of mortgage and is not limited to absolute transfers. The word transfer is general, and there is nothing in the section to limit it to absolute transfers of the entire interest of the licensee. The fast that, as between the licensee and his transferces, section 12 protects the interests of a person who may have an interest in or lien upon such license or salt works does not affect the question as to the position between the transferces and the Commissioner.

The rules under the Salt Act framed under section 11 prohibit the licensee, on pain of termination of the lease, from assigning, underletting or parting with possession without the permission of the Commissioner; and the licenses to stain these terms. The whole policy of the Act is to give the Commissioner control as to the person who is to acquire an interest.

We are of opinion that the mortgage of the salt-pan without the leave of the Commissioner is of no effect against him, and that the suit was rightly dismissed so far as he is concerned.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of the first respondent, Chaukidari chakran land—Resumption—Transfer to zemindar—Right of putnidar to hold land subject to payment of additional rent to Zemindar—Putni contract containing no reservation.

Where in a putni contract there is no reservation with regard to the chaukida-i chakran lands, they, in resumption and transfer to the zemindar under the provisions of Act VI B C of 1870, are included in the putni, and the putnidar is entitled to hold them subject to the payment of some rent to the zemindar in addition to the amount payable to the chaukidari fund [p. 359, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Midnapur, dated the 30th September 1918.

Bibus Bepin Behari Ghose and Sarat Kunar Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babus Satcowrip: ti Roy and Perry Mohan Chatteries, for the Raspondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of asuit brought by the plaintiffs, who are the putnidars of Lat Jamitta under the defendant No. 1, for recovery of certain charkidars chakran lands on the ground that the lands are included in their putni.

The lands were transferred on the 1Cth March 1915 to the defendant No. 1 (under the provisions of Act VI of 1270, B. C.) who, it appears, settled the same with the other defendants and kabuliyats were taken from some of them after the institution of the suit. The defense was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to these lands and that, at any rate, they were bound to take fresh settlement and pay additional rent for the lands.

The Court below has held that the lands were included in the putni, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to get precession of the lands without payment of any additional rept. In the result, the suit was desceed, the defendants being ordered to pay means profirts for a period of three years prior to the suit.

The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The first question for consideration is, whether, under the terms of the contract between the partier, the plaintiffs are entitled to these chaukidari chakran lands.

The putni katuliyat has been placed before re. It appears therefrom that Lot Jamitta consisting of 16 Monzas was let out in putni, and that there was no reservation with regard to chaukidari chakran lands.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that it is not stated in the kabuliyas that all the lands of the Mouzah were let out in putni. But, as mentioned above, it is stated that the 16 Morzas of Lot Jamitta were granted in putni. It surely means that the whole of the Zemindar's interest in the Lot was granted in putni with the exceptions mentioned in the doomment, and the only exceptions in the document, were with regard to "tank excavations and the rent of the lands, which had by any sanad been granted by the Zemindar to other persons and with regard to gardens, Havelis and lands which were held by the estate in khas possession in the Lot." It appears, therefore, that all the lards in the Manzas of the Lot, excepting those specially mentioned, passed to the putnidar and included the chaukidari charan lande.

The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in relying upon a passage in the kabuliy t, namely, "I shall every year separately pay the sum demanded after resumption at the Sadar of the chakran lands of the Thana Zıllab" of the under the Tabeil that chaukidari chahran holding were included in the putni. That pareage evidently refers to I hanadari lands and has nothing to do with the chaukidari chakran lands. The only matter referred to in respect of the chaukidari chakran lands is contained in the passage which runs as follows: "I shall appoint and dismiss the chaukidars and other persons employed on Police duties in your Bakehi Department whenever any such person has to be appointed or dismissed and the Sarcar shall have no concern with the matter," That shows that the rutnidar was iter glt of nominating and dismissing the che due and that there was no reservation of the chaukidari chakran lands in the contract creating the putni, and baving regard to all the terms of the lease, we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that the chaukidari chakran lands were included in the putni.

The next question is, whether the plaintiffs, the putnidars, are entitled to have the lands only on payment of the assessment payable to the chaukidari fund, or are liable to pay some additional rent on account of the land to the Zemindar. The question no doubt should be decided having regard to the terms of the contract in each case. In the present case the contract does not deal with the question

The question has been raised and dealt with in a large number of eases. In the earliest reported case on the roint vis., Hori Naroin Mosumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal 1), it was held that the putnidar was bound to pay to the Zemindar such rent for these lands as correspondent to the proportion between the gross collections and the putas rent formerly payable by him. It was so held on the ground that the contract between the parties that is the putni lease did not contain any stipulation as to the rent payable for the chakran lands to the Zamindar. Although, as stated above, the question is one which must be determined upon the contract between the parties, the Courts have acted upon the prirciple laid down in the case of Hari Naroin Mozumdar v. Mukud Lal Mundal (1) except so far as we can see in two cases vis., one—the case of Kass Newas Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (2) and another upreported case which will be referred to later. In the first case the putnidar was held entitled to possession of the chakran lands without payment of any additional rent. The judg. ment of the learned Judges who decided the case, however, preceded opon different grounds. Mr. Justice Rampini was of opinion that the case of Hari Norain Mozumdar v. Mundal (1) did not lay Mukund Lal down any general principle, that the Zeminder in that ease was in the enjoyment of the services of the chaukidari and that it was admitted that by the assessment of the chaukidars lands the hustbood of the putni had increased. Mookerjee, J., observed: " If there were materials on the record sorres. ponding to what were furnished by the parties in the case of Hari Narain Mozumdar v. Mukund Lal Mundal (1), it might have been necessary to consider whether the putnidars were bound to pay the Zemindar any additional rentfor these lands," and that "the principle which determines whether additional rent is payable or not was indicated in the ease of Hari Das Goswami v. Nistarini Gupta (3). The decision of the question must ultimately depend upon the mode in which the rent was assessed at the inception of the putni. If at the time of such assessment, the profits of all the land including chakran lands were fully taken into assount, the Zemindar would clearly have no right to elaim any rent in addition to the putni rent." Mookerjee, J., in a later case held that if there is no indication in the contract between the parties that at the time of inception of the grant, the putni rent was assessed on the basis of the asset's of all the lands situated within the ambit of the putni inclusive of the chaukidari chakran lands, the putnidar should be made liable to pay some additional rept to the Zemindar on account of these lands. See Khondkar Mehdi Horsein v. Umes Chandra (4).]

A similar view was taken in Gopendra Chandra Mitter v. Taraprassana Muker ee (5) and Rakhal Das v. Madab Chandra (6).

It may no doubt be said that where the putnidar is in enjoyment of the service of the chaukidar, he alone should get the benefit of the lands when they are enfranchised because he alone loses the services. But it is pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (7) that at the time when the putnigrants (in that case were made, the resumption of the chaukidari chakran lands was not even contemplated. In the present case the putni was created so far back as 1846. Under the circumstances, and in the absence of anything in the contract or any evidence to show that these chaukidars lands were taken into consideration, we are unable to hold that the putni rent was assessed after taking these lands into account.

The unreported case referred to above (Second Appeal No. 1500 of 1914) [Nalinakhya Basu v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (2)] was desided by Fletcher and Teunon, JJ. The learned Judges held that the putnidar was entitled to the chaukidari lands without payment of any additional rent to the Zemindar. The learned Judges were of opinion that the eases on the point could not throw any light because the terms of the contract were not stated in the reports. The judgment proceeded upon the ground that the rent in the case was fixed and could not be altered. But that is so in almost every case of the putni; and although, as we have already stated, the question is to be decided upon the contract between the parties, the cases referred to by us lay down the principle, namely, that where there is nothing to show that chaukidari chakran lands were taken into account in assessing the putni rent, the putnidar must pay some additional rent for the lands. So far as that question is concerned, all the reported cases with the exception of the case of Kasi Newas Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (2), ere in favour of the contention of the appellant. Even in that case, as pointed out above, Mookerjee, J., does not differ from the view taken in Hari Narain Masumdar's case (1).

We do not feel pressed with the unreported judgment of Fletcher and Teunon, JJ., because there have been subsequent decisions of this Court, [see Radha Charan Chandra v. Rannit Singh (9), Khondkar Mehdi Hossein v. Umesh Chandra (4)], which have taken a view similar to that taken in a series of eases commencing with Hari Narain Mosumdar's cass (1).

Having regard to the weight of authority on the point, we hold that the Zemindar is entitled to some rent in addition to the amount payable to the chaukidari fund.

As to the amount of such additional rent, different views have been taken in different cases. In some cases it has been assessed after taking into the consideration the hustbool of the mahal, in some others the assets have been divided half and half. In the case which came up before Fletcher and Tennon, JJ., to which the defendant No. I was a party, one third of the assets of the chaudiars land was given to the Zamindar, and twothirds to the putnidar by the learned District indge. In this case there are no materials on the record on the point. The putnidar should be allowed something on account of collection charger, and in order to avoid further orquiry we think the putnidar might be given two thirds and the Zemindar one third, of the amount at which the lands were assessed by the Collector.

The result is that the plaintiffs are entitled to get khas presession of the chaukidari chakran lands in dispute on payment to the defendant No. I the amount of Rs. 60, annas 5, pies 3 (Rupees sixty, annas five and pies three) payable to the chaukidari fund plus Rs. 20, anna 1, pies 9 (Rapees twenty, anna one and pies nine) as additional rent on assent of these lands to the defendant ro. 1.

As regards mesne profits, the plaintiffs will be entitled to mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 40, annas 3, pies 6 (Rupees forty, annas three and pies six) per annum from the 10th. The other part relates to the 8 bighas odd of chau idari lands which have been left out because we understand these lands were not entered in the deed of transfer in favour of the defendant No. 1. It is stated before us that the omission in the deed of transfer has subsequently been restified on the 10th January 19.9 and that the plots Nos. 6 and 7 Schedule (G4) have now been included in the deed of trapefer. It is contended that we should take cogaizance of the facts which have happened since the institution of the suit and give a decree to the plaintiffs in respect of these lands also.

The alleged rectification of the deed of transfer, however, is said to have been made subsequent to the decision of the lower Court and the learned Pleader for the appellant is not in a position to say whether the statements are correct. Under the ciraumstances, we do not think we should deal with these 8 bighas of land. But if what is stated half of the respondent is correct, pro-

of the Upper Barma Civil Courts Regulation. Toe plaint stated that the land was mortgaged by a doenment which was in the defendant's possession, and it asked that the defendant should be required to produse The written statement this dosument. denied the existence of any such document. The plaintiff went into the box and swore that the terms of the mortgage were recorded on a palm leaf which was not signed. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court refers to the dosument as a parabaik, but all the witnesses who mentioned it say it was a palm leaf. Three witnesses of the plaintiff say that there was a palm leaf doonment. They were not asked if it was signed but spoke of its being excented. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court assumed that it was not signed, and, in view of the plaintiff's evidence and the fact that documents written on palm leaves do not lend themselves easily to signature, and are not as a matter of fast ordinarily signed, I do not think this was an improper or unfair assumption. It was held in the case of Mi Ta v. Naga Bein (1) that a document which was not signed by the parties might still be exesuted; but the document there in question was written in the year 1256 B. E., (1894-95) when the Stamp Act of 1879 was in force, and the Judge stated expressly that he was not called upon to decide whether a similar instrument excented since the S:amp Act of 1c99 came into force was or was not liable to stamp duty. But, as was pointed out in the case of Chet Po, In re (2), the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, expressly defines the words 'executed' and 'execution" as meaning "signed" and 'signature," section 2 (12); and I have no doubt, therefore, that, as was held in that ease, unsigned Barmess instruments made sines the Indian Stamp Act, 1:99, same into force, that is, since the let July 1899, cannot be treated as executed for the purposes of the Stamp Law. I think, therefore, that the Judge of the lower Appellate Court was justified in holding that the document was admissible in evidence and was not excluded by fast that it was not stamped. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court, however, was elearly wrong in saying that registration was not required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act describes the manner in which a mortgage of immove. able property can be effected, and lays down that where the sum seemred is less than Rs. 100 the mortgage must be effected either by a registered instrument, signed and attested in the manner preseribed, or by delivery of the property. If, then, the mortgage was effected decument it was necessary that it should be registered. Here, however, the plaintiff alleged that delivery of possession was made to the defendant. No document was, therefore, recessary and such delivery of possession, if proved, would constitute a valid mortgage. The plaintiff had, however, to prove the terms of his mortgage before be could recover, and here the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act require to be enneidered. The terms of a contract can only be proved, where they have been reduced to the form of a document, by the production of the document, or by secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible. Secondary evidence was no doubt admissible here in view of the fast that the plaint alleged that the document was with defendant and the defendant failed ta produce it. and indeed denied ita existence. The unregistered dosument having been drawn up after the introduction of the Registration Act did not reregistration to be admissible in evidence, as it would have required it if it had been drawn up while the Registra. tion Regulation contained the law applicable in the matter in Upper Burma. Although, therefore, the dosument did not ereate any mortgage, even though the mortgage was effected by delivery of posses. sion, yet its terms could only be proved by the document itself, or by secondary evidence of its contents. Both the Courts below appear to have treated the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses as secondary evidence, but it appears to me that it is nothing of the sort. It was pointed out in the case of Mi Le Byu v. Mi Shwe Mya that Secondary evidense document is evidence of its contents, and that oral evidence as to the terms of a mertgage which have been reduced to writing is not evidence of the contents of the document. There is not a particle of evidence from the beginning to the end of the plaintiff's case that the terms recorded in the document were the terms of the maitgage as atsted by the witnesses. The plaintiff says: "I mortgaged the land for Rs. 60. A dosument was then executed when I mortgaged it. I did so for 30 backets of piddy valued at Rs. 30 and a brown salf also valued at Rs. 30" His witness, Manng Hmon, writer of the doenment, says that the plaintiff mortgaged the land for 30 baskets of paddy valued at Rs. 30 and a brown calf valued at Rs 30. A document was then executed. Maung Paw San says the same, and so does Manng San Paw. There is in fast nothing on the record from which it is possible to infer that any of the witnesses read the document or knew its contents except the writer, and he was not questioned as to what he worte. There was, therefore, no evidence of the mortgage and the plaintiff's suit was bound to fail. The evidence of possession does not help the plaintiff. The evidence is that the plaintiff cleared the land eight or ten years before the suit. and that the defendant eleared it when he came into possession three years before the suit. The map no doubt supports the plaint. iff, but it is not sufficient, in the absence of other evidence, to justify a decree. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration that defendant No. 1 had no right to sell a house situate at Katra Faizullah in the Amritear City, and that the rights of the plaintiff. The following facts will explain the nature of the dispute between the parties :-

Ganesh Das and Gulab Mal were brothers. Ganesh Das died leaving Musammat Gardevi, the defendant No. 1, as his widow. He also left two minor sons, Chhajju Ram and Aror Chand, and three daughters one of whom was Parmeshri. Ganesh Das died in 1901. His two minor sons died after bim, one in 1900 and the other in 1907. He had only a house and no other immoveable property and to this his some succeeded and as they were minors Musammat Gar Devi, their mother, took possession of it. Ganesh Das had mortgaged this house to one Taskar Suigh by a deed dated the 1sta December 1892 for Rs. 150, the term for which the mortgage was made being two years. When he died in 1901 the house was still unredeemed. The house fell vistim to the earthquake of 1905 and fell down. Musammat Gor Devi bad to re-build it. On the 1st February 1909 Thakar Singh sued for sale on his mortgage and on the 28th February obtained a decree for Rs. 556-6-2 and in default of payment for sale of the house. On the 3rd August 1912 an application for excention of this decree was made. An order of attachment was made on the 2nd Ostober 1912; a warrant for anotion-sale was issued on the 16th November 1912 and the 21st of December 1912 was fixed for the anction sale. The sale could not take place on the date fixed and a fresh warrant was issued on 6th January 1913 fixing the 10th of February 1913 for the sale to be carried ont. On this last mentioned date bids were made and the highest bid of Rs, 1,100 was made by one Tara Singh in whose favour the rale was concluded. The auction purchaser, however, failed to deposit the 1th of the price and on the 12th of February 1918 the bailiff made a report that the requisite amount had not been deposited. A fresh warrant had to be issued on the 14th July 1913. In the meantime, Har Bhagwan, plaintiff, son of Gulah Mal, brother of Ganesh Das had put in an application objecting to the stashment of the house. On this applieation the sale was postponed by an order dated the 14th February 1913. Eventually, however, the objections of the plaintiff were disallowed and his application was dismissed. He took no further action. The lady apparently had no means to pay off the decree. By the warrant of the 14th July 1913 the 21st of August was fixed for the austion sale to take place. but as, in the meantime, the sale deed in question dated the 12th August 19:2 bad been executed the auction sale did not take place. Re. A. P.

It is this sale with respect to which the declaration was claimed: the principal ground for the suit being that it was without consideration and necessity. Naman Mal, vendee, raised various defences as to the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit; the principal defence, however, being that the cale in question was for consideration and necessity. The Court of first instance found that both consideration and necessity had been established and dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court agreed with the First Court as to items Nos. (1), (2: and (3), but disagreed as to items Nos. (4) and (5). These last items are described in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as items (d) and (e). According to the evidence and the finding of the Court of first instance the item of Rs. 256-14-3 was actually paid to Dholu Mal, the ereditor, before the Sub-Registrar. District Jadge Apparently, the learned accepts the finding as to the actual payment but he holds that as the money had been borrowed for the purpose of making a sustomary gift on the occasion of Bansi Dhar's Chak eeremony it cannot be held to have been taken for necessity. As regards the item No. 5 (Rs. 800.00) the learned District Judge has held that as, apparently, Rs. 800 had been borrowed for future maintenance and for future expenses to be incorred on the marriages of Musammat Gurdevi's daughter's children it cannot be held to have been borrowed for a legitimate purpose. He has accordingly disallowed these items and has given a decree to the plaintiff entitling him to take possession after the death of the widow on payment of Rs. 842 1.3.

Against this decree the defendant vendee has preferred this appeal and it has been contended on his behalf that the sale in question was not voluntarily executed by the widow and that she was compelled by circumstances to effect the sale in order to save the property from being sold at austion for an inadequate price, and that, therefore, the order ay rule relating to necessity cannot strictly be applied to the present case. On the facts found by the Courts below. Musammat Gurdevi was peculiarly situated, The following facts will disclose her position:—

As already stated, Ganesh L'as bad left only one immoveable property on his death, namely, the house in dispute. It is, however, contended on behalf of the plaintiff that in addition to the house he had also left certain bonds and debts due to him. It appears that there were three mortgages in his favour for Rs. 532, Rs. 120 and Rs. 320 and in addition to this he had left certain unsecured debts.

All these unscentred debts were assigned to the plaintiff himself by Musammat Gardevi for Ra. 2,000. Out of this only Rs. 200 were paid in each by the plaintiff and as to the balance of Rs. 1,800 he gave a bond promising to make payment by annual instalments of Ra. 150 each. The last instalment was to be paid on the 3rd July 1913. Thus, at the date of the sale in question, this small income had ceased to exist. Out of this Rs. 1.0 received annually by the lady ste admittedly had to pay Rs. 36 per annum as interest on the mortgage-debt. Out of the three mortgages mentioned above two were admittedly redeemed in 1907 before the two sons of Ganesh Das had died. The third band was redeemed in 1909. According to the findings only Rs, 652 were realized under those bonds and there, according to the findings of the lower Appellate Court, were spent in re building the house. Thus, the widow had practically no income to support herself and her daughters and their children. It is not denied, and it is clear from the evidence, that Musammat Gardevi had three daughters and eleven grand-children. large family had to be supported somehow and the lady, under the eirenmstances, had to borrow money. Possibly, the two items which have been disallowed by the learned District Judge sannot strictly be said to have been borrowed for necessity, but it is clear that the sale-deed in question was executed under the circumstances which left no choice for the lady. If she had not executed the sale. deed for Rs. 1,944 the house would have been sold by anction for a much lesser price. It is in evidence that the highest bid made by Tara Singh on the 10th February 19.3 was for Rs. 1,100 only. Under these eiream. stances, if the widow executed the sale in order to pay off the decretal amount and certain debts, she cannot be blamed for having managed to keep some more money in her pocket for her maintenance and for the maintenance of her grand shildren. learned Sabordinate Judge has found that it was an act of good management on her part that she executed the sale-deed to save the property from being sold for an inadequate price. We are in entire agreement with the Court of first instance that it was an act of good management and pradence on the part of the widow to sell the house by a private sale. The debts which the vendee had to MAUNG AN GALE C. MA MIN DUN.

pay were actually due and were in fact paid by him before the Sub Registrar.

A widow is not always bound to sell exactly for the amount for which there is legal necessity, see Lala Chatranaray n v. Uba Kanwari (1) and Felaram Roy V. We have to see in (2). Bogalanand each case whether, having regard to the eircumstances, the alienation was a proper Hindu Trevelyan's 888 one, 512. The raling Edition. page 2nd laid doen in Gurdit Singh V. Singh (3) and Nihal Singh v. Rajon (4) can bardly apply to the facts of the present ease, as the widow in this case was compelled to sell the house owing to the impending austion-sale. As regards the last item of Rs. 800, it is objected that a good portion of it must have been taken for future maintenance which was not sanctioned by the rules of Hindu Law. In support of this proposition Mayoe's Hindu Law, 7th Edition, paragraph 633, is relied upon, but as held in Motising v. Sob'omal (5) this is not an inflaxible rule. Wrat is to be seen is, whether in the particular case the widow bas dealt fairly towards the expectant heir. In this case the property would have been sold in execution of the decree as the expectant heir kept quiet after his objections had been allowed. It cannot, therefore, be said in this case that by the act of the widow the plaintiff, the expectant heir, has in any way been prejudiced. Even granting that the item (d) was not taken for legal necessity, the bulk of the consideration being for legal necessity, the sale in question ought to be upheld, Thalogara Ramanne v Halagare Gangayya (6) and Kannu Chetty v. Amirthammal (7) respectively and Padumsingh v. Musammat Badrabai (8).

In view of the above findings, we think that the Court of first instance was right in dismissing the suit. We accordingly

She mentioned esrtain other persons in her plaint as persons who might be interested in the equity of redemption, and notice was issued to them as to whether they wished to be made plaintiffs. As a result, four other persons were added as so plaintiffs, although, as the mortgage was alleged to have been made by Ma Min Dan and her husband; and these other persons were the grandshildren of Ma Min Dan and her husband, it is difficult to see what interest they had in the equity of redemption. The suit was dismissed in the Trial Court: Ma Min Dan alone appealed, a result of hor appeal the desree of the Trial Court was set aside, and a

The defendants then filed the present appeal, and named as respondent Ma Min Dun only. jestion has been taken that as the other plaintiffs have not been joined as respondents the decree in their favour eannot be set aside, and as it is a joint deeree. it cannot, therefore, be set aside at all. The decree of the lower Appellate Court was undoubtedly a desree in favour of all the plaintiffs jointly. It is suggested on behalf of the present appellants that this was a mere cerical error, and that if it were otherwise, the lower Appellate Court was exercising an extraordinary jurisdiction. I do not think that there is any force in either of these objections. Under the provisions of rale 4 of Order XL1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court has power to pass a decree in favour of all the plaintiffs jointly notwithstanding the fact that only one of them appealed, and I can see nothing either in the judgment or the decree to suggest that the Court was not acting under this power. I am of opinion that, in view of the fact that the decree of the District Court was in favour of all the plaintiffs, the other four plaintiffs should have been made respondents to this appeal. The question then arises whether, under the provisions of rule 20 of Order of the Code of Civil Procedure, XLI this Court should now add the four coplaintiffs as parties. The case of Ma Ein Zi v. Mi Ni (1) has been sited on behalf the respondent Ma Min Dan. that case one Ma Naw Za was shown as the sole respondent in an appeal. After the filing of the appeal it transpired that Ma Naw Za was dead at the time of the filing of the appeal, and application was made to join her legal representatives as parties to the appeal. It was held that there was no proper appeal before the Court and that an amendment of the memorandum of appeal should not be allowed as it would have the effect of depriving the legal representatives of valuable rights which had accrued to them by virtue of the Law of Limitation. But it was not in that case merely a question seedings stood, there was no respondent before the Court at all, and the provisions of rule 20 were not considered. In the present case Ma Min Dun has been made a respondent to this appeal, and all that required is to add as respondents persons who were parties to the suit but who have not been made parties to the appeal. That is precisely the case which is met by the provisions of rale 20. It was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court Bindeshri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2)] that it was competent for an Appellate Court to add respondents to an appeal under the provisions of section 559 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to rule 20 of Order XLI), even though the time within which an appeal against those persons might have been preferred had expired. The same view of the law was taken by the High Court of Calentta in the same of Grish Oh nder Lihiri V. Sasi Sekhares : r Roy (3) 1 can see nothing in the sule which would limit its applicability to cases where the period of limitation has not expired and the great majority of cases the pariod of limitation for appeals is likely to have expired before the appeal comes on for hearing, the provisions of the rule would ordinarily be nugatory if the limitation applied. Further, as pointed out in the Allahabad case, the provisions of rule 4 of Order XLI allow for the passing of orders in favour of an appel. lant who has not appealed, when that appellant would be debarred from appealing by the law of limitation, and it is simply because the law of limitation does not apply to rule 4 that the four plaintiffs in question in this case are required to be parties to this appeal, I see no reason for not accepting the views of the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad as to the interpretation of rule 20, and I hold that this Court has power to add the other four persons as respondents notwithstanding the fact that the period of limitation for the filing of an appeal as against them has expired. BHAGWAN DEVI C. BANKA MAL.

And on the merits I am of opinion that this is clearly a case where the powers given by rule 20 should ereised. The present respondent, Ma Min Dan, has been the moving spirit amongst the plaintiffs throughout, and it was she alone who filed an appeal in the lower Appellate Court. Further, it would appear that if the right to redeem exists it exists solely in her alone. It is not clear to me that the other plaintiffs were necessary plaintiffs at all. But a decree has been passed in their favour that deeree sannot be set aside unless they are made parties to this appeal and it would clearly be inequitable that the elaims of the appellants as against Ma Min Dun should be defeated simply because of a formal defeet in the memorandum of appeal in not including these persons as respondents.

I direct that the other four persons who were plaintiffs in the Trial Court, and in whose favour the decree appealed against now stands, be added as respondents to this appeal.

There is no provision in the Probate and Administration Act as to what is to be done and what the Court can do in the event of the death of a surety or in the event of a surety desiring to be relieved of the burden which he has undertaken. Section 75 o the Act, however, ought not to be read as meaning that the District Judge can once and once

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 16th January 19.8.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellant. Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Raspondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order under the Probate and Administration Act, ordering the appellant, Musammat Bhagwan Devi, to furnish two sureties in Rs. 8,000 each within a period of two months. The following facts will explain the nature of the question to be decided in this case.

Musammat Bhagwan Devi was appointed the administratrix and she was ordered to give a bond for Rs. 8,000 under section 78 of the Act. Subsequently, an application was made by way of a review asking the Court to call upon Musammat Bhagwan Devi to furnish sureties. An order was made to that effect on the 3rd of May 1912 There. upon Ganga Singh and Sadhu Singh executed a bond in the sum of Rs. 8,000 as sureties. On the 1st October 1913 Gauga Singh made an application praying to be discharged from the suretyship. On the 26th of January 1914 the Court made an order of discharge on the application of Ganga Singh in the following words:- "Ganga Singh is present. He is discharged from suretyship. Sadhu Singh's enough." It appears that security is Sadhu Singh continued as a sole surety for a sertain period and then he died. On his death an application was made on the 24th of July 1917 by Banke Mai asking the Court to appoint fresh sureties. In the application, however, one Tek Chand was mentioned as MAUNG TUN B C. MAUEG SHWE THA.

the surety who had died. The application was rejected on the ground that Tok Crand had never been a surety. The District Judge has now made the order against which the present appeal has been presented.

The ground orged on behalf of the appel. lant. Musummat Bhagwan Devi, before us is that under section '8 of the Act the District Judge had no power to appoint new sureties. The argument is based on the roling Subroya Chetty v. Rogammall (1) where it was held that it was not in the power of a Court to disappointed under charge a surety once section 75 of the Act. This ruling has been followed in Kandhia Lal v. Manki (2). The view taken by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court is opposed to that of the learned Judges of the Calentta High Court expressed in Ra! Narain Mookerjes v. Ful Kumari Debi (3). The learned Judges at page 70* of the report made the following observation :-

"There is no provision in the Ast as to what is to be done or what the Court can do in the event of the death of the surety, or in the event of the surety, pnder such eirsumstances as the present, desiring to be relieved of the burden which he has undertaken. In my opinion, section 78 ought not to be read as meaning that the District Judge can once and once only direct a bond with sareties to be given and that after that has been done he becomes then and there functus officio, and that he has no power in the event of the sarety dying, say the next day, to call upon the Administrator to furnish snother

We entirely agree with the view taken by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. In a later case Surendra Nath Framansk v. Amrita Lol Fal (4), a similar view was expressed by Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ. The head note appended to the report of that ease runs thus :-

"The Court of Probate is competent to require a new bond or additional security where the interest of the estate requires it and especially where some new situation arises such as an unforeseen increase of assets or the unexpected breakdown of one or both sureties."

(1) 28 M. 161; 14 M. L. J. 482.

The older eases were reviewed in this judgment. In our opinion, this case lays down a very salutary rule. In the present ease, admittedly, the sole surviving surety is dead. According to the two Calcutta rulings it is, therefore, necessary to appoint a new surety or sureties and this is what has been done by the learned District Judge. We, therefore, think that no exception can be taken to the order passed by the learned District Judge.

The only question which arises for coneideration, having regard to the special features of this case, is whether it was necessary to appoint two sureties in this particular ease. As we have already observed, on the discharge of Ganga Singh every body appeared to be satisfied with one surety, namely, Sadhu Singh. There is no reason why the lady should be called upon to furnish two sureties. In our opinion, one surety will be quite enough. We partly accept the appeal and modify the order of the lower Court to this extent. In other respects the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT,-The plaintiff sued defendant; for mesne profits valued Rs. 300. The first defendant was the plaintiff's vendor and was sued upon a secvenant in the contract of sale guaranteeing the plaintiff in peaceful possession of the property sold. The second defendant had been in possession as a tenant of the third defendant. The third defendant had obtained a mortgage decree jointly with the first defendant against a third party and had redeemed the mortgage with the first defendant, but had then been sued by the first defendant for possession and the first defendant had been successful. The plaintiff sued for the mesne profits reseived by the second and third defendants during the period that the plaintiff had been unable to obtain possession after his pur-The First Court dismissed the suit against the first and sesond defendants but decreed it against the third defendant. An appeal by the plaintiff making the second defendant a respondent was successful, and the second defendant now somes to this Court in second appeal under section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation.

A preliminary objection is raised that the suit being one of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes and for less than

Rs. 500 no second appeal lies.

For the appellant it is argued that Article 31 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Ast expressly withdraws a suit for mesne profits from the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. There has been a difference of opinion among the Courts in India as to the application of this Article. The Calsutta, Allahabad aud Panjab High Courts have held that a suit for mesne profits is not included in Article 31, and that such a suit is a Small Cause, while the Madras and Bombay High Courts have taken the opposite view. In the case of Kunjo Behary Singh v. Madhub Chundra Ghose (1), it was held by a Full Bench of the Calentta High Court, by a majority of five Judges to two, that no second appeal lies from a suit for means profits where the velue of the subject-matter is less than Re. 50). The line of argument appaars to have been that a suit for mesne profits is an action for damages for a trespass to immoveable property in which the measure of the damages may or may not be the amount of the profits which the wrongdoer has actually received from the property. The suit is not one to resover the profits of the immoveable property, but is a suit for damages of which the profits of the property astnally received by the wrong doer may not even be the measure, and the majority of the Judges of the Fall Bensh who decided that case apparently held that, even if the last sentence of Article 31 is read by itself, it would not include a suit for mesne profits; but they went further and said that that Article clearly contemplated an account, and that in a simple action for damages, and action for mesne profits is nothing was necessary. assount more, no Allahabad and Punjab High Courts appear to have accepted the reasoning of the majority of the Judges in this case. It may, however, be remarked that of the five Judges who Baverley, J., the majority, formed adhered to his opinion that by the concluding words of Article 31, the Legislature intended to withdraw suits for mesne profits from the jurisdiction of Courts of Small Causes, but he went on to say : "I am bound to admit that the wording of that clause is not so explicit as to justify me in dissenting from the decision of the majority." Two Jadges did dissent from that desision, and, in the case of Antone v. Mahaden Anant (2), the Bombay High Court held that the surrent of decisions in Court had been in accordance with the view held by the minority of the Judges who desided the Calcutta case, and the view was taken that a claim for mesne profite, based on the allegation that the plaintiff had been dispossessed by the defendant, was a claim which must be treated as one to which Article 31 applied, where the defendant had wrongly received profits of the immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff. A Fall Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Savarimuthu v. Aithurusu Rowthar (3) held that a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which had been wrongly received by the defendant who dispossessed the plaintiff in execution of a deeree afterwards set aside on appeal is not eognisable by a Court of Small Causes. reasons for this decision are not given in the jadgment, but it was pointed out in the order of reference that Article 31 includes a suit by a mortgagor to recover surplus collections received by the mortgagee after the mortgage has been satisfied and a suit for meane profits, both of which are not technical suits for an account, but were akin to snits for an account, and were advisedly and not inappropriately included in Article 31. It was also pointed out that these two classes of suit ecrrespond with the suits dealt with in Articles 105 and 109 of the L mitation Ast respectively. In the case of Ramasami Roddi v. Authi Lakshmi Ammal (4), it was held that the suit was framed as one for mesne profits and the form of the plaint determined the nature of the suit, and, although the Court held that in that suit Article 1 19 of the Limitstion Act did not in fast aprly, yet it was excluded from the congnissnee of the Small Cause Court under Article 31 of the Second Schedule to the Small Cause Courts Act.

I have not been able to find any decisions dealing with the second sentence of Article 31 which refers to a suit to recover surplus collections received by a mortgages. This would appear to be a very definite description of the kind of suit excluded from the Small Cause Court's jurisdiction, and it seems to me that it would be stretching the meaning of the words unduly to hold that a suit to recover surplus collections was only excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court where the suit was for an account. I think the proposition that the last two sentences of Article 31 are governed by the first part of the first sentence, and that the fact that Article 31 follows Article 30, which deals with a suit for an account of property, indicates that it was the intention of Article 31 to exclude only suits for an account is extremely doubtful. It was noticed in the Calcutta care cited above by Petheram, U.J., that in many suits for damages in the nature of mesne profits a question of title which a Court of Small Causes cannot finally decide may arise, but the learned Chief Instice said that the appropriate method is provided by section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It appears to me, however, that it is more in consonance with the intention and general provisions of that Act that suits of the kind in question should not be decided by a Court of Small Causes. A suit for the recovery of rent other than bouse rent is, for instance, expressly excluded by Article S. as well as a anit for the determination or enforcement of any other right to or interest in immoveable property by Article 11, and to hold that the last two sentences of Article 31 are only applicable in cases where a suit is for an account appears to me both to make the last two septences of that Article superflanus and unmeaning and to be opposed to the general intention of the Act. Following, therefore, the decisions of the Madras and Bombay High Courts referred to above, I must hold that the suit was excluded from the juris. diction of the Court of Small Causes and a second appeal, therefore, lies.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 17th of July 19'8, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 2nd April 1918.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant. Lala Sardha Ham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT .- In the suit out of which this second appeal arises the plaintiffs claimed damages for non-delivery of ten eases of Sateen. The contract is admitted, but the defendants contended that it had been cancelled, inasmuch as they made an application to the plaintiffs for an extension of time which extension had not been granted by the plaintiffs. onus of proving that the contract had been eancelled was laid by the First Court on the defendants and it was found that they had not discharged the onus. The Court also found that the plaintiffs had definitely extended the time in answer to the defend ants' letter of the 20th August 1915. Reliance was placed mainly on the letters Ebzibits P 4 and P.5 produced by the plaintiffs. In the lower Appellate Court the defendants applied to the Judge to allow them to produce additional evidence, and the Judge allowed them to do so and upon this new evidence held that the letter P.4 was not intended by the defendants to apply to the contract in dispute and that the contract had, in fact, been cancelled. The District Judge, therefore, accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. They have filed this second appeal to this Court, and the main point urged by them is that the lower Appellate Court acted contrary to law in allowing additional evidence to be produced before it. It appears from a perusal of the lower Appellate Court's record that 17th July 1918 was the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal, but on the 8th July the defendants made an application for leave to produce a certain letter in evidence. On the 14th July the lower Appellate Court at first rejected the application on the ground that new evidence could not be admitted at that late stage in the Appellate Court, but subsequently on the same day recorded an order allowing additional evidence to be taken as it transpired that there were allegations of forgery against one of the plaintiffs' witnesses and of sheating in connection with the matter in suit. From this it is clear that the plaintiffs never agreed to the production of additional evidence. On the contrary, it appears probable that they objected and that, in consequence of their objection, the District Judge had first of all rejected the defendants' application to put additional evidence. Counsel for appellants relies upon the case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) wherein their Lordships of the Privy Council point out that the legitimate occasion for the admission of additional evidence by the Appellate Court under section 558 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, corresponding with Order XLI, rule 27 of the present Code. is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, or where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence, and an application is made to import it. In that case the Eigh Court of Bombay at the hearing had admitted additional evidence and the Privy Council held that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to admit it and that it was wrongly admitted and must be disregarded. In Krishnama Chariar v. Narasimha Chariar (2) the same view was adopted. Again, in Garden Reach Spinning and Manufacturing Company v. Secretary of State for India (3), it was held that where in an appeal an application was made before the hearing of the appeal for the admission of additional evidence such application was not warranted by the terms of Order XLI, rule 27, and the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Now, in the present case there was no such inherent lacung in the evidence as was referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case quoted above. It was quite possible for (1) 31 B 381; 9 Bom L. R. 671; 11 O. W. N. 721; 6

the Appellate Court to decide the appeal before it on the evidence on the record. The onus probands of a certain iseue was laid on the defendants and it was for the Aprellate Court to see whether they had discharged that onus or not. It was not competent for it to allow them to produce additional evidence at the hearing of the appeal. Lala Sardha Ram on behalf of the respondents has cited authorities in support of the proposition that such evidence can be admitted with the assent of the parties but these authorities do not help him because we are distinctly of opinion that in the present case the plaintiffs did not assent to the production of additional evidence. Lala Sardha Ram admits that if this additional evidence be excluded, he eannot resist the present appeal or challenge the decision of the First Court.

A further point was urged by Rai Sahib Moti Sagar to the effect that additional evidence was wholly inadmissible having regard to section 94 of the Indian Evidence Act. We do not find it necessary to discuss this point, because we have decided that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction at all to receive the additional evidence.

We accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore the decree of the First Court with costs throughout.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Allahabad, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge.

Dr. Kailas Nath Kat u, for the Appellant.

Messre, Uma Shankar Bajpai and Peory Lel Banerice, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. Rives, J .- Ghezi Din and his first consic, Pitamber, formed a joint Hindu family of which Ghezi Din was the karta. Pitambar was a minor. On the 27th of April 1913 Ghazi Din made a mortgage of the joint family property in favour of Munni Lal and Kashi Prasad. The mortgagess sued Ghezi Din and Pitambar, under the guardianthip of Ghezi Dic, on foot of their mortgage. Ghazi Din confessed judgment and a preliminary deeree was passed on the 20th of March 1916. This was duly made final and the property was attached and put up for sale, and the 6th of February 1918 was the date fixed for the sale. that date Pitambar, still a minor, filed the suit cut of which this appeal arises, agairst Kashi Prasad and the representatives of Munni Lal, the mortgagees, and Ghazi Din for a declaration that the decree in the former suit was void and illegal as against the plaintiff and that he is not bound by it and that in execution of the said decree the remaining half of the joint family property was not saleable. The property was sold and purchased by Murli Dhar, and the sale was ocnfirmed on the 9th of March 1918. On the 22nd of March 1918 the plaint was amended, Murli Dhar was made a defendant, and an additional clause was inserted in the plaint MURLI DHAR U. PITAMBAR LAL.

to the effect that in execution of the decree in the said suit the house was sold by austion on the 6th of February :918 and was purshased by defendant No. 4, that is, Murli Dhar, and an additional prayer was added for a declaration that the said sale was void and illegal. It was alleged in the plaint that the mortgagees, in spile of their having knowledge of the fact that the rights of Ghezi Din were adverse to those of the plaintiff, appointed him the guardian of the plaintiff, and in collection with him obtained a decree; that in fact there was no lawful guardian of the plaintiff; that the whole proseedings were kept consealed from the mother of the plaintiff who only got to know of the suit when execution taken out; that Ghazi Din had no power to execute the mortgage deed and that it was not for the benefit of the plaintiff.

The First Court found that the mortgage was not made for family necessity or for the benefit of the family. It also found, however, that there was no evidence to show collusion between Ghazi Din and the mortgagess, and that the plaintiff properly represented in the former suit. It, nevertheless, dismissed the suit. On appeal the Court below upheld the finding that the mortgage was not executed for legal necessity or the benefit of the minor and it further found that Ghazi Din was not a proper person to be appointed guardian in the suit, and on this ground it allowed the appeal and desreed the suit.

This appeal is by the austion-pershaser. The connected Appeal No. 736 of 1920 is by the mortgagees.

It was argued very strenuously by Dr. Katju for the appellant that Murli Dhar, being a stranger to the litigation, "was justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the direction of the Code it ought to do" [Malkarjun v. Narhari (1)]. He further argued, relying on the same case, that the only Court competent to decide who was a proper person to be the guardian of the minor was the Judge in whose Court the suit was filed. He decided very naturally that Ghezi Din, the karta of the family, was a proper person and he had jurisdiction so to decide, and so, even if he decided wrongly, his decision is binding and the minor cannot re-open the question in the absence of frand or collusion.

With reference to certain rulings of this Court, which will be noticed later, his argument was, that the utmost length to which they went was, that where it was apparent that there had been an irregularity in the procedure adopted by the Court in the appointment of a guardian, then, and then only, could the Court enquire into the question whether the minor had been prejudiced: and if it found that the minor had not been prejudiced, the deares stood, even if in fact no guardian at all had been formally appointed Walian Behari Pershad Singh (2) and Collector of Meerut v. Umrao Singh (3).] In this case it is said there was no irregularity in the prossdure, and no fraud or collusion was found.

On behalf of the respondents it has been argued that, if the minor was not properly represented in the suit, the deeree and every thing that followed from it, was, so far as the minor was concerned, a nullity. In order to ascertain whether he had been properly represented it necessary to go into the facte, and that sould only be done in most cases in a subsequent suit. If in such suit it was found that there had been irregularity in the appointment of the guardian, then, if the Court was satisfied that the minor was prejudised, the decree against the minor was void, [Baii Nath Ras v. Dharam Des Tewari (4) followed in Chhatter Singh v. To Singh (5)] and, a fort ori, if it was found that the guardian appointed was not a proper person, that was a gross irregularity which inevitably avoided the desree. Before deciding which of these arguments should be adopted, I propose to set out the provisions of the Code applicable, and the facts leading up to the appointment of Ghazi Din as guardian ad litem to his minor cousin and his subsequent conduct.

MUBLI DHAR C. PITAMBAR LAL.

Order XXXII, rule 3 (1) provides:
"Where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor."

Sub-paragraph (3) of the rule provides that an application for the appointment of a guardian 'shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controvercy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that he is a fit person to be so appointed."

Sub-paragraph (4) directs that "no order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or deelared by an authority competent in that behalf, or, where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian, of the minor or, where father or other natural there is no to the guardian. in where person eare the minor is, and after hearing any objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub rule". Rule 4 of the same Order defines who is a proper person, namely, "any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as the next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit, provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor" It is further directed that "no person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian for the suit."

When the mortgagees filed their suit against Ghazi Din and the plaintiff, they stated that the latter was a minor and that he and Ghazi Din formed a joint Hindu family of which Ghazi Din was the karta. They filed an affidavit to this effect and stated therein that Ghazi Din had no adverse interest to the minor and was a fit person to be appointed his guardian. They did not state that the mother of the minor was alive.

Thereupon notices were issued to the minor and to Ghezi Din. The notice to the minor was affixed to the door of his house. Ghazi Din was served personally. He endorsed a note on the duplicate returned to Court, in the Mahajani character (which the Court apparently could not read), refusing to abt as guardian. The attention of the Court was not drawn to this endorsement either by the serving peon or by anybody else. I do not think, however, that anything turns on this eireumstance. It was the duty of Ghazi Din to appear in obedience to the notice and object, if so advised. He did not appear, and the Court, not unnaturally, concluded from his abstention that he consented, and appointed him guardian without further erquiry. On the date fixed for the hearing of the snit Ghazi Din appeared and confessed judgment both on his own behalf and on behalf of the minor, and the mortgagees' suit was thereupon decreed. There was to irregularity in the procedure laid down in Order XXXII, role 3. But that prosedure is only enasted to enable the Court to appoint a proper person as a guardian. I think that if the nominated guard. ian does not appear, the Court may assume that he concents to being appointed, but that does not absolve the Court from erquiring into the question whether be is a proper person to represent the minor. In fact, where, as here, the mortgage was made by the karta of the joint property of himself and the minor, I think even if the karta consented to be guardian, a duty was east on the Court to consider whether the karta, who could not repudiate his own mortgage, was at all a proper person to represent the minor. It is quite clear that the Court could only appoint a proper person as defined in rule 4. If it appoints a person disqualified under that rule it seems to me it commits an illegal. ity rather than a mere irregularity. Suppose, for instance, the Court, merely relying on a false affidavit of a plaintiff, appointed a lunation to be the gurdian ad litem of a minor defend. ant, could it possibly be maintained that the minor was properly represented, and that, even if no steps were taken to defend the minor's interests, nevertheless the minor could never challenge the dcoree passed against him?

I think it only recessary to give this instance to show that Dr. Katju's main argument is far too breadly stated. In the present case, however, he points cut that the person appointed was the karte, the natural person to be the guardian and whose interest would not necessarily be adverse to the minor's, and it is therefore suggested that the Court was right in appointing him,

The case in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khirramal v. Daim (6). Lord Davey there said (it page 76 of the Liw Journal Raport): Their Lordships agree that the sales cannot be treated as veil or now be avoided on the grounds of any mere irregularities of procedure in obtaining the decrees or in the execution of them. But, on the other hand, the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record. As against such persons, the decrees and sales purporting to be made would be a nullity and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside."

MURLI DHAR C. PITAMBAR CAL.

later after giving the And, on, facts of the Bombay case, went on to say at page 78, "In so doing the Court was exersising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake it is true, but a Court has jurisdietion to deside wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed for setting matters right, and if that course is not taken, the desision, however wrong, sannot be disturbed" and proceeded : "Their Lordships think that these observations do not apply to the ouse now before them. In suits Nos.372 of 1879 and No. 64 of 1873 the Judge seems to have ascepted without question the statement on the record that Amir Baksh was representative of Naurez and Alahnawiz was his guardian, and never applied his mind to the matter. Doubtless, he would have done so if the suits had proseeded in the ordinary course, but in the former case the proceedings were cut short by the agreement for reference, and in the latter care it was in effect a consent decree. It was not, therefore, the case of an erroneous decision, ruling or exercise of diserction of the Judge in a matter in which the Court had jurisdiction, Their Lordships think that the estate of Nauraz was not represented in law or in fast in either of the suits, and the sale of his property was, therefore, without jurisdiction and null and void," I think that these remarks exastly apply here. The Coart did not apply its mind to the question whether Ghazi Din was a proper person having regard to the proviso to rule 4. If it had only read the mortgage. deed, it must have been put on ecquiry.

I think the matter is really concluded by the decision of this Court in Baij Nath Rai v. Dharam Deo Tewari (4), which was followed in Ohhatter Singh v. Tei Singh (5). It may be noted that the same argument was raised in that case. Mr. Agarwala is reported to have argued [Bai, Noth Bai v. Dharam Deo Tewari "The requirements of section of the old Code having been complied with, and the Court having once passed an order appointing Bhondu Tewari as guardian ad litem, there is an absolute presumption that the Court had satisfied itself on the materials before it that he was a fit and proper person to be so appointed and that he had no interest adverse to that of the minors. Throughout the course of the proceedings in the former suit there was nothing to indicate that he was not such a person or that he had any adverse interest. No exception was taken to the appointment either by Bhondu Tewari bimself or by his adult son who was a defendant in that suit and whose interest, at all events, would be identical with his minor brothers. When a guardian ad litem has been appointed of a minor defendant in a suit, then, unless the minor shows that the guardian and in collasion with the fraudulently plaintiffs, the minor is bound by the desree passed in that suit,"

The Court, however, overruled this argument,

From all these authorities, which have already been eited, it is abundantly clear that in all such cases where a minor subsequently sues to set aside a desree as against him on the ground that he was not properly represented, the merits have to be gone into. Indeed in the case relied on by Dr. Katju, tis., Collector Umrao Singh (3), the Meerut V. desision of the Court seems to have been that it was necessary first of all to enquire : whether the minor had been prejudiced by the appointment of the guardian. because, if it found that he had not been prejudiced, then it was unnecessary to go into any other question.

Now, it seems to follow that there must, first of all, be an investigation into the merits. In this case it has been found that Ghazi Din was only 21 years of age when he executed the mortgage. It was stated in the mortgage deed that money was borrowed "for home expenses and also for the improvement of the theka business in the Sheoghar market". There were no details given of these "home expenses" and it was found by both Courts, quite definitely, that the mortgagees' allegations that the money was required for the marriage of a daughter and the payment of certain debts were false, and that the theka business in the market was a private speculation of Ghazi Din's, and, that the minor was in no way concerned in it and got no benefit from it. Having come to this finding, the lower Appellate Court held that the Trial Court having found that the mortgage invalid against the minor could not consistently find that the minor was properly represented. He said: "I think that both findings cannot go together. If you once say that the elder cousin mortgaged the property of the minor without proper grounds for the transfer, how can you say that the man who threw away, so to say, the property of the minor was a right and fit person to have been appointed guardian, for the purpose of contesting the very transfer which ought to have been contested in the interest of the minor."

Now, the real fasts were known of course to the mortgagees. They knew, therefore, that the interest of Ghazi Din was adverse to the minor and they deseived the Court by their affidavit that be was a proper guardian. I think it is only necessary to cite ore more case which, although not mentioned at the Bar, ie, I think, very much in point. It is Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammed Ishoq (7). In that case also the auction purchaser was a etranger to the mortgage suit. Stanley, O. J., and Burkitt, J., said : "Now the provisions of section 443 (cf the old Code) are imperative." Section 4:3 of the old Code is the same in substance as Order XXXII. rule 3 (1) of the present Code . direct that where a defendant is a minor, the Court shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor to put in a defence and generally to act on his behalf in the conduct of the care. It is abundantly clear in this case that Munna Das was not a proper person whom the Court, if it had been made aware of the facts, would have appointed as guardian. In the first place, he was the mortgagor who purported to mortgage as his own, the property which he after. wards alleged was the property of his ward. He, therefore, had a conflicting interest-an interest which should have precluded any Court from appointing him as guardian ad litem in a suit brought by the mortgagees of Munna Das. It is perfectly clear that the Court had not the facts before it; and it also appears to us to be clear that the Court was never ealled upon by the plaintiff, whose duty it was to see that a proper person was appointed guardian ad litem, to appoint such a guardian. The fact is, that Hanuman Prasad was not properly represented as a party to that suit, and, therefore, any decree which was passed against him, was a mere nullity." For the reasons given above, having regard to the various desisions which have been sited, I think the decree of the Court below was right and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

LINISAY, J .- I agree,

ORDER.—The appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees, if any, on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPELL No. 1419 OF 1919.

LANKA LAKSHMINARAYANA
—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. I of 1908), ss. 8, 115

VENEATA RAMIAH APPA RAO D. LANKA LAKSHMINABATANA.

- Relinquishment of holding by ryot in favour of Zemindar subject to mortgage - Suit to enforce mortgage against mortgagor's heirs - Zemindar not impleaded, effect of Suit by auction-purchaser against Zemindar for possession, maintainability of Relinquishment and acceptance by surrenderce, effect of Madras Rent Recovery Act (Mad. VIII of 1865), s. 12.

A ryot in a zemindari relinquished his holding to the zemindar subject to a mortgage which he had created. The relinquishment was not made in the presence of witnesses as provided in section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act, but the zemindar accepted the relinquishment. Thereafter the mortgagee-sued the mortgagor's heirs for enforcement of his mortgage without impleading the zemindar as a party and obtained a decree for sale. The holding was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff's assignor. The plaintiff, on being obstructed by the zemindar while attempting to take possession, sued the latter for possession:

Held, (1) that the mortgage suit was misconceived as the zemindar, who was entitled to redeem, was not made a party; [p. 885, col. 2,]

12 that the decree for sale in the mortgage suit and the sale in execution did not bind the zemindar and that the plaintiff's assignor not having obtained title to the Kudivaram right by his purchase, neither he nor his assignee could maintain the present suit for possession [p. 385, col. 2.]

Per Eadasiva Aiyar, J—A mere relinquishment by the tenant to the landlord cannot put an end to the mortgage already created by the tenant so as to prejudice the mortgagee's rights. [p. 379, col. 2.]

The term 'abandonment' denotes an unilateral act which does not necessarily imply that the act has been, or has to be, brought to the notice of any other person whereas an act of 'relinquishment' or 'surrender' implies that the act is brought to the notice of the landlord. [p. 378, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—Relinquishment, acceptance and abandonment operate to terminate the estate of a tenant. The Kudivaram right is in abeyance until it comes into existence again by the admission of a new ryot and it continues in abeyance as long as the landlor? does, in accordance with law, treat the land as private land. [p. 356, cols. 1 & 2]

The words 'shall hold it as a landholder' in section 8 of the Estates Land Act do not necessarily imply that the land remains rooti land, and surrender is not an operation by which the entire interests become united 'otherwise.' [p. 387, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Appeal Suit No. 90 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary District Muncif, Gappayaram at Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 251 of 1915

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Appel-

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Respondent.

The second appeal and the memorandum of objections coming on for hearing on the 20th August 90 and the let September 1920, and having stood over for consideration till the 21st September 1920, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Sadasiva Airar, J .- The let defendant is the appellant. He is the Zamindar of the Mirzapuram E-tate, and the plaintiff, being the person who purchased a holding in the estate from the parchaser in a Court austion sale held in 1909 in execution of the mortgage. decree for sale passed in Original Suit No. 229 of 1900 on the file of the District Munsil's Court of Bezwada against the legal representatives of the original tenant of the holding (by name P. Venkayya) who had executed the mortgage deed in 1834. This sait was brought for possession of the lands comprised in the holding as the 1st defend ant's father (then Zamirdar) obstructed the plain'iff'e enjoyment in 19:0.

The let defendant pleaded (among other defences):-

(a) that the criginal tenant relinquished the land to the defendant's father in 1894 [See paragraph 2 of the written statement. At the trial, Fasli 1307 (or 1897—8) seems to have been mentioned as the date of the relinquishment;

(b) that the land has been thereafter enjoyed by the Zamindar as his home farm land;

(c) that the Zemindar did not know of the mortgage of 1894 and was not impleaded in the Suit No. 22) of 1906 instituted long after the relinquishment (of 1897-8) and hence the let defendant was not bound by the decree and sale in execution in that suit.

The District Munsif found (among other conclusions) that the lands were the home-farm lands of the 1st defendant owing to a general relinquishment of all the lands in the suit village of Kesarapalli in Faeli 13)?" by all the ryots of that village and that the mortgage-decree was not binding on the 1st defendant. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The Subordinate Julge on appeal gave the following findings:-

(a) "It is clear in this case that the land was Seri" (ryoti) "land and it was relinquished.

VENEATA BAMIAH APPA RAO O. LANEA LAKSHMINARAYANA

under the Estates Land Act (?); the land which was known to be Seri land cannot be converted into Kamatam land by the Zemin dar I have no doubt that the land is Seri land and not the Kamatam land of the Zemindar."

(b) "The relinquishment by Venkayya cannot affect the mortgage created in 1:94 I find, therefore, that the relinquishment by Venkayya (if any) will not affect the right of the mortgagee."

On these (and other) findings, the Sabordinate Judge substantially decreed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this second appeal by the 1st defendant. Though several grounds are mentioned in the memorandum of second appeal, the arguments urged before us by the learned Vakil for the second appellant were confined to the following contention:—

The lower (Appellate) Court entirely overlooked the fact that the Zamindar was not a party to the mortgage suit (of 1906)" (6th ground of appeal). The learned Vakil did not reriously dispute the finding that the land had continued to be ryoti land but argued as follows (expanding, if I may say so, the above 6th ground of appeal; (1) that the religquishment of Faeli 1:07 by Venkayya made the Zemindar the owner of the Kodivaram interest; (2) that the Zemindar, therefore, was the proper person to be impleaded as defendant in the mortgage suit of 1906 (and not Venkayya's legal representatives), tha Zemindar then representing the owner of the Kudivaram right and the right of redemption; (3) that the decree passed, and the Courtaustion sale held, behind the back of the Z : mindar did not bind him and could, therefore, be ignored by him, and (4) that the plaintiff as Court acotion purchaser (in a suit to which the owner entitled then to possession was not made a party) could not claim larger rights than the original simple mortgages who had no right as such to possession and becce the plaintiff's suit for possession ought to have been dismissed,

I think that the lower Appellate Court does seem to have ignored the fact that the Zemindar was not a party to the suit of 19 6. He was, therefore, clearly not bound by the decree and sale proceedings therein. On the other hand, as pointed out by the respondent's earned Vakil), the lower Appellate Court has not given a definite finding whether the

P. verkayya is true and legally valid. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court nees the phrase "relinquishment, if any." Further, I am unable to understand the sentence in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the land "was relinquished under the Estates Land Act" of 1908 as this Act came into force long after the date (1897—93) of the alleged relinquishment.

I find that the suit of 1906 seems to have been brought, not against Pallagani Venkayya but against Pallagani Lakshmigadu, Pallagani Ramudu and Pallagani Sithayya, (See Exhibit Al sale certificate). If they were the undivided sons or male descendants of P. Venkayya, the question arises whether the alleged relinquishment of 1.3.7, if made by P. Vankayya would bind them if the Kudivaram right was ancestral property. (This question was not argued before us). Again, a: o her legal question (which was argued) hes to be considered, namely, whether the relinquishment was not required to be in writing to have legal validity (see section 12 of the old Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865) and if it was orally made, whether the eirsumutances mentioned in Narassmma v. Lakshmona (1) as validating an oral surrender existed in the case. It is a matter for argument whether the decision in Narasimma v. Laks'mana (1) does not, if I may say so with respect, mix up the rights flowing to the landlord from aband: nment of the holding by the tenant with the rights flowing from the surrender or relirquishment of the holding by the tenant to the landlord. I think that "abandonment" denotes unilateral sot which does not necessarily imply that the act has been or has to be brought to the notice of any other person, whereas an act of "relinquishment" or "eurender" implies that the act is brought to the notice of the landlords. See Venka. tesh Narayan | ai v. Krishna i Ar un (2) and Baliji Sitaram Naik Sargavkir v. Bhikaji Soyne Prab'ıu (3), Adiveru Dinabhandu Patrudu v. Lokanadhasami (4) and Machar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (5). Yet another question has to be considered, namely, whether the surrender or relinquishment was of a right or interest worth over Re. 100 and whether such a transaction, if in writing is required to be registered to give it validity (see sestion 17 of the Indian Registration Act), though the Rent Recovery Act (passed in 1855) merely required that it should be in writing. A further question is, whether a surrender or relinquishment which is legally valid makes the landlord the owner of a distinct Kudivaram right in the land or whether it merely extinguishes the Kudivaram right just as sub section (2) of section 10 of the Madras Estates Land Act merely extinguishes the Kudivaram right when the tenant leaves no heir except the Government and does not vest any distinct positive right in the land. lord], See also section 8 (1) as to the nature of the right which a landlord obtains over a land in his estate when the tenant's interest is merged with the landlord's and Upadrosta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6), Zemindar of Ohellapalli v. Rajalapati (7) and orders of reference Somayya to the Fall Bench in Second Appeal No. 1765 of 1918. The extinguishment of the Kadivaram right by merger or extinction of the tenant's natural heirs does not, of course, convert ryoti land into private land and in a real sense, "the extinguishment" is only an abeyance of the right till it is revived by the grant of the land to a third person for rent by the landlord. If the landlord does not by the relinquishment of the tenant obtain for himself the tenant's distinct Kudivaram right, it seems to follow that he sould not also own what is called an equity of redemption in the Kudivaram right where the tenant's right had been subjected to a mortgage before the relinquishment or surrender. A landholder as such has no right to redeem a mortgage ereated over the Kudivaram right by his tenant as he (the landlord) endd not elaim to be a person having any interest in or sharge upon the property mortgaged (that is, the Kudivaram right) and so to fall under section 91, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act (unless rent had fallen into arrears in which case he has a charge on the land for recovery of arrears under sestion 5 of the Ast.) The other clauses of section 9; are wholly inapplicable. Section 8 of the Madras Estates Land Ast seems to prohibit a holding ructi land at landholder from any time under any circumstances as if he owned the Kudivaram right therein except' of course, in the case of one of several Sestion 10, elause on sharer lan ibolders. (2) also makes it clear that even when the owner of the Kudizaram right in a ryoti land died leaving no beirs except the Crown, though the Crown was by this Statute prevented from inheriting the tenant's right (as it was entitled to do before this Act came into force) the landlord did not inherit the right of the deceased tenant as a distinct Kudivaram right, but the dead man's right was merely extinguished on his death and the landlord's right was only to indust any person he liked into the land as a tenant and that person would obtain the Kudivaram right under section 6 of the Act.

I shall here refer to two matters which related to the course of the trial in the The appellant (let defendlower Courts ant) seems to have relied in those Courts his contention that the land became his Kamatam land by the relinquishment of 18:7-8 and he seems not to have put forward, or at least pressed enfisiently, his contention that he became the owner of the equity of redemption by the relinquish. ment and was entitled to retain possession as such owner till his right was extinguished by a decree passed and execution proseedings taken in a suit to which he was himself made a party. That a mere relinquishment to the landlord cannot put an end to the mortgage already created by the tenant so as to prejudise the mortgages's right is now well established, See Ohotey Lal v. Sheopal Singh (8) and Ekambara Ayyar v. Meenatchi Ammal (9).

The other matter referred to is, that the Court of first instance did not settle the issues properly on the very complicated questions which I am considering and which were argued before us here. The only issue framed was the general one, "whether the suit land belongs to the plaintiff or his predecessor in title." The 3rd ground of anneal to the lawer Appellate Court was, "the lower Court should have framed the most important issus in the suit regarding the relinquish. ment of the suit land in their fayour pleaded by the dafendants, as also with regard to the Kamatam nature of the suit land as sontended for by the defendants." The lower Appellate Court also did not frame all the necessary questions for coneideration and the second point framed by it was, "whether the land was relicquished and whether the relinguishment thereby gives the Zamindar an absolute right in the land." On that question, while it came to the conclusion that the Zemindar did not get the absolute right in the land. it held that he asquired a right in the Kadivaram subject to the prior mortgage, and it at once rushed to the constasion that the decree and the sale properties; in the suit of 1905 to which the Zomindar was not made a party were also binding upon bim and hence he sould not retain presession. What definite right the Zemindar got by the ryot's ralinguishment (if true) has not been properly considered and decided by the lower Appellate Court.

The respondent's learned Vakil (Mr. Ramades;) attempted to support the decres of the lower Appellate Court by raising the ontention that the relingishment itself to the landlord, if true, was wholly invalid as it was made after the tenant had earved out a mort. gage out of the tenancy right in favour of a stranger. He relied upon Sir Bhashyam Iyengar, J.'s dictum in Ekambara Ayyar v. Meenatchi Ammal (S). The learned Judge was considering the proviso to section 12 of the old Rent Recovery Ast of 186) enacting that tenants shall be allowed to relicquish their lands at the end of ins revenue year by a writing to be signed by them in the presence of witnesses or at any other time if the landlord is willing to accept the relinquishment, I might add here that in the corresponding sestion 149 of the Madras Estates Land Ast, the words " by a writing to be signed in the presence of witnesses " does not appear, but section 150, elause (1), which speaks of the landhelder refusing to receive a notice of the relinquishment given under section 149 and section 150, clause (2), which speaks of tender of such notice clearly imply that the notice should be in writing though it need not be attested by witnesses. (The omission of the words "by notice in writing" in section 49 cosms to be a clerical over. sight on the part of the Lagicistare). In supposition with the right of the terent nuder the Bont Becovery Act of 1865 to relinguish the land even against the will of the landlord, the learned Judge (Bhashyam digangar, J.) remarked "woon the dens diw bereined ei bedeingeniles beal an ingambrance, the relinquishment itself may be inoperative to terminate his liability as tenant to the landholder until the immbrance ceases by officiation of time or is herwise discharged by the tenant. (Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (10) and Bifri Prasid v. Sheo Dhian (11)]." The learned Judge did not lay down that the relingliebment was void but he seems only to point that the right and privilege to relinquish given by the Statute against the will of the landlord cannot be exercised so as to put an end to the tenancy if the insumbranco ereated had not been extinguished before the relinquishment and the landlord refused to resognise the relinquishment owing to the ineumbranser's right to bring the holding to sale and his consequent right to give the purchaser at each sale a claim to repudiate the landlora's dealing with the relirquished holding by letting it to whomso. ever the landlord shooses. I think that all that the learned Judge intended to lay down was that the relinquishment made under circumstances which would not enable the landlord to deal with the relinquished land in its entirety as an uner-cambered holding need not be recognied by the landlord. Take a case where the tenant has sub let his holding for 20 years as he was entitled to do. His relinquishment of the land when !5 years of the emb-lease term had still to run and the sab-lesses was in possession, could not he allowed to prejudice the landlord who ought not to be made to wait for 15 years to exercise bis power to indust a new anant. The same in Badri Prasad v. quoted by the learned Sheolian (11)

VENEATA BAMIAH APPA BAO U. LINEA LAESHWINABAYAWA.

Judge in support of his dictum lays do vo only that a sab-lease for a term of years g a . ed by an occapancy tenant is not put an e ! to by a relinquishment to the landlord by the oceupancy tenant. If the landlord chooses to waive his rights and to recognise the sub lease (or even a mortgage) and to exercise the landlord's rights assraing under the re linquishment subject to the sub-lease or mortgage righte, I do not see is anything to prevent him from so reengoising the relinquishment. When the learned Judge says that the relicquishment may be inoperative to terminate the tenant's liability, it does not necessarily negative the conclusion that if the landlord onesented to the termination of the liability of the tenant, the liability may be put an end to notwithstanding the existence of an incumbrance or a sub lease. In order to simplify matters, section &6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, while it says in subsection (1), "A ruot not bound by a lease or other agreement for a fixed period may at the end of any agricultural year surrender his holding," adds in sub-section (6), "When holding is subject to an incombrance secured by a registered instrument, the surrender of the holding shall not be valid unless it is made with the consent of the landlord and the incumbrancer." sub-section (7) says: "Save as is provided in the last foregoing section nothing in this section shall affect any arrangement by which a ryot and his landlord may arrange for the surrender of the whole or a part of the bolding." Thus, under subsection (6) of section 86 of the Bangal Tenancy Act, the consent both of the landlord and the insumbrancer are pecessary to make valid the surrender of a holding which is subject to an incumbrance secured by a registered instrument. But as section 149 of the Madras Estates Land Act contains no similar provisions, I do not think that it can be argued that the relinquishment itself is wholly invalid because it is subject to an incumbrance at the time of the relinquishment which is the contention put forward by Mr. Ramadoes on the strength of the short obiter dictum of Sir Bhashyam Igenger, J., already quoted.

In the result, I am of opinion that this second appeal cannot be satisfactorily disposed of until some of the material questions arising in the case are definitely formulated and findings obtained from the lower Court on those questions, both parties being at liberty to adduce further evidence. Those questions are:—

1. Did Venksyya relicquish the lands to the Zemindar? When did he do so? Did he relinquish it in the manner provided for by section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act (Act VIII of 1865)? Even if there were defects in the mode, time and character of the relinquishment, did the Zemindar consent to the relinquishment and to the putting an end of the tenancy?

2. Was such a relinquishment binding on Venkeyya and the undivided co-parseners, if any, of Venkayya's family? Was it made by registered instrument? If not, was it invalid on that account?

3. Was the holding not Venkayya's an-

4. Who were the defendants in the snit (Original Suit No. 229 of 1906)? If they were the undivided co-pareners of Venkayya, was the relinquishment binding on them or had they consented to such relinquishment and had their interests in the holding been extinguished before they were made parties to the suit Original Suit No. 22 of 1906?

5. Was the late Sri Baja the owner of the Kudivaram right in the lands at the time of the suit of 1906 and had he by the relinquishment, (supposing it is true and valid) or in any other mode become the legal owner of the Kudivaram and sould he legally become such owner not-withstanding his status as Zemindar?

6. (The Court would have to consider the effect of the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act already referred to in coming to a conclusion on this point). Was the Zemindar entitled on the date of the suit of 1906 to redeem the mortgage created by Venkayya? Findings should be submitted within six weeks from receipt of records in the lower Court and ten days are allowed for filing objections.

Napies, J.-I' agree with my learned brother that we must have findings on the issues settled by him, and reserve my opinion on the points of law until argument on the findings returned.

Even if there were defects in the mode, time and character of the relinquishment, did the Zamindar consent to the relinquishment and to the putting an end of the tenancy?

If.—Was such a relinquishment binding on Venkayya and the undivided co parceners, if any, of Venkayya's family? Was it made by a registered instrument? If not, was it invalid on that account?

III .- Was the holding not Venkayya's ancestral property?

IV.—Who were the defendants in the suit (Original Suit No. 229 of 1906) on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Bezwada? If they were the undivided so parceners of Venkayya, was the relinquishment binding on them or had they consented to such relinquishment and had their interests in the holding been extinguished before they were made parties to the suit Original Suit No. 229 of 1906?

V.—Was the late Sri Raja, the owner of the Kudivaram right in the lands at the time of the suit of 1906 and had he by the relinquishment (supposing it is true and valid) or in any other mode become the legal owner of the Kudivaram and sould he legally become such owner notwithstanding his status as Zam ndar's and the date of the suit of 1906 to redeem the mortgage created by Venkayya?

2. The 1 issue. The defendants' care is that Venkayya relinquished the lands since Fasli 1307 and in support thereof they have now produced and exhibited Exhibit V, dated 2nd February 1897. The execution of this document has been proved by the two defences witnesses (examined after remand) and I see no reason to disbelieve their testimony. I find Exhibit V is a genuine and true document. I, therefore, deside that Venkayya did relinquish the lands to the Zemindar on 2nd February 1847 (of course, to come into effect at the end of that Facili 1306).

3. Section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act (Act VIII of 1865) runs thus:......Provided always that tenants shall be allowed to relinquish their lands at the end of the revenue year by a writing to be signed by them in the presence of witness or at any other time if the landholder is willing to accept the relinquishment."

The relinquishment in question is in writing, but there is not clear evidence to show that it was signed in the presence of witnesses. In so far as the evidence of defendants' let witness goes, this document was not signed (mark affixed) in his presence.

The second attestor was not called and the writer (defendants' 2nd witness) has stated nothing on this point. So I must hold that here was defect in the mode.

But there is evidence enough on record to show that the Zamindar did consent to the relinquishment and put an end to the tenancy. The defendants' second witness has stated that orders were issued to the effect that the lands should removed from the 'Seri' head in the accounts and entered in the 'Kamatam' head and it was accordingly done. The lands were leased as 'Kamatam lands' under Exhibits I and IV and have ever in the possession of the Zemindar. is admitted by almost all the witnesses for the plaintiff.

4. The 11 issue.—The document is not registered. But I hold it is not invalid on that account. Section 12 of Act VIII of 1865 did not require registration. The Limitation Act of 1804 was already in force by then and if the document was required to be registered it would have been so stated in the Act (VIII of 1865). The decision reported as Rangayya App. Rauv. Ratnam (12) supports my decision.

5. The relinquishment which was defective (vide paragraph 3 supra) was binding on Venkayya, since it was accepted by the Zemindar and acted on by him and by Venkayya and his co-pareeners. (The rights of the co-pareeners will be consider.

- worth the name for the defendants to show that the land is not Venkayya's ancestral property. On the other hand, the defence evidence goes to strengthen the plaintiff's ease that the property is ancestral So I decide the point against the defendants.
- 7. The IV issue .- The defendants in Original Suit No. 229 of 1916 were Venkayya's sons (cide Exhibit G - extract from the suit register: vide Exhibit Gl also which shows that the plaint, decree and judgment were destroyed). These are, according to the evidence on record, the undivided sons of the late Venkayya and all of them were minors at the time of the relinquishment. This is not disputed by the plaintiff. The sons being miners at that time could not have given any consent to the relinquishment. So the question resolves itself into whether the relinquishment by the father binds the sons' I think it is binding on the sons. Zemindar gave notice to Vankayya calling on him to quit the land (apparently alleging that he had no right of occupancy holding). Similar notices in the served on almost all the ruots. of them sent replies disputing the right set up by the Zemindar. Then the Zemin. dar filed suits and obtained decrees against some. It was then that Venkayya relinquished the land. It was clearly in the power of a manager of a joint Hindu family to have asted in the manter Venkayya did, saving the family from the expenses and costs of a ruinous litigation. No doubt, some suits which were filed sometime after this relinquishment were desided against the Z mindar but that is a different matter. By the time of Echibit V the Zemindar's contention was upheld. Venkayya did not want that a suit-should be filed against him and he be taxed with costs. So he relinquished. There is nothing to show that he was coerced. In my opinion, he acted prudently under the circumstances. So the relinquianment is binding on the sons. It is in evidence that ever BIDGE the relinquishment the sons have had no possession and enjoy-The evidence of plaintiff's 6th witness is not entitled to any the least eredit, for his relations with the estate
- the interest of the sons became extingatished by the time of the suit, Original Suit No. 229 of 1906.
- 8. The Vissue. The Zemindar cannot be said to have become the owner of the Kudiyaram. Under section 8 (1) of the Estates Land Ast, the Z mindar can hold the land only as a landholder. he had enjoyed the land for 12 years prior to the Ast soming into fores, i e., if the land had been cultivated as private land by the landbolder himself by his own servants or by his labour, etc., the land can be deemed to be the landholder's private land (tide section 185). But in this case there was no such enjoyment. The relinquish. ment came into effect in 1397. The land was leased for about 8 years to tenants (under Exhibits IV and I) and it was then that the Zamindar commenced to cultivate the lands himself. So I decide the issue against the defendants.
- 9. The VI issus.—It is contended by the defendants that because the Zemindar was in actual physical possession of the land by the time of the suit they are entitled to redeem. No authority has been shown to me to support the defendants' contention. It may be something if that matured and created session had title in the defendants. But it 'was not so. So the mere sirsumstance that defendants were in possession (this is clearly established by the evidence on record) since the time of the relicquishment (and so by the time of the suit) cannot help the defendants. That defendants can have no right to redeem under other stances has been laid down by His Lordship in the remand order (judgment) I must and do find the issue against the defendante.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.

Sadasiva Ayyan, J.—The let defendant (appellant) is the Zemindar of Mirzapuram and the plaintiff (respondent) is the purchaser in the Coart auction-sale of a certain cultivable land in the estate, the sale having been held in execution of a morgage decree passed against one P. Venkeyya who was the rect tenent of the land all 1897, the mortgage soit having been brought against him in 1905 when he had ceased to be the tenant of the land. In 1897, the said P. Venkayya abandoned the land and the Zemindar took possessin of it and yet as Venkayya was the criginal most agor (the mortgage-deed being cated 1:14) he was impleaded as the defendant in the mortgage suit of 1:06 and the Zemirdar who was in possession was not impleaded. The plaintiff as the Court auction purchaser brought this suit in 1915 in ejectment of the 1st defendant, the Zemindar, who is in possession of the land.

The lower Appellate Court held (1) that as the land was admittedly ryoti land till 1897, it sould never become sonverted into private land, because by the Statute Law land which is ascertained to have been at one time, however remote, ruoti land could never become converted into Kamatam land; (2) assuming even that ryoti land could be so converted by the Zemirdar into Kamatam after relinquishment by the ryot, the mortgage oreated by the syet before such relinquishment could not be affected in any way and the eale in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage conferred on the purchaser at that sale the right to hold that land as ryoti land.

As regards the first point, it must admitted that there is a strong body judicial opinion in the desisions of this Court in support of the view that if a land is proved to have once been ryoti land, it could never be treated afterwards as baving (by any dealings by the Zemindar or by the tenant or by both) been converted into Kamatam land except in the single case mentioned in the proviso to section 185 of the Madras Estates Land Act, ramely, except where the landholder has by his own servants or by hired labour with his own or hired stock cultivated the land as private land for 2 years immediately before the commencement of the Act. In Zemindar of Chellapalli v. Ra: alugati Somayya (7) that very learned Judge, Seshagiri Aiyar, J., has given reasons in pages 349, 350 and 351.* in support of the above *Pages of 39 M .- [Ed.]

view. This view of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., seems to have been accented by Abdur Rahim, J. and Barn, J., in Variagada Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu v. Renduchintala Subbiah (13). The lerned Chief Justice, however, in Ze. mindar of Chellapalli v. Rajalapati Somayya (7) held the view that a ryoti land can be shown to have been converted into private land by evidence of other acts than the acts mentioned in the proviso to section 185, but added that such ev.dense should be "very olear and satisfactory." The learned Chief Justice held further in that particular case that the calling of the lands as Kamatam and the letting of them out on terms negativing ossupancy right with a view to prevent the assertion of such right (even if such letting had gone on from 18 5 till 1910) were insafficient to convert them into private lands if such conduct of the Zamindar could be held to have been merely colourable for the purpose of defeating the rights of the ocsupancy tenants. The inclination of my own view is to follow with respect the opinion of Seshagiri Aiyar, J. In the present case as the cultivation by hired servants of the Zemindar could not have begun prior to 12 years before July 1903, when the Madras Estates Land Act came into force (the abandonment having been only in 1897). the land must be deemed to have oontinued to be reofi land.

On the other question whether there has been a valid relinquishment, valid at least to the extent that the tenant lost all interest in the land relinquished, I have nothing to add to what my learned brother has said in the judgment prepared by him in this case.

The next question for consideration is, whether if the relinquishing tenant had created a mortgage right over the Kudivaram interest in the land before his abandonment and relinquishment, that mortgage interest also came then to an end. On principle, it is difficult to see how a parson after having carved out an interest in favour of another for valuable consideration could destroy by his unilateral act the interest so created in the other person's favour, that is, without the consent of the assignee of that interest. In Ekambara Ayyar v. Meenatchi Ammal (9) Bhashyam Lyyengar, J., says: "It is unnesessary to consider and decide in this case the effect of a relinquishment under section 12 (Rent Becovery Act) at the end of the revenue year of his holding by a ryot as it is not analogous to an ejectment on forfeiture. The operation of such relinquishment meane insumbranees created by the tenant may stand altogether on a different footing and the relinquishment itself, when the land relinquished is burdened with such an incumbrance, may be inoperative to terminate his liability astenant to the landholder until the ensumbrance seases by effloxion of time or is otherwise discharged by the tenant. Sham Das v. Batul Bibi (10) and Badri Prasad v. Sheo Dhian (11)." The learned Judge was evidently considering the case of a relinquishment which the landholder refused to accept, the refusal being based on the ground that a mortgage interest had already been ereated over the holding and the landlord sould not let the land to another tenant free from that mortgage. The observation of the learned Judge rather shows that while, on forfeiture for non asseptance of pattah, a mortgage interest erested prior to the forfeiture failed [which was the direct decision in Rkambara Ayyar v. Mesnatchi Ammal (9)] a mere relinquishment would not put an end to a prior mortgage.

Holding, then, that the mortgage of 1892 subsisted in favour of the mortgages after the date of and, notwithstanding the linquishment of 1847, the question is in whom did the right to redeem 789$ on that relicquishment? It seems to me elear that it must vest in the person who became the owner of the Kudivaram interest Melwaram interest after the Kudiyaram owner abandoned or relinquished his Kudivaram interest was considered by me. My conclusion was that a land holder, soil through his hired or farm servants. I further held that when a ryoti land is abandoned by a tenant, it might be legally permissible to state that the Kudivaram thereupon became vested in a certain sense in the land-holder because the land-holder became vested with the right to grant the Kudivaram right to any other person he liked after the abandonment by the former tenant of the said lands. I, however, added that the vesting of the Kudivaram in that sense in the land holder till he granted it to a new tenant could not convert. ryoti land into private land. further considered the matter, I see no. sufficient reason to change my above view . that the Kudivaram in the abandoned holding might be deemed to become vested in the land holder for some legal purposes till the land holder inducted a new tenant into the land. It follows from what I have above stated that the mortgage suit which was brought in 1906 against a person who had essed to be the owner of the right to redeem, namely, P. Venkayya, was wholly missonssived, that the Zeminder who was then the only person who could in a limited sense represent the Kudivaram interest (though he may not be said to be its owner in its full sense) and who was, therefore, entitled to redeem the mortgage was the proper party to have been impleaded as the defendant in the sait for sale by the mortgages, and that as he was not made a party to that: the desree for Bait 8316 bus sale in execution held thereunder bound neither the lands nor the Zimindar and that the plaintiff (purshaser in the Court auction sale) could not, therefore, maintain the present suit for possession having obtained no title to the Kadivaram right in the land on such relinquishment. In Upa. by his purchase in the decree passed in drasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6) the said missonsieved suit. The Sabordithe question of the right of an inamdar in nate Judge's decree must, therefore, bar the lands in which he owned only a reversed and that of the District Munsif. restored with costs here and in the lower: Appellate Court.

NAPIER, J .- The Bant Resovery Ast of 18:5, section 12, gives to a tenant a right to though he owned the waste and abandoned relinquish his holding and I am clear that: lands in his village in a certain sense, he cannot create an interest in his estate. could not be considered to enjoy the Kudi. that will operate to destroy that right but varam in the ordinary mode without that all such interests are subject to such direct emiset by the entireation of the right. But in dealing with the facts of this, ease we have first to decide whether there was a valid relinquishment. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no writing in the presence of witnesses as provided for in the first sentence of the proviso to section 12 of the Rent Recovery Act and we must accept that finding. He finds, however, that there was in fact a relinquishment accepted by the Zemindar and acted on by him and by Venkayya and his ec-parceners which amounts to an abandonment in pursuance of the relinquishment. In dealing with similar facts, Shepherd, J., held in Narasimma v. Lakshmana (1), that relinquishment, acceptance and abandonment operate to terminate the estate of a tenant; while Muthusami Iyer, J., went even further and held that a mutual contract from which a surrender in fact might reasonally be inferred was a valid relinquishment. I see no reason to differ from his ruling, given many years ago, and hold that there was a valid relinquishment. The important question remains, bowever, what was the effect of that relinquishment and the subsequent dealings with the land by the landlord on the mortgage right of the original mortgagee in the hands of the present plaintiff sping in The plaintiff is the assignee of the austion-purchaser of the land sold in execution of the mortgage-deeree in 1909 and elaims as owner of the land to recover possession of it from the Zemindar to whom it was relinquished. The relinquishment was in 1897. In the same year the Zemindar purported to lease the land to the same tenant as Kamatam for a term of three years. In 1900 it was leased to a stranger for 5 years as Kamatam. In 1905 the land was cultivated by the landlord as private land, In 1906 the mortgages brought his suit against the original mortgagor ignoring the Zemindar who was in possession and the mortgagor's interest was sold in 1909. On those facts the first question seems to me to be, what became of the Kudivaram interest after the relinquishment and on the lease as Kamatam in the same year. It was decided in Ekambara Ayyar v. Meenatchi Ammal (9), that ejectment of a tenant by a landlord for refusal to accept a proper patta extinguished all mesne incumbrances just as forfeiture of a lease-hold interest extinguishes all incumbrances under section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act, though the Court is eareful to point out (vide page 408) that a ryot with a right of occupancy is not a mere lease. holder, but the Court expressed no cpinion as to the efficacy of a relinquishment under section 12 where mesne insumbrances have been created by the tenant. I have already expressed my opinion that the statutory right of relinquishment cannot be made inoperative. but the other question stillremains. It was held by my learned brother in Upadrasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6) that on abandonment by a ruot with occupancy right the Kudiyaram did not vest in the land-lord in such a manner as necessarily to convert the land into private land (vide page 895) and in Adusumulli Suryanarayana v. Achhutta Potanna (14), that surrender and abandonment were not a method by which the Kudivaram interest ean be acquired by virtue of the exception to section 8 of the Madras Estates Land Act. Agreeing with this view, I would hold that the Kudivaram right in this land was in abeyance until it came into existence again by admission of a new ryot and continued in abeyance as long as the landlord did and could in accordance with law treat the land as private land, Under section 6, sub-section (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act if occupancy right land is surrendered after the Act and a tenant is admitted to possession within 10 years of such surrender, he acquires a right of occupancy. That is to say, the Kudivaram interest is revived in him irrespective of the fact that the land might have been sultivated by the landlord himself for 9 years; but we have to consider the case of land which was treated as Kamatam prior to the Act. It was held by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., as I understand the learned Judge, in Upadrasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6), and in Zemindar of Chellapalli v. Rajalapati Somayya (7), that, except in the case specified in the proviso to section 185, no land can, after the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act, ever have been converted into private land because of the retrospective operation of section 8, sub-section (1) and that view has been pressed strongly on us. The learned Chief Justice has distinctly negatived it in the latter case and, sitting with Ayling, J., had deelined to accept it in Chintam

JAWALA DAS U. HUKAM CHARD.

Reldi v. Rajasagi Appala Nurasimha Raja Garu (15). I agree with the Justice that the words "but shall hold it as a land-holder" do not necessarily imply that it remains ryoti land, and I am also of opinion that surrender is not an operation by which the entire interests become united "otherwise." I might add that where so large a proposition is contended for as that the conversion of oscupancy land into private land since the Permanent Settlement is, since the Madras Estates Land Act, retrospestively inoperative, very definite language must be relied on and the language used in this section falls far short of that requisite. In my opinion, the view expressed by Seshagiri Aiyar, J, in the two cases referred to should not be followed.

I now turn to section 185. This land elearly does not some within the proviso to section 185. So, it is presumably not private land but at the date of the suit in 1915 it was being sultivated by the land. lord himself and had been so cultivated for 10 years. Even at the date of the mortgage suit, the land was being cultivated by the landlord. It is found that the lands are surrounded by the Kamatam lands of the Zemindar and it is admitted that in 1897, eleven years prior to the passing of the Act, they were let as Kamatam lands and continued to be so let until 1905 when the landlord took them under personal cultivation. In my opinion, it is now too late to contend successfully that the lands are not the priwate lands of the Zemindar, whatever might have been the result if the mortgages had brought his suit on his mortgage against his mortgagor in 1897 when the latter took the lands on lease in 1897 directly after his surrender. What would be the effect on the mortgage right if the lands ever became ryoti again is a question I do not propose to consider. I think it enough to say that the land. lord, not having been a party to the mortgage suit (I do not decide that he could have been made a party), is not bound by the decree and being himself in possession of his Kamatam lands cannot be ejected. I would, therefore, dismiss this suit with coats throughout.

This second appeal having been set down to be spoken to on the 28th April 1921, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar, J.), delivered the following

JUDGMENT .- When pronouncing judg. ment, we omitted by oversight to mention what we had resolved and expressed our intention to do during the source of the argaments, namely, to allow the memorandum of objections in respect of decreeing possession of Item No. 2 with mesne profits (Rs. 36) against the defendants who are in possession thereof, and we intended that the suit was to be dismissed and the District Munsif's decree resorted only as regards Item No. 1. This omission in the judgment will be considered as supplied on the above lines and the memorandum allowed to that extent. The District Munsif will, of course, be entitled to pass supplementary deerse after enquiry as regards future mesne profits.

JUDGMENT .- The plaintiffs in this case sue for a sum of Rs. 2,270 which they claim to be due to them from the defendants. There have been mutual dealings between the parties, each side supplying the other with certain goods. The assounts were made up from time to time and on the 19th Baisakh, Sambat 1962, a balance for Rs. 1,712 was struck in favour of the plaintiffs. A later balance for Rs. 1,718 14.6 was struck in favour of the plaintiffs on the 15th Jeth of the same year. This amount was the same as that due on the former balance of the 19th Baisakh 19.2 except that Re. 6-14-6 were added as interest. Since then, there have been no dealings between the parties. enit was brought on the 9th August 1915, i.e., about ten years after the striking of the last balance. The first Court decreed the claim but the learned District Judge holds that the ease is governed by Article 85 of the Sabedule of the Limitation Act and is time barred. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court.

The period of limitation under Article 85 is three years, and it is admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants that if Article 85 applies to the case the suit is barred by limitation. But on behalf of the plaintiffs it is urged that tois is not a case of a mutual, open and surrent ascount but rather a case of a closed account, and that the Article applicable is Article 64, the period of limitation under the Panjab Loans Limits. tion Act being six years. On the 2 sth August 1909 the defendants applied to be declared insolvents and they then showed the debt, which is the subject of the present suit, in their list of liabilities. Coansel for the respondents admits that if the period of limitation applicable to the suit is six years, this acknowledgment made by the defendants in 1909 would be sufficient to renew limita. tion under sestion 19 of the Ast.

The only question for our decision, therefore, is whether the Article applicable is Article 85 or Article 64. Mr. Nanak Chard relies mainly on the case published as Ishar Das v. Harkishan Das (1). ruling, however, does not seem to us to be at all parallel to the present case, for it was a case in which the account consisted solely of loans by the plaintiff to the defendants who made re-payments in the shape of grain. This, obviously, was not a case of a mutual assount but simply an ordinary loan account. Mr. Nanek Chand argues that in the present case the account must be regarded as a elesed account and not an open asscunt from the fact that, since the date of the last balance, no further transactions have taken place between the parties. The mere fact that the plaintiffs have allowed a considerable time to elapse before suing eannot in any way change the nature of the account; nor are we able to hold that an account becomes closed whenever a balance is struck, Mr. Nanak Chand places reliance on a paragraph in the above-mentioned raling which begins: "It will be observed that plaintiffs sue not on an open but on a elesed assount." We note, however, that the preceding paragraph shows that a fresh item had been borrowed and a fresh payment made since the stricking of the last balance, so that no support is here found for Mr. Nanak Chand's proposition that an assount is closed whenever a balance is struck until it is re-opened by fresh dealings. For the respondents reliance is placed on Jas Ram v. Attar Chand (2) which seems to us exactly in point. This is the roling which has been relied on by the learned District Judge respondents also eites Counsel for the Chittar Mal v. Behari Lal (3), which quotes the definition of a mutual account given in Ganes's v. Gyanu (4). Other rulings eited are Murugappa Ohetty v. Vyapuri Chetty (5) and Laljee sahoo v. Roghconundun Lall sahoo (6). In the present case it appears clear to us that there were mutual dealings and that. though balances were struck from time to time, there were merely asknowledgments and not agreements to pay, and the ease is one not of a stated account but of a mutual, open and current account, where there have been resiprosal demands between the parties, The case is, therefore, governed by Article 85 and not by Article 64. Mr. Navak Chand also argued that Article 57 might be applied to the case, but this is obviously inapplicable

RESPONDEATS. Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 18 (1), 14-Arbitration-Reception of evidence in absence of party affected thereby, propriety of-Principle of justice-Irregularity of procedure - Misconduct - Award, when should be remitted and when set aside.

Where the arbitrators in a case do not decide a substantial question arising between the parties to the arbitration in the presence of both the parties and arrive at an ex parte decision in the presence of one party the award is invalid. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Whether an arbitration is conducted on the footing that it is a mercantile or a legal arbitration, the first principles of justice must be equally applied in every case. One of these elementary principles is that an arbitrator must not receive information from one side which is not disclosed to the other, whether the information is given orally or in the shape of documents [p. 891, col. 1.]

In arbitration proceedings both sides must be heard, and each in the presence of the other ; however immaterial the arbitrator may deem a point, he should be very careful not to examine a party or a witness upon it, except in the presence of the opponent. [p. 891, col. 2.] It is both an unwise and unsafe proceeding for .

an arbitrator to take proof in the absence of either . or both parties. [p. 8+2, col. 1.]

If irregularities in procedure are proved which amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute that would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award, without any imputation on the .. col. I.

The Court may remit an award when the arbitra tor has been guilty of misconduct in a technical sense, that is, if the misconduct is of such a nature as does not disqualify him from acting or render it impossible for the Court to trust him. If the arbitrator is guilty of fraud or partiality or such like misconduct, as would justify his removal the Court will not remit the award. But where the arbitrator has merely failed to exercise all his powers or has improperly exercised a discretion, such as, hearing witnesses or consulting documents in the absence of the parties, and this has happened in spite of a complete absence of dishonest motive the Court will not hesitate to remit the award to the arbitrator instead of setting it aside. [p. 892, ols 1 & 2.]

An arbitrator is the Judge chosen by the parties, he has a wide measure of discretion as to the manner in which the proceedings are to be conducted and a due knowledge of the whole case is to be brought to his mind. His award will not be set aside, merely because the Court differs in opinion from him upon the merits of the dispute submitted for his decision, [p. 393, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of Mr. Justice

Bankin, dated the 12th April 1920.

Sir B. O. Mitter and Mr. Pearson, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Gregory, for the Respondents. JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, Acro. C. J .- This is an appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin in the matter of an application to set aside an award.

On the 28th August 1919 the appellants agreed to sell to the respondents 5,000 bales of jute of what has been called the Narainganj mark. The contract contained an arbiration clauss in the following terms: -

"Any dispute arising out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bangal Chamber of Commerce whose desision shall be assepted as final and binding on both parites to this contract."

The same for the appellants is that, between the 1st and 30th September 1919, they delivered to the buyers 2,434 bales of jute of the contract mark assortment and quality, which were reseived by them. The buyers were apparently not satisfied with the quality of the jate and on the 11th September 1919 referred the matter to the arbitrators without any notice to the plaintiffs. On the 17th-September 1919, the Registrar of the Arbitration Tribunal of the Obamber intimated to the appellants the objection taken by the buyers. On the next day, the appellants replied that they had received no complaint honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator. [p. 892, from the buyers and denied that there was same for arbitration. After some 877 of the questions raised in this appeal, the Registrar sent the following letter to the appellants on the 6th November 1919:—

I am instructed by the Court which has been constituted to adjudicate on the above dispute to request you to select in conjunction with Messrs. Jardine Skinner & Co., Managing Agents, Kankinarrah Co., Ld., ten bales from the 1,275 bales in dispute, five bales to be selected by yourselves and five bales by Mesere. Jardine Skinner & Co. The bales must be here at 10 o'clock on Saturday the 8th instant. Should you refuse or neglect to select your portion of the bales in time to enable Mesers. Jardine Skinner & Co., to sand them here on the day and at the hour mentioned, Messre. Jardine Skinner & Co, have been informed that they will be at liberty to select the whole ten bales themselves and send them here. You may identify the bales here at 10-30 A. M. on that day."

On the next day, the sellers replied as "With reference to your letter No. 21914, dated the 6th instant, we are to submit to the Court which have been constituted to adjudicate on the above dispute that our representatives went to select bales, cut of the lot of; 1,275 bales, as advised by the Court, and they found only a mixed lot containing about 150 to 200 bales of the mark in dispute. They politely but persistently requested the mills authorities to show them the lot of 1,275 bales dispute which they refused and failed do; thus they were not in a position to select bales as required by the Court. In the circumstances, we would submit to the Court to postpone the arbitration for the present and to find out the lot in dispute so that we can select the bales for their inspection. If in spite of our this submission to the Court. it proceeds with the arbitration, we would not be bound by the Court's award which will be based on inadequate and one-sided evidense."

It appears on the 6th November 1919 the Registrar had also sent a letter to the buyers in the following terms:—

"I am instructed by the Court which has been constituted to adjudicate on the above dispute to request you to select, in conjunction with Mesers. Harising Nehal Chand, ben bales from the 1,275 bales in dispute, five bales to be selected by yourselves and five bales by Messrs. Harising Nehal Chand. The bales must be here at 10 o'clock on Saturday next the 8th instant. Should Messrs. Harising Nehal Chand refuse or neglect to select their portion of the bales in time to enable you to send them here on the day and at the hour mentioned, you will be at liberty to select the whole ten bales yourselves and send them here."

To this, the buyers replied next day as follows:-

"In asknowledging receipt of your letter No. 21915 C of 6th instant, we beg to advise you that as Messrs. Harising Nebal Chand have refused to select bales for arbitration ex the parcel in dispute, we have exercised the authority granted us in your letter under reply and have to-day despatched 10 bales of our own selecting to the Chamber for favour of arbitration."

It now transpires that the arbitrators did not communicate to the buyers the reply received from the sellers on the 7th November 1919, in which they alleged that they could not make the selection as directed by the arbitrators, as they were not allowed by the buyers to have access to the 1,275 bales. Nor did the arbitrators communicate to the sellers the reply received from the buyers. On the other hand, they accepted the ten bales selected by the buyers and called upon the sellers on the 14th November 1919 to identify them:

"I am directed to give you notice to identify, on or before 2 P. M. to morrow, Saturday, the 15th November, the ten bales which have been sent here by Mesers. Jardine Skinner & Co., from the parcel in dispute, failing which the bales will be inspected for purposes of the arbitration."

The sellers protested against this procedure and declined to be a party to the arbitration proceedings further. Ultimately, the arbitrators made an award on the 26th November 1919, holding that the quality of the jute was not equal to the standard of the mark, and directing the sellers to pay to the boyers an allowance of Rs. 31,875 on the 1,275 bales in dispute. The award was filed in Court on the 19th January 1920. On the 16th March 1920 the sellers made an application to have the award set aside, which has been refused by Mr. Justice Rankin. On the present appeal, we have been invited to set aside the award as improperly made. In our opinion, the award must be remitted to the arbitrators for re-consideration under section 13 (1) of the Indian Arbitration Act.

From the correspondence already set out, it appears that on the 7th November 1919 the sellers alleged that they were unable to select five bales as directed by the arbitrators from the 1,275 bales in dispute, besause the sellers allowed them access to only 150 or 200 mixed bales. The buyers, on the other hand, intimated to the arbitrators that as the sellars had refused to selest the bales, they had exercised the option allowed to them and had selected all the ten bales. Consequently, there was at that stage, a substantial matter in controversy between the parties, namely, whether or not the conduct of the buyers made it impossible for the sellers to sarry out the instructions of the arbitrators. This question should have been decided in the presence of both the parties concerned, after the respective allegations of the sellers and the buyers had been intimated, each to the other. Now, it may be conceded, as stated by Lord Halsbury in Andrews v. Mitchell (1) that although we must not insist upon a too minute observance of the regularity of forms among persons who naturally, by their education or by their opportunities, eannot be supposed to be very familiar with legal procedure, there are some principles of justice which it is impossible to dieragard. Whether the arbitration is conducted on the footing that it is a mercantile or a legal arbitration, the first principles of justice, as Lord Langdale, M. R. put it in Harvey v. Shelton (2), must be equally applied in every ease. One of these elementary prineiples is that an arbitrator must not receive information from one side which is not disclosed to the other, whether the information is given orally or in the shape of documents, though the rule has sometimes been ignored by mercantile arbitrators, whose awards have on this ground been set aside: y .

Matson v. Trower (3), Brook, In re (4), Camillo Bitson and Jewson and Sons, In re (5).

The validity of the proseedings in this ease must, consequently, be tested in the light of the well-established doctrine that in arbitration proceedings both sides must be heard, and each in the presence of the other, however immaterial the arbitrator may deem a point, he should be very eareful not to examine a party or a witness upon it, exespt in the presence of the opponent. This rule was formulated by Lord Eldon in Walker v. Frobisher (6) where he set aside an award on the ground that the evidence had been improperly admitted, and observed that even though the arbitrator swore that the evidence reseived had had no effect on his award, no Court would permit him to decide so delieste a matter as whether a witness examined in the absence of one of the parties had an influence on him or not. same view was adopted by Lord Denman in Dobson v. Groves (7) and Plews and Middleton, In re (8). In Drew v. Drew (9) Lord Cranworth followed the rule, laying down that an arbit. rator missonssives his duty if he, in any the minutest respect, takes it upon himself to listen to evidence behind the back of a party who is interested in controverting it or is entitled to controvert it. Lord Eldon and Lord Cranworth thus concurred in the view that the principles of universal justice require that the person who is to be prejudiced by the evidence ought to be present to hear it taken, to suggest cross examination or himself to cross-examine, and to be able to find evidence, if he can, that shall meet and answer it. It is indeed indispensable to the impartial administration of justice between the parties that both should be present when proof is being led by either; the same rule applies to an inspection or an experimental test which are regarded as practical proof: Paterson and Son v. Corpora.

of Glasgow (10). It is both an unwise son and unsafe proceeding for an arbitrator to take proof in the absence of either or both parties. These rules have been adopted and applied in Cursetii Jehangir Khambatt 1 v. Crowder (11) and Ganes Narain Singh v. Malil: Ecer (12). In the present case, the arbitrators decided of their own motion, to adopt a certain method to obtain a fair sample of the disputed goods. It is conceivable that they might have adopted some other method equally convenient or efficacious: but this much is clear that they could not arbitrarily depart from the procedure they had invited the parties to follow. Now, one of the parties complained that they had been prevented by the other party from making the selection in the manner directed by the arbitrators. The arbitrators did not investigate the matter. Their conclusion that the buyers had rightly exercised the option to select all the ten bales was arrived at ex parte without intimation to the sellers that the buyers elaimed this right and without opportunity afforded to them to controvert the allegation of the buyers. This plainly affects the validity of the award, because, as pointed out by Lord Parmoor in Amir Begam v. Badr ud din Husain (13), if irregularities in procedure are proved which amount to no proper hearing of the matters dispute, that would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award, without any imputation on the honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator.

The question next arises whether the award should be remitted under section 13 (1), or should be set aside under section 14 the Indian Arbitration The Aot. appellants have urged that the award should be set aside and the matters in controversy investigated in Court. We are unable to accept this contention in the eironmetances of the present ease. ean be no doubt that the Court may remit the award where the arbitrator has been guilty of misconduct in a technical sense. that is, if the missonduct is of such a nature as does not disqualify him from acting or render it impossible for the Court to trust him. If the arbitrator is guilty of fraud or partiality or such like misconduct, as would justify his removal, the Court will not remit the award. But where the arbitrator has merely failed to exercise all his powers or has improperly exercised a discretion, such as, hearing witnesses or consulting documents in the absence of the parties, and this has happened in spite of a complete absence of dishonest motive, the Court will not hesitate to remit the award to the arbitrator instead of setting it aside. This is in accord with the course adopted in Anning v. Hartly (14) and Dasenport v. Vickery (15) and with the opinion expressed by Romilly, M. R., in Tidswell, In re (16). In this connection, it is important to bear in mind that Courts have been invested with statutory authority to remit an award, only in comparatively resent times, as is clear from section 8 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1:54; even the Arbitration Ast (Scotland) 1894, did not embody a corresponding provision; consequently, in many of the earlier decisions on the subject, orders were made for eancellation of the award under circum. stances in which, in more recent times, the award would have been probably only remitted to the arbitrators. To take one example, when an award was remitted by the Lord Ordinary (Lord MeLaren) in Regerson v. Regerson (17), the Court of Session (Lords Mure, Shand and Adam) set aside the order; see also Follick v. Heatley (18) and the decisions of the Honce of Lords in Adams v. G. N. Scotland By. Co (19), Holmes Oil Co. v. Fumpherston Oil Co. (20), Edinburgh Water Trust v. Olippen's Oil Co. (21). In the present case, the Court has authority either to set aside the award or to remit it to the arbitrators; the scle question is, which of these alternatives should be adopted. Although the procedure followed by the arbitrators was, as we have held, irregular, there is no suggestion that they asted as they did, from corrupt or improper motives. The appellants are, in view of the unfavourable result of the arbitration, naturally anxious to escape from the tribunal of their choice; but that is no reason why the Court should assist them to achieve that purpose. An arbitrator is the Judge chosen by the parties; he has a wide measure of discretion as to the manner is which the proceedings are to be conducted and a due knowledge of the whole case is to be brought to his mind. His award will not be set aside merely because the Court differs in opinion from him upon the merits of the dispute submitted for his decision; as Lord Halsbury said in Holmes Oil Co. v. Pumpherston Oil Co. (20) "the parties have agreed that his award shall not be subject to the ordinary mode of appeal and that it shall be final; that is, in nine cases out of ten, the very object which they mean to attain by submitting their differences to arbitration." This purpose should not be lightly defeated, merely because, in the course of the arbitration, the arbitrator had failed to comply with what Lord Watson called in Adams v. G. N. Scotland Ry. Co. (19) "any one of the express conditions contained in the contract of submission, or any one of those important conditions which the law implies in every submission." (See also Sharpe v. Bickerlys (22) . The position is manifestly otherwise when the proceedings indicate that the arbitrator has been guilty of corruption, bribery or falsehood; but the ease before us does not fall within that estegory.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed, the order made by Mr. Justice Bankin set aside and the award remitted to the arbitrators for re-consideration with reference to the point whether the samples were or were not properly drawn. The costs of this appeal will abide the result; this, however, does not affect the order for costs thrown away by the adjournment of the appeal on the 23rd June last.

Bombay Salt Act (II of 1890)—Sub-lease of salt pane -Breach of condition as to permission of Collector, effect of.

A breach of the condition of a license under the Bombay Salt Act as to a sub-lease of salt pans without the written permission of the Collector makes the sub-lease invalid.

Ismailji Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram, 8 Ind. Cas. 779; 38 B. 636; 11 Bom. L. R. 748, followed.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Thans, in Civil Suit No. 165 of 1917.

Mr. Coyajes, (with him Mr. W.B. Pradhan), for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.
JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J .- This case is covered by the decision in Ismailji Yusufali v. Raghu. nath Lachivam (1) in which the facts were similar to the facts in this case. The licenses Ynenfally, who held his lease to certain calt. pans on condition that he should not sub let without the written permission of the Collector, sub-let them to the respondents without getting such permission. Then, Yusufally having died, his son obtained a fresh lisense from Government. The respondent obtained a fresh sub-lease on the same terms as those contained in the sub lease obtained from Yusufally, but no permission had been obtained from the Collector. It was urged in second appeal that the appellant manufastured salt not only under the sub-lease but also under the power of attorney by the appellant. The Court held that there was no evidence in support of that.

Chandavarkar, Acting C. J., said at page

"The real object and necessary effect of the agreement between the appellant and the respondent was to enable the latter to manufacture salt without a license in the guise of a sub lesse, although that was forbidden by law and by the terms of the license."

Mr. Justice Heaton said :-

"The question, therefore, is whether the object of the agreement is forbidden by law within the meaning of section 25 of the Contract Act. It seems to me that it is, for the object was to enable the plaintiff to manufacture salt without a license, and the law says that no salt shall be manufactured otherwise than by the authority of a license granted by the Collector."

In this care it had also been urged in the Trial Court that the appellants were really servants of the licensee and agreed as such servants to work the salt-pans. But considering the terms of the agreement, it is perfectly obvious, although the term "service bond" is used in the sub-lease, that the appellants in consideration of a certain sum paid agreed to work the salt-pans for the manufacture of salt for a particular period and to do all that was required for the purposes of manufacture. There is nothing, therefore, in the nature of an agreement between master and servant which might save the appellants from having their suit dismissed. I think, therefore, that we are bound by the decision in Ismailie Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram (1) and that the appeal

SHAH, J.—I agree. I desire to add that, apart from the decision in Ismail; Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram (1), I should have found it difficult to hold that a breach of the condition of the license as to the sub letting, in so far as the permission of the Collector in writing was not obtained, would necessarily mean that the object of the provisions of the Salt Act was defeated thereby. However, there is a clear decision of this Court on the point and it is binding on us. On this ground the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Messrs. Gulsari Lal and Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. - This is a defendants'at peal arising out of a suit for a declaration of title as mortgagor by the plaintiffs. The defendants who are now recorded as Zemindare, sued to eject the plaintiff, Lalji Singh, from a certain holding under section 58 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff, Lalji Singh, pleaded in defer se that he was the real owner of the said holding, that the possession of the defendants was merely that of mortgagees on his behalf, and that they had, therefore, no right to bring a suit for his ejestment. On the 3rd of February 1916, the Revenue Court referred him to the Civil Court to have his title declared, and hares he brought the present suit. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendants were purchasers of mortgagee rights and that they had asknowledged the mortgage in the beginning of the Settlement of 1882. The defendants pleaded in reply that the suit was barred by six years' rule of limitation, that the mortgage was made by the plaintiff's predecessor-in title on the 27th of March 1819, to Gur Dayal, that Gur Dayal transferred his rights to one Ram Kumar Mahant by two deeds of the 19th of August 1868, and the 1st of September 1869, that the defendants' predecessor-in-title purchasNARAIN BAO KALIA U. ed these rights at austion on the 21st of November 1874, that in the meanwhile on the 20th of March 1854, the Maharaja of Benares had purchased the rights of some of the mortgagors, that on the 22nd of May 1885 the Maharaja of Benares had taken an agreement from the remaining mortgagore, that is, those whose rights were not purchased, enabling him to bring a suit to redeem the mortgage promising in exsharge some rights to the remaining mortgagors, that on the 10th of June 1885 the Maharaja of Benares brought a suit for redemption and to this suit the present plaintiff, Laiji Singh, was made a defendant, that in the written statement Lalji Singh and others said that they had relinquished all their rights in favour of the plaintiff. Maharaja of Benares, and had been unneces. earily impleaded, that this suit was dismissed by the First Court but the High Court remanded it and it was decreed after remand. that the Maharaja was given time to deposit the mortgage-money but be failed to deposit it in time, and bence the suit formally stood dismissed and the Maharaja's right of redemption disappeared, that on the 6th of March 18:6 the mortgagees applied for mutation of names and succeeded and the plaintiff's name was removed from the column of owners and entered in the column of tenante, that in the year 1909 the mortgagees sucd the plaintiff for enhance. ment of rent, that Lalji Singb, the present plaintiff, then set up a defence that be was not a tenant but a mortgagor, that this deferse was repelled and on the 29th of April 1910, rent was enhanced, that in the year 1913 Lalji Singb, plaintiff, aucd the contesting defendants for redemption a mortgage of Re. 100 which was different mortgage, but the suit was dismissed and the dismissal was ultimately confirmed by the High Court on the 14th of July 1915, and that now the plaintiff brought the precent suit which did not lie. On these pleadings the parties went to trial. The first Court came to the conclusion that this suit, which had been brought within three menths of the order of the Revenue Const passed under seelien 199 elaute (a) of the Tenancy Act, was within time. But it held that the plaintiff had failed to prove specifically the mortgage and, therefore, was not entitled to a deelaration. On these findings it dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff went up in appeal and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court same to the conclusion, that the vertification of the wajib-ul-are of 1882 by the mukhtari am of the defendants-mortgagess amounted to an asknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Ast, and that the suit was within time and in the result he gave the plaintiff declaration he wanted. The defend. ants come here in second appeal. The first plea taken by their learned Advoeate is that there was no subsisting mortgage for which the plaintiff could be The next contention granted a declaration. raised on behalf of the appellants was that the plaintiff had lost his equity of redemption by virtue of the agreement into which he entered with the Maharaja of Benares in 1885, and it was also contended in the alternative that as the plaintiff had already transferred his rights in the equity of redemption to the Maha. raja of Benares, even if a separate suit could lie for redemption, the suit of the Mabaraja of Benares having failed, Lalji Singh could not bring such a suit until he had got back by conveyance from the Maharaja of Benares the right which had been trasferred to him by the of 1885. On the last oseasion when the appeal same on for hearing before us we referred the following issue of fact to the Court below: "Whether Lalji Singh, present plaintiff-respondent, had at date of the suit any rights left in the equity of redemption." The learned Judge of the Court below found that there was no asknowledgment in the Settlement of 1812 as it was not shown Mukhtar.i.am of the mortgagees who verified the waith ul ars was duly authorized to asknowledge the liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. He also found that whatever right Lalji Singh had in the equity of redemption, it was not lost because of the transfer of 1885. We agree with the first finding that it eannot be assumed that a mukhtar-i am has power to acknow. ledge liability within the section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act but that such a liability can only be factoned upon the principal by a person MATAMOLLA MANILOTH PATIAN CHANDO D. ECITIVIL BAYING.

duly authorised in this behalf, that is, who has been given authority to make such an acknowledgment of liability. In this connection, see the Privy Counsil decision in Beti Maharani V. Collector of Etawah (1) and Gokul Singh v. Saheb Singh (2). In this case there is nothing to show that the muchtar i am who verified the wajib ul ars in 183; was authorised to admit the liability mortgagees to the mortgagors. On this finding of the lower Appellate this appeal must succeed. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher seale.

Malabar Law-Trust-Grant of lease by majority of Uralars without consulting remaining Uralars, validity of-Uralars not consulted personally interested, effect of.

Under Malabar Law, the grant of a lease or melcharth by the majority of the Uralars of a religious trust without consulting the remaining Uralars is invalid. And the fact that the latter are personally interested in the subject of the lease does not disentitle them from being consulted. [p 399, cols. 1 & 2.]

Attorney-General v. Shearman, (1839) 2 Beav. 104

48 E. E. 1119; 50 R. R. 118, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordi. nate Judge, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 9 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 12 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, North Malabar) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Payoli, in Original Suit No. 132 of 1915.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 12th and 14th April 1921, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT .- The lower Appellate Court's conclusion on one material point, the right of second defendant to the Uralarship, is vitiated by its assumption that his acceptance by the other Uralars before the suit was sufficient for all purposes, whereas the important question was whether the right persons were regarded as Uralars at the date of the granting of Exhibit B. Plaintiff in fact argues that Tali Chappan was the rightful Uralar at that time. But although this was pleaded and considered by the Distriet Munsif, the lower Appellate Court overlooked it.

We must, therefore, call for findings on the issues: -

(1) At the date of Exhibit B, was Tali Chappan or second defendant the 7th Uralar ?

(2) If Tali Chappan was, was he consulted

as to the grant of Exhibit B?

Findings on evidence on record are to be returned by August 15th. Seven days allowed for filing objections. The Endings will be returned by the District Judge.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of North Malabar submitted the following FINDINGS:-The following are the issues in respect of which findings have been called for by the High Court in this case, 118.

(1) At the date of Exhibit B was Tali Chappan or second defendant the 7th Uralar ?

(2) If Tali Chappan was, was he consulted

as to the grant of Exhibit B?

The case of the plaintiffs is that the 7th Uraima belorg; to the Madamulla Manikkoth Tarwad, which is split up into two Tavazhie, cie., Padikkal and Meethale and that the right is exercised by the seniormost male member in the two Tavazhis taken together, though he does not thereby lose

MATAMULLA MANIKOTH PATTAN CHANDU C. KETTIYIL RAYIRU, the right of management of the properties of his own particular Tavezbi. It is not alleged that the main Tarwad real existence at present or that there are any properties which appertain to the main Tarwad except this Uraima right. The two Tavazhis have no community of interest with each other and they are really two separate Tarwads. When the division took place is not known and there is no specific evidence to show whether the Uraims was also the subject of division or whether it was left intact to be exercised by the senior most male member of both Tavazhia as is contended by the plaintiffs. case for the second defendant is that the Uraima belongs to the Padikkal Tavezhi. There is no mention in the evidence of any 7th Uralan belonging to the other Tavazhi except Tali Chappan himself. All the previous 7th Uralans mentioned in the evidence have been members of the Padikkal Tavazhi, riz., Koyyotan Kannan, Byru and Obathu. No doubt Chathu was a junior member of the Tavazbi and it is not quite elear how he happened to exercise the rights of the 7th Uralan. It is, however, seen from the admissions of plaintiffs' witness No. 1 and from Exhibit IV that Chatha was actually managing the affairs of the Padikkal Tavazbi after the death of Ryru till; his death, though he was only a junior member and it may be that he acted as 7th Uralan by virtue of his de facto management of the Tavazhi affairs. This is far more probable than the allegation or rather supposition that he must have acted as such as an agent, or with the concent of Tali Chappan. Plaintiffs' witness No. 1 himself admits that Tali Obappan never acted as Uralan and that he does not know whether any Karnavan of the Tarwad who came from Meethale Tavezhi ever asted as Uralan. This Tali Chappan was undoubtedly the seniormost male member of both the Taysghis after the death of Ryru in 1077 M. E. and till his own death in 1090 M. E. If, as a matter of fact, the Uraima apportained to the seniormost male member of both the Tavashis, it is difficult to explain the fact that he never exercised such Uraima right. That he never exercised it is admitted; but it is attempted to be shown that the third defendant was exercising that right on his behalf or as an agent of his,

and for this purpose reliance is placed on Exhibit D. After careful consideration I have no doubt that the District Munsif's view on this point is correct, vis., that Exhibit D is a document got up for the purpose of defeating the elaims of the second defendant and that the resital in it, especially of a prior authority granted in 1083 M. E., is false. The matter has been fully discussed by the District Muneif in paregraphs 18 to 23 of his judgment and I am in full agreement with the reasoning therein. If, as a matter of fact, the third defendant was acting under the authority conveyed by Tali Chappan so early as 1908 it is impossible to explain his contentions as a defendant in the suit of 1909. vide Exhibit I, copy of his written statement. There he contended that the : 7th Uraima belonged to the Padikkal Tavazhi and he claimed the same as Karnavan of that Tava-There is no mention whatever made of Tali Chappan's right as Uralan or any authority granted by him. Exhibit VI also shows that the third defendant was not acting under any authority granted Tali Chappan or that the other Uralans did not recognise Tali Chappan as an Uralan. It was only after the third defendant found that his claim to be Karnavan of his Tavazhi could not be established that he had recourse to Tali Chappan and got Exhibit D from him with a false recital therein about a previous power of attorney. None of the documents prior to Exhibit D make any reference to the alleged powerof attorney of 10-3 M. E. and I have no doubt that there was no such powerof attorney in 1083 and that the third defendant was not acting till .913, at least as a munhtiarnama holder under Tali Chappan, but was elaiming Uraima his own individual right as Karnavan his Padikkal Tavazhi. It is quite that the third defendant was accepted the other Uralans as 7th Uralan, not an agent or representative of Tali Chappan but as the Karnavan of his Tavashi which he claimed to be. The District Munit's observation that plaintiffe' witness No. 1 and the third defendant have been conspiring together to defeat the claims of the second defendant by every means in their power is, in my opinion, quite justified by the evidence, and I have no doubt that the contention now put forward, vis, that Toli MATAMULLA MANIKOTH PATTAN CHANDU D. RUTTIYIL RAYIKU.

Chappan was 7th Uralan and that the third defendant acted as Uralan by virtue of an authority granted by Tali Chappan is a pure afterthought that was invented after the institution of the suit (evidenced by Exhibit V) by the second defendant in 1912, and that such was not their ease when the Melcharth, Exhibit B, was granted. Exhibits I and VII seem to me to be almost conclusive on this point. I agree with the District Munsif that the 7th Uraima belongs to the Padikkal Tavazhi because that view alone is consistent with the facts of the case and the probabilities. I find, therefore, that the second defendant was the 7th Uralan at the date of Exhibit B and not Tali Chappan.

the date of Exhibit B and not Tali Chappan. 3. As regards the second issue it may be dealt with in a few words. In the first place, in view of the finding on the first issue that Tali Chappan was not the Uralan at the time of Exhibit B, it would appear as if no finding is necessary on the second issue. As, however, a finding has been ealled for on this issue as well, I have to deal with it. The only evidence adduced for the purpose of showing that Tali Chappan was consulted at the time of Exhibit B is that of plaintiffs' witness No. 1 himself. Plaintiffs' witness No. 1 is not a satisfactory witness as ean be seen from a perusal of his deposition. The District Munsif was of opinion that he has perjured nimself by swearing that Chappan was consulted and I see no reason to disagree with the Court which heard him. When questioned about the registered notice sent to him by the second defendant and the reply thereto he at first pretended that he did not remember whether second defendant-had sent any notice elaiming to be Uralan or whether any reply was sent to it and it was only after Exhibit VI was shown to him that he admitted that it was the reply sent by him to the second defendant's notice. This shows how ready plaintiffs' witness No. 1 is to make false statements when there are no documents to contradict him. has been observed already, he has been treating the third defendant as the Uralan throughout, at any rate. till the date of Exhibit D, as if he was the Uralan in his own right and not as an agent or representative of Tali Chappan. Exhibit VI clearly shows that he was not prepared to disregard the third defendant's.

elaim to the Uraims and it is most unlikely that, in these circumstances, he would have consulted Tali Chappan about the granting of the Melsbarth. There is no doubt that Tali Chappan was not even set up as an Uralan till after the institution of Original Suit No. 347 of 1912 by the second defendant. It may also be mentioned that there is no allegation in the plaint that Tali Chappan was consulted about the Melsharth. In these circumstances, I have no hesitation in soming to the conclusion that Tali Chappan was not consulted as to the grant of Exhibit B and I accordingly,

This second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. R. Govinda Marar, for the Appellant. Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding. In the light of it, the facts we have to deal with are that the second plaintiff has obtained a Melcharth from five out of the seven Uralars, of the two remaining Uralars one having been and the other, the second defendant, not having been consulted. The second defendant, as now appears, is the 7th Uralar. The only question remaining is whether the Melcharth is invalidated by the failure to consult him.

The general rule that Uralars are entitled to be consulted before any act is done in the management of the trust property is well-established. It is, however, argued that this general rule is subject to an exception, when the omission to consult the Uralar is attributable to his possession of an interest which would disqualify him from giving an independent opinion.

In the present case the evidence is stated by the lower Appellate Court as being that plaintiffe' witness No. I asked the second defendant to take a renewal of his lease and the second defendant said he would not as he could not pay the arrears of rent already due. It was after this that the suit Melcharth was given to the second plaintiff to enable him to oust the second defendant from possession of the property.

Now, it is quite clear that the whole of the difficulty in this case has arisen from the fact that the second defendant had obtained a benefit from his trust. But with that we are not concerned directly. we have to settle is whether his having done so justifies us in holding that, so far as he was concerned, the rule requiring batween the Uralars was consultation abrogated. The authority on this point, as already stated, lays down that rule in highly general terms. Thus, it was said "that the very in Kunban v. Moorthi (1) recognising validity the principle of of the asts of the majority of the trustees public trust" and that principle is not disputed-"involves the of the majority being assertained Bll the discussion among members:" and Wilkinson v. Malin (2) Mr. Menon sense. ib in the same plaintiffs hahalf οŧ the on relied on the Attorney-General v. Shearman (3). But that case was distinguished in Kunban v. Moorthi (1) and wemay add that in it there was no question of failure to consult the trustee, who had not joined in the lease under consideration, since that lease had been sent to him for signature before any action had been taken to give effect to it and he could then have put forward his objections. The decision is authority only for this, that a majority of trustees of a public trust can act in the business of the trust. There is, then, in our opinion, no reason for treating eases similar to those before us as exceptions to the principle thus established. For it cannot be assumed that a trustee in the position of second defendant would necessarily take advantage of an opportunity to join in the discussion of the matter, in which he was interested, at all or that, if he did so, he would be incapable of giving a disinterested opinion for the advantage of the trust; and, again, we cannot assume that the other trustees would necessarily consider themselves bound to act on his opinion or would be unable to apply their minds to the question whether it was invalidated by his interest.

In these circumstances, we must hold that the second defendant was, notwithstanding his interest n the suit property, entitled to be consulted, and that the Melcharth given to the second plaintiff without such consultation does not bind the trust and cannot be enforced. The result is, that the appeal is allowed and the District Munsif's decision is restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Custom-Ancestral property-Village abandoned and re-founded-Succession-Self-acquired property-Daughters-Collaterals-Rurden of proof-Near male dollaterals-Riwaj-i-am, entry in, value of.

The inhabitants of a village left the village abadi and the village land became deserted and passed out of cultivation. Later on, some of the proprietors or their descendants returned, re-founded the village and brought the land again under cultivations

Held, that those persons who returned to the village re-acquired the land and it became their self-acquired property and could no longer be regarded as their ancestral property. [p. 401, col. 1.]

The expression "near male collaterals" means collaterals not more remote than the 5th or the 6th

degree. [p. 401, col. 2.]

There is a general custom in the Punjab that daughters are usually preferred to collaterals so distantly related as the 6th degree even in regard to ancestral property, while in the case of selfacquired property daughters usually exclude even nearer collaterals. It is quite opposed to all the principles of customary law that collaterals so distantly related as the 9th degree should exclude daughters in the case of property which is nonancestral, and a mere entry in the riwaj-i-am, unsupported by instances, that daughters can under no circumstances inherit their father's property, is of very little weight, and it is quite insufficient to shift the onus on to the daughters. First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th November 1917.

Dr. Gotal Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

Pandit Sheo Narain, B. B, and Lala Badri Das, B. B., for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

JUDGMENT .- The parties to the suit, out of which the present appeal arises, are Gour Brahmans of Mauza Chhapri in the Thanesar Tabeil of the Karnal District. The village is divided into four Thullas. ealled Khushi Ram, Ram Karan, Kasumbri and Majlas. Musammat Nanhi, defendant. widow of Molu was in possession of 10 biswas of the village land, 5 biswas as the widow of Mola and 5 biswas which she inherited from Musammat Sardhi, widow of Kanbya of Thulla Ram Karan. She gifted five-sixths of the whole land to her two daughters and one-sixth to Atma Bam, daughter's son of Anant Ram of Thulla Ram Karan, and the brother in-law of At the time of the Musammat Sardhi. suit Atma Bam had died and the land gifted to him was in possession of his father Chhaju. The plaintiffs, who belong to the other two Thullas of the village, brought the present suit for a declaration that these gifts should not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the donor. The lower Court held that 5 biswas out of the land in suit was ancestral qua the plaintiffs and the other 5 bisuas was non-ancestral. The plaintiffs are related to Musammat Naphi's deseased husband in the 9th degree and the lower Court held that they had not proved that they were heirs in the presence of the daughters of the donor. One of these daughters has also got a daughter and the Court held that their suit was speculative and dismissed it. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court,

The first point which we propose to diseass is, whether the land in suit or any part of it is ansestral qua the plaintiffs ?. The history of the village appears from a translation of an extrast from the pedigree-table of the proprietors prepared in 1384.85 (printed at page 38 of the paper-book) and from the judgment of Munshi Tulsi Ram, Settlement Superintend. ent, dated 24th December 1853, (printed at pages 67.69 of the paper book). From these documents it appears that the village, was founded some 300 years ago by Baja, Ram, who was stated in 1884 to be the ancestor of the then proprietors. His deseendants remained in possessien until some 50 years before 1853. At that time they abandoned the village and the inhabitante settled in various other places. After a period of some 25 years the village was re-inhabited by the people belonging to the Thullas of Khushi Bam and Ram Karan. At the time of the 1853 Settlement the representatives of these two Thullas were said to be in possession of 15 biswas while 5 biswas were in possession of the members of Thulla Majlas. Kasumbri same back to the village more than 20 years after it was re-founded and was given 5 bismes by the members of the Khushi Ram and Ram Karan Thullas. In 1853, he said he was entitled to half the village and his elaim was enquired into and disposed of by Munshi Tulsi Ram, Settlement Superintendent. At page 59 of the paper-book the latter in his judgment says :- "It is. proved that the plaintiff has been out of possession for a long time. Had the plaintiff not some into possession of the above 5 biswas estate, he would not have been entitled to it, even assording to the instructions of the Sadar." His claim was, therefore, dismissed obviously on the ground that the then defendants had re founded the village and had been in possession of the land in dispute for a long period.

Now, even if we are to suppose that the whole of the land in suit was originally in the possession of the common ancestor of the parties, and if it be assumed that all the land was ancestral land when the village was deserted about the year A. D. 1800, we fail to see how any of the land can be considered to be ancestral after the village was re-founded some 25 years later. The inhabitants had left the village abadi and the village land became deserted and passed out of sultivation. Some of the original proprietors, or their deseendants, returned 25 years later, founded the village and brought the land again under cultivation. In our opinion, it must be held that those persons who returned re-acquired the land, and that it became their self-acquired property and could no longer be considered to be aneestral property of the representatives of Kasumbri and others who returned later. We are unable to understand the learned Sabordinate Judge's reason for holding that half of the land was appeatral. our opinion, none of it is ancestral the plaintiff, and we hold accordingly. The second point is, whether the plaintiffs, who are related to Musammat Naphi's husband in the 9th degree, are heirs to the land in preference to daughters. The lower Court laid the onus upon the plaintiffs and the decision of the case really depends upon the question of onus, because it is admitted that there is practically no evidence as to which has the better right. The appellants relied very strongly upon an entry in the riwai-i-am prepared in the 1834 Settlement, questions Nos. 65, 67 and 68. The translation of these entries will ba found printed at pages 64 and 65 of the paper-book. Question 65 is, "can daughter inherit in any case?" and the answer is, that a daughter or her descendants cannot acquire property by virtue of inheritance or in any other way. The translation given in the paper book is not quite correct. The answer really was, that a daughter or her descendants cannot get the inheritance, i.e., her father's property by inheritance or in any other way. The answer to question No. 68 is that a gift or Will can never be made in favour of daughter, her husband, or her dessendants. These answers are not supported by any instances. In Article 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, it is stated that a daughter only susseeds to the ancestral landed property of her father, if an agriculturist, in default (1) of the heirs mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, and (2) of nearer male sollaterals of her father, and there is ample authority in the decisions of the Ohief Court for the proposition that near male collaterals means collaterals not more remote than the 5th or 6th degree. It is also stated in Rattigan's Digest that in regard to the acquired property of her father a daughter is preferred to collaterals. In Abdul Karim v. Sahib Jan (1) it was held that the plaintiff upon whom the onus lay had failed to prove that by custom among Chohan Rajputs of village Kharwan, Tabsil Jagadhri in the Ambala District, sollaterals of the 7th degree were entitled to succeed in preference to married daughter of the deseased sonless proprietor, and it was stated that there was no general presumption that agnates, however remote, exclude daughters from succession even to ancestral property. The question of the onus in such a case was very fully considered in Bholi v. Man Singh (2). was held that the burden of proof as to whether remote collaterals, such as of the 6th degree, exclude daughters, rests on the party who alleges it. Now, if this is the law as regards the onus where ansestral property is concerned, a fortiori it lies : much more heavily upon the collaterals in the ease of non-ansestral Counsel for the appellant, however, says that the entry in the riwager am, unsupport. ed by instances, is sufficient in the present: ease to shift the onus, and in support of his contention he relies upon the case of Beg v. Allah Ditta (3). Their Lordships held there that the entry. in which riwaj-i-am WAS not supported by instances in favour of the succession of a daughter's son, whose father was a khanadamad in preference to collaterals was a strong piece of evidence in support of such custom which it lay upon the plaintiffs' collaterals to rebut. This ruling . of the Privy Council has been considered . subsequent decision in 8 Ohief Court in Wasira v. Maryan (4), BANDAU BAM U. CHINTAMAN BINGH.

It was held, following Chhuttan v. Hazari Lal (5), that statements in the riway i am when opposed to general sustom can earry very little weight unless supported by instances" and that consequently the entries in the viway-i-am of the Gujranwala District in favour of the special custom relied on by the plaintiff collaterale, unsupported by instances, were insufficient to establish that enstom, such riwai.i.am having, moreover, been imperfeetly compiled. In Khuda Baksh v. Fatteh Khatun (6) it was held that answer No. 13 of the riway-i-am of the Multan District (unsupported by instances) being a very peculiar one, quite opposed to sustomary law, was not sufficient to shift the caus on to the plaintiffs to prove that they were not excluded by a sister. Now, we have the general sustom that daughters are usually preferred to collaterals so distantly related as the 6th degree even in regard to ancestral property; while in the case of self acquired property daughters usually exclude even nearer collaterals. It is quite opposed to all the principles of enstomary law that collaterals so distantly related as the 9th degree should exclude daughters in the case of property which is non-ancestral, and, therefore, we are of opinion that the mere entry in the riwaj-i-am, unsupported by instances, that daughters can under no circumstances inherit their father's property. is of very little weight, and it is quite insufficient to shift the orus on to the daughters. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the onus was upon the plaintiffs and that they have failed to discharge it, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

There are cross objections by the respondents as to the order of the lower Court directing that the parties should bear their own costs. It is contended that the plaintiffs having failed in their suit, the usual rule should be followed and that costs should be allowed to the successful party. The Court below has given no reasons of any sort for directing that the parties should bear their own costs, but has held that the plaintiffs' suit was a speculative one. The defendants have certainly been put to considerable expense in defending the suit, and we do not think that the mere entry in the riwa; i am in favour of the plaintiffe' case is a sufficient reason for holding that their suit was so far justified that the defendants should not be allowed their costs. We accept the cross-objections and direct that the plaintiffs should pay the defendants' costs of the lower Court also, and they will also pay any costs incurred in these cross-objections, Hindu Law-Joint family-Bond in favour of managing member-Joint property-Burden of proof-Presumption.

Where a bond is executed in favour of the managing member of a joint Hindu family, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the bond is joint property of the family. It is for those who assert the contrary to make good their case. Mere proof that some of the members of the family had some private transactions, would not prove that the bond was the private property of the member in whose favour it was executed.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. O., and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This appeal has been fully argued on behalf of the appellants, and all the material facts have been brought to their Lordships' notice, but in the result their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion reached by the High Court at Patna.

BANDHU RAM U. CHINTAMAN SINGH.

The question raised is one of fast, and it is unnesessary to state the circumstances at length. It is sufficient to say that the title to the land in dispute must, in their Lordships' opinion, depend on the title to the bond given by Pyare Mander to Rajdbari on the 17th August 1891. If that bond was the separate property of Rajdbari, then the land which he parabased in the suit brought by him to enforce the bond was also his separate property, and he could give a good title to the appellants. But if he held the bond on behalf of himself and his two brothers, Chintaman and Gobardhan, then he sould, in the circumstances of this ease, have no better title to the land, and the first respondent is entitled to retain the decree granted by the High Court.

Now, it is plain that at the date of the bond, Rajdbari and his brothers were members with their three cousins (sons of their uneles) of a Mitakebara joint family, and that when, in the year 1832, the cousing separated from the family and disslaimed all interest in the bond, Rajdhari and his two brothers continued joint. Rajdhari was the managing member throughout, and the presumption is that the bond held in his name was joint property; and it is for those who (like the appellants) assert the contrary to make good their

It is said on behalf of the appellants that the members of the family had some separate business transactions, and this appears both from a statement in the terms of compromise, dated the 28th July 1892, and from other evidence. But proof that some of the members had some private transactions by no means proves that the particular bond in question was the private property of Bajdhari; and there are several eireumstances which tend to show that this was not the ease. Thus, in the first partition suit in 1892, the plaintiff elaimed as joint property a bond of Pgare Mander for 945 rupees, which must be assumed, in the absence of no evidence to the contrary, to be the bond in question; and by the terms of compromise on that suit it was admitted that all the debts (which would include that bond) belonged to the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, that is, Rajdbari and his two brothers. If the bond had been the separate property of Rajdbari, this would almost certainly have stated.

Again, in the second partition suit of 1902, the plaintiff Chintaman elaimed as joint property a sum due to Rajdhari under a bond from Pyare Mander, and the award in that suit, dated the 30th March 1901. found that the three brothers were members of a joint family, and that all the moveable and immoveable properties were joint between them. It is not clearly shown that the bond here mentioned was the bond in question ; but it appears unlikely that, if Rajdhari held a separate bond from Pyare Mander, it would not have been referred to and excepted from the award.

Farther, in the subsequent proceedings in the same suit Rajdhari admitted that Ohintaman was entitled to be eredited with 1.000 rapses, being one-third of the purchase. money for the property comprised in the bond, an admission which could only have been made if the bond was joint property " and while it is true that this was after the sale to the appellants, it eannot be assumed without proof that Rajdhari was a party
